From the remarks made in the New York Herald, by its "special correspondent from Utah," it would seem that one of our cock-a-madandy birds has been rather severely struck by President Young; one would judge from his lamentable chirp, his perturbed fluttering, and disordered feathers, that he must be seriously wounded—poor fellow! we cannot but sympathise with him; his three * * * must be very much in the descendant, and for such hopeful youths who have bid adieu to mamma, braved the dangers of the red man, perilled their lives in the desert, and penetrated into the mountain fastnesses; and who have had the bravery to associate with the Mormons; for such prowess and daring to be disregarded; for such rara avis to be struck in the wing, and their beautiful plumage disordered, is too bad. This Governor Young is a dreadful fellow, and, would you believe it, Missy, so vulgar; he says he is "determined to root out corrupt men, and corrupt practices," and actually he calls some of us "refined gentlemen" "damnably corrupt;" and what we have delicately and politely termed a faux-pas, a petit méchanceté; or a passe d'amour he vulgarly calls whoredom and adultery; really, Miss Cleopatra, Augustiana, Angelina, it is very shocking. Now if we only had "some of our fast young ladies there," wouldn't they teach Brigham Young, his five hundred wives, and the Mormon women generally, another thing? Why, our Broadway belles would raise a mutiny, they would, under such treatment; and is it any wonder that we feel bad? Now their women "cannot look a fashionable Gentile in the face;" and we, who, according to all rules of etiquette, are admitted into all fashionable, polite society—we, fashionable libertines, pardonnez moi (gentlemen), would like to look them in the face, and treat them after Gentile fashion; but Brigham Young peremptorily declares he won't let us. No wonder then that on the announcement of the Governor's pronunciamento "the excitement was tremendous." That one very amiable "fast" gentleman should "swallow frantically a tumbler full of raw brandy, to quiet his nerves," and that "an officer of the army was seen, on guard mounting, to draw his sword from its sheath, in a very ferocious manner." They knew what it meant; wonder if they would like the first letters of their name to be told. They were afraid of the pronunciamento. They dreaded, poor fellows! lest there should be an exposé, and trembled, no doubt, lest Brigham should be so impolite as to tell of some of their deeds of darkness; their attempts at polite fashionable life. To have our deeds exposed is bad enough anyhow; but to have it done by a Mormon, whom we have represented as lascivious, is too bad; we don't like it; and what then? If in New York, a few roués could silence a policeman; if not, a few dollars would; if that failed, friends would interfere, to prevent our exposure; but this Brigham Young is obdurate and hard-hearted; he will vulgarly call things by their proper names; however, one thing we can do—we can get together, and give a chapter on Mormonism, including spiritual wives and Mormon corruptions, that will go down anywhere; we must put a little tweedle-dee and tweedle-dum into it, and it will help us out. We won't give the account which Bullock read; of course "that is passable enough," because written; but we will give that which is not written; unfortunately, however, for "our special correspondent," he is behind the times here; the gentlemen of the New York Herald have already, May 5th,* published the correct account as reported by G. D. Watt, and his garbled speciality comes with a very poor grace afterwards. Poor gentleman! he is doomed to be unfortunate.

Now, Mr. Nimby Pimby, before taking leave of you, let us give you a piece of advice. If you wish to live peaceably among the Mormons, study that little short document, the Mormon Creed, "MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS." Your attempted jocularity comes with but an ill grace, your chagrin is plainly visible; your naked skeleton is seen through the flimsy covering, and your cry of "sour grapes" after your painful repulses won't go down.

"The Mormons in Their Glory."

The last "Sunday Times" comes out about the Mormons, with the above heading, in the most startling manner. It is certainly astonishing to observe the alarm existing among a certain class of the community, of which we may presume the intelligent writer of the Times is a member, in relation to the Mormons, and the anxiety exhibited to cite the inhabitants of that far-off Territory before the people, as a subject for so much dread to a government that boasts itself as standing at the head of nations, in its prowess, intelligence and advance in civilization. What can cause such agitation and fearful forebodings among these gentlemen? Can it be possible that the few deluded, ignorant and depraved inhabitants of distant Utah can endanger the peace and good morals of this vast Republic, with "our pretensions to greatness as an enlightened people?" "Is there some hidden cause, some mystery unexplained?" What fascination, what dreaded horror fills your soul? Come, tell us, Mr. Times, what it is you fear. Are you afraid, if we "let them alone, they will take away our place and nation," because "there is something rotten in Denmark?" Why do you not let them "severely alone," with your accustomed sagacity, instead of placing Mormonism before your readers, in contrast with your liberality, veracity, consistency and egotism? "A nation within our nation, wholly unlike us in habits, laws and customs." Pray, Mr. Times, who is us—the North or the South, Whig or Democrat, Know Nothing or Know Something, Kansas or Massachusetts, Anti or Pro-Slavery? Or do you, Mr. Times, embody them all in your august personage? Or perhaps you mean us in New York; if so, what habits do you refer to? Is it that you, with the immortal Brocchus, "think it is very hard" that there are not the same accommodations in Salt Lake that you have in New York? "Wholly unlike us in habits, laws and customs!" You are dissatisfied with their laws too. If they, too, are so unlike us, so unconstitutional, why does the General Government approve, and send Judges to administer, and make appropriations to sustain them? Certainly, Mr. Times, as a saviour to your country, you ought to see to this. And then again "their customs;" but here we are indeed at loss to understand your meaning. Is it that the people of Utah are not sharp enough in trade? Is it that their police reports are not sufficiently full? Or is it that, like Kansas and Missouri, they do not join in the hue and cry of Nullification? But again, he modestly continues, that the Mormons, "while professing to yield to US a due submission, are seeking every opportunity to assert their sovereign independence." (As though they were white folks!) Surely, Falstaff himself could not have stood forth with more complacency! Mr. Times, your benign countenance should radiate over the darkness of Utah as Governor, and we suggest you to Mr. Pierce for the next vacancy; how they would bow their submissive heads to your imperial dictum! Space will not admit of taking up all the profound arguments and eloquent diction of our learned writer, but we will simply refer to one more of those liberal and enlightened remarks upon the Mormons: "As law-defying and gospel-ridiculing fanatics." This must have nearly finished his vocabulary, and displays a want of information relative to that people, or deliberate, wilful falsehood, which, in addition to his pathetic appeal to American women, looks much like a last resort to sustain a sinking cause, and for a lion among the beasts of the forest, sounds vastly like braying, besides an evident inclination to kick, which is not usual with that genus. "How are the mighty fallen!"

What do you Mormons believe in?

We believe in striving after the greatest possible good to man.

But this is an expression common to all; do you apply this in a religious point of view, relating exclusively to mankind in the future, or in another state of existence?

No. We believe that which relates to our future, must begin to day, for results of acts to day, extend themselves into all eternity, whether you term those acts religious, social, or political, all that are connected with the present, inevitably effect the future.

Then your life must be your religion. Do you believe in communism or common stock?

No. Not as you view it. We believe if a man have five talents and gain other five, he is worthy of the talents he gains, but we believe in that communism that holds but one Lord, one Faith, one Baptizm, one hope of our calling, we believe in a perfect union of interest, so much sought after by communists, and failed to be sought after in the right place, that is in the "Gospel" and implicit obedience to its requirements as taught by Jesus Christ and his Apostles, and in which rules are laid down for the government and also the authority and kind of officers to regulate and control the same, this includes all that is good and correct in all the various systems. And all the advantages hoped for in communism, with none of the disadvantages that have caused their failure.

But have not the world possessed the Bible for ages past, and all have differed in its meaning, how than do you Mormons pretend to a knowledge which the world do not possess?

It is true, did we believe as the world believe, and depend alone upon our intellect and education, we should be at loss to answer, but we believe that God can reveal his will to man at this time as well as in former ages, and we have reason to know that he does, if we had not this assurance, we could not pretend to apply so extended a plan for the redemption of man as is embraced in the Gospel, for it is the plan of God, nor can any plan for the highest good of man, not only for this life, but the life to come, be carried out successfully without revelation, therefore the failure of all that attempt it without.

What evidence have you that what you say is true?

The purity and order of the ordinances of the Gospel, the system and order of the holy priesthood, the extraordinary light thrown upon the ancient prophecies, and evident fulfillment in the present day, and the purposes of God made manifest and rapidly transpiring, and thus confirming the word, the gathering of Israel, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, but above all, the Holy Ghost which was promised to all, who honestly obeyed the ordinances of the Gospel, "that leadeth and guideth into all truth," "and shall take of the things of the Father and show them unto you." This we testify is given to man through obedience to the Gospel, and it is by the operation of the Holy Ghost within us, that we are enabled to know the will of God upon the earth, and that He has again spoken to man, and again directed the organization of His Church upon the earth with Apostles, Prophets, Teachers, Miracles, &c., and in no other way is man safe from being "tossed about by every wind of doctrine."

If this be true, then why is it that so much evil is spoken against the Mormons?

The same reason that so much evil was always spoken against the Prophets and Apostles of the Lord, and if you can explain the reason of that, you will know why so much is spoken against the Mormons.

Arrival of the "Juventa."

The ship Juventa arrived at Philadelphia last Sunday morning, the 5th; she had on board 572 Saints when she left Liverpool, under the presidency of Elder Glover, March 31. They had a remarkably good passage, some few additions, but no deaths. The party were all in excellent spirits; those going forward, about four hundred, left Philadelphia on the Tuesday morning train; the others, through the indefatigable exertions of Elders Clinton, Woolley, and others, were generally provided for the same day; most of them were situated before we left. This is as it should be; we need union, and by our united endeavors we can help and bless one another.

We regret that we forgot the name of the very gentlemanly captain who commands the "Juventa;" he is spoken of by the passengers in the highest possible terms, and from his expressions to us, he seems to have a good opinion of his passengers. Elder Glover, however, is preparing a testimonial in which we hope any omission at the present on our part will be amply made up.

We have just received, per Asia, a list of passengers, shipped on board the "William Stetson," April 26, by F. D. Richards, Liverpool. We shall publish the names next week. We call upon all our brethren in this vicinity to assist us in making arrangements for their coming brethren, by providing places, &c., as most of them will stay here this season.

In another column will be found a list of passengers on board the ship "S. Curling," Capt. S. Curling, bound for this port.

Abolitionism vs. Slavery.

The two great phalanxes of our lody-politic seem rousing themselves to action for the coming Presidential campaign, and each appear determined to make it final; what the result will be, seems to be a matter of secondary consideration, the expressions made in this city at the convention held by the abolitionists, were pointed and severe, carrying a tone of defiance to be regretted at this crises, when now if ever, the voice of man commanding influence in the North should be heard in accents to sooth rather than to irritate, the already excited multitude; the propositions made by Senator Wilson, of Mass., to repeal the Fugitive Slave Law, to organize the North against the admission of Kansas into the Union as a Slave State, and to carry this issue into the approaching Presidential election, and the repeal of the act of 1807, under which the slave trade between the States is carried on, and to abolish all laws making any distinction among individuals on account of color, all of which are directed against the very vitals of Southern institutions, and the only bulwarks that surround them. The remarks of the Hon. Charles Sumner, last evening were much of the same character and denote a determination to make a final issue of the all-absorbing question that has so long agitated the Northen and Southern States. The clouds are gathering blackness, and we may expect an equinox of storm for the future.

Yesterday morning (9th) Mr. Johnson P. Lee, auctioneer of this city was killed on the Hudson river railroad, near Eighty-sixth street, while attempting to jump aboard the cars.

Five men were instantly killed on the evening of the 8th inst., by the explosion of a powder mill near Rochester.

What is Truth?

The variety of views held upon the question of what is truth, is as extended and multiplied, as are the variations of temperament, and classification of mind throughout the Human Family. Yet those truths that the mind is susceptable of clearly demonstrating to itself, admit of no variation, and are so many stubborn facts. It is none the less so, however, with truths that cannot be demonstrated, nor has the opinions of mankind in relation to any truth previous to its demonstration, ever lessened, or changed the value of that truth when made manifest, and though there may be a thousand speculations upon a problem, yet there is but one true, legitimate solution, and there may be questions upon which simply an approximation to truth will answer our purpose for the moment, so that we are satisfied without further analization to let it rest. But when truth is viewed in its connection with the works of creation, the system and organization of the world, the movement of the spheres in its more than mathematical precision and accuracy, and turn to our own organization and realize the delicacy of its construction, we cannot but see the importance of truthfulness, and more especially as we continue our investigation into the operations of the mind upon the system and its effect upon the objects that surround it, we are obliged to conclude, first, that there is a right way for everything, and secondly, that any advancement, or approach of mankind, to that perfection visible in the works of creation, much depends upon the mind imbibing the truth in its purity. But there are comparitively few who carry their investigation beyond the surface, and probably there is not one in a thousand who will embrace the truth when it is clearly manifest to them, nor one in ten thousand that will faithfully adhere to it, after embracing it, when brought in contact with interest or opposition. And many will relinquish their hold upon the very first occasion of the exercise of that principle of firmness so necessary to the support of justice, mercy and truth, among mankind. There are many honest minded people who are not aware of this, but have been willingly or negligently ignorant of the insiduous and rapid prevalence of corruption throughout every institution that surrounds him. It is true that while they deplore the disorder, injustice, misery, and death, attending results of general principles, they are, if not individually effected by these results, ready to say these old institutions are well enough, as they are, let them alone. A disposition so indolent, and willing to admit of injustice to others if they only remain secure themselves, are not such as to embrace the truth for the love of it, nor have they sufficient acumen to sustain, or retain it unadulterated if received at all. It truly requires faith, hope and charity, clearly defined and actively operating in the mind of those who dare stand forth in the support of truth. Whenever the truth has been presented to the world, it has been met with a strong spirit of opposition, and has either been driven entirely from the field, or a compromise entered into, which has ever been more fatal to its existence, than open opposition; for by such adulteration have mankind been deceived, from the first, and upon the existence of certain truths, mixed with error, have thousands rested their apology for remaining in the wrong, and thus has error ever triumphed leaving the world subject at any time to be thrown into a vortex of inextricable misery, bloodshed, war and ruin.

Thus has it ever been with a large majority of mankind, that when truth, even in any of its departments, is presented, there are classes who will at once strenuously oppose it, from pecuniary, local, traditionary, egotistical or ambitious motives, as in the case of Copurnicus in introducing a fundamental change in the science of Astronomy. A subject in which it might be supposed there could be no inducement for opposition. Or as in the case of "Hervy" upon the circulation of the blood, in which all were vitally interested, and in which, an investigation could in nowise do harm to any one, yet these principles when presented, elicited the most vindictive opposition; the same might be said of the "Jacquard loom," the introduction of steam, and thousands upon thousands of instances might be related, in which the blind opposition of the masses, led on by the more subtle and intelligent in the suppression of that which is conducive to the advancement of man in the scale of being. It applies to Philosophy, Science, and Religion, and penetrates all the ramifications of society, throughout the old and the new world, among heathern nations, and through all Christendom. And is as ready to break forth with the same ungovernable fury, at any innovation upon old usages, noxious unwholesome customs, or bewildering traditions, to-day, as it was two thousand years ago.

This disposition among men, in opposing truth, has been developed, with perhaps greater virulence against religious inovation, than any other, as exemplified in the case of Enoch, Noah, Moses, the Prophets, Jesus and the Apostles. The agitation and tumult in the depths of the human breast displayed in religious reformation, is ascribable to the fact, that the aim of true religion is directed to the very roots of society, and embraces all that relates to the existence of man. It is not to be wondered at then, when truths relating only to departments of the great whole meet with opposers, that upon the application of principles relating to the origin, existence and future destiny of man, should stir up the very depths of the soul with all its turbid waters and stagnant pools, to resist, or receive the good seed thus broad cast over the world. And a system embracing all the interests of man, as in the mission of Noah, Jesus, or Joseph Smith, will assuredly convulse and shake to the very centre all the false systems of men, for in it is included all TRUTH.

The experiment has been tried successfully of engrafting the current upon the maple tree.

Kansas.

The excitement continues to rage in Kansas, and the fury of the strife is greatly increased by the murder of a leader of the Pro-Slavery party, Mr. Malcomb Clark, by a Mr. McRea, at a public meeting at Leavenworth. The difficulty commenced in a dispute that arose as to which party had the majority, and McRea gave Clark the lie, when Clark struck McRea with a club, stunning him; but as soon as he came to himself, he drew a revolver and shot his assailant dead. This done, he attempted to escape, but was overtaken, and is now in the custody of the United States officers at the fort. A petition was got up and signed by three or four hundred of the mob, requesting the officers in command at the fort to give him up, and promising to give him the benefit of an impartial trial by jury, but the petition was not acceded to.

This, we presume, is but the beginning of the end, and betokens a long and not bloodless strife. However much we deplore such a state of affairs, we cannot conceal from ourselves the fact, that the smothered fires, thus far restrained by compromise and conciliatory efforts of the friends of the Union, are fearfully bursting forth upon every side, and we regret to see men holding influence, whose pride and boast it should be to claim a citizenship in this glorious Union, lending themselves with all their influence to hasten affairs by which we may expect such calamitous results to the country.

We copy the following to show the state of excitement now existing in Kansas:

VIOLENCE IN KANSAS.

From the St. Louis Republican (Atchison paper).

We regret to learn that bloody deeds begin to attest the hostile feeling existing in Kansas in relation to squatter sovereignty. By a steamer just arrived from Fort Leavenworth, we have received a copy of a handbill, dated the 1st inst., in which the murder of Malcomb Clark is announced, and a call made to the citizens to meet and take action in relation to the matter. The deceased is represented as having borne the character of a most worthy and estimable citizen. Of the standing of McRea, the homicide, no mention is made, nor are we acquainted at all with his history. The difficulty occurred on the 30th ult., and the meeting of the citizens was to have taken place on the 3d inst.

Great excitement prevailed at Fort Leavenworth when the steamer left. McRea was in confinement, awaiting the decision of the people. From the feeling expressed, it was feared he would be most summarily dealt with. The handbill, as well as the information derived from the officers of the boat, leave no doubt but that the melancholy deed was the result of that foul spirit of discord which has been let loose in the Territory by men professing to be actuated by holy and philanthropic motives.

Attached to the memoranda of the steamer Edinburgh we find a few additional particulars. The quarrel between McRea and Clark originated at a meeting of squatters held at Leavenworth City, and grew out of a dispute about voting. McRea is a lawyer. After he shot his victim he attempted to escape by swimming the river, but was overtaken and conveyed to the guard-house. The excitement, both in Weston and Leavenworth, was intense, and it was apprehended the citizens would tear down the prison and Lynch the prisoner. We give the handbill entire:

TO THE PUBLIC.

GREAT INDIGNATION MEETING—AROUSE AND AVENGE THE BLOOD OF YOUR FELLOW MAN.—Whereas, Malcomb Clark, one of our most worthy and estimable citizens—a man whom it was impossible to see without admiring, or to know without esteeming, and of whom it might be said that those who knew him best loved him most—was consigned to an untimely grave, killed, atrociously murdered, without any just cause or provocation, in this city, on the 30th ult., by the violent and ruthless hand of an assassin, C. McRea, a meeting of citizens is hereby called in this place on Thursday, May 3d, for the purpose of taking some action in relation to this foul and atrocious crime, by which a happy family has sustained a sad and irreparable bereavement, and our community been deprived of one of her most useful and enterprising citizens.

Here is another life that has been taken by the murderous hand of a treacherous villain! Where will these fatal consequences end, God only knows! Arise, fellow-men, and trample under your feet the hydra-headed monster ABOLITIONISM!

D. Scott Boyle, John Harris, James M. Lyle, D. J. Johnson, H. Rives Pollard, J. Marion Alexander, Bennett Burnam, J. L. McAleer, Jarrett Todd, John H. McBride, members of the committee appointed by the citizens of Leavenworth to frame a call for a public meeting.

Leavenworth City, K. T., May 1, 1855.

Exciting Times in Kansas and Missouri.

The Platte Missouri Argus of the 1st inst. publishes the proceedings of a mass meeting held at Webster, Mo., at which the following extraordinary resolutions were passed:

That self-defence requires the expulsion of every person bringing into reproach negro slavery; that robbers and traitors have no right to the protection of the law; that they ratify the proceedings at the Parkville riot; that they approve of the resolutions in regard to Methodists, and add thereto all ministers preaching prejudicial to slavery; that they have no arguments against abolition papers, but "Missouri river," "bonfire," and "hemp rope;" that they pledge themselves to go to Kansas and help to expel those corrupting the slaves; and that they call a grand mass meeting at Parkville on the 5th inst.

The First Maine Law Decision.

Some time ago, upon a requisition from Mayor Wood, Mr. District Attorney Hall gave an opinion to the effect that no legal penalty exists until the 4th day of July next, for the violation of the provisions of the Maine law. Patrick Boylan was arrested on the 7th of May, and the case was sent to the Special Sessions for trial. Boylan plead guilty; but after consideration, Recorder Smith, in giving his opinion, confirms the views of the District Attorney, viz: that as the new act does not come into existence until July 4th, any penalties under that act, could not be applied to the breach of an old act; and that as the old act was repealed by the new, there was no law, but that of construction; which in the absence of anything definite, did not feel authorised to adopt, as "The law does not allow of constructive offences, or arbitrary punishment.

Business at the Pension Office.—3,500 applications for bounty land under the act of 3d March, 1855, were filed in the Pension Office yesterday, making the total receipts under that act, in less than two months from the filing of the first claim, amount to 124,300.

The officers in charge of this business have learned with pleasure that the 160, 120 and 80 acre plates, engraved upon superb steel plates, with beautiful and appropriate designs and heads of distinguished gentlemen, will be ready for the issuance of warrants by the 1st proximo.

A destructive fire occurred on the 7th inst., in New Orleans, on St. Charles and Gravier streets, embracing the Exchange News Room, Vannchie's Museum, and the stores of Messrs. Sherman, Ward and Jones. Loss $75,000.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

Since our last issue, European affairs are assuming a more belligerent attitude. Both the Atlantic and Asia have arrived, bringing news of the greatest importance.

The Vienna Conference, which some have seemed to have such implicit confidence in, has broken up, without any pacific arrangement—Russia determinately refusing the proposition of the Allies, and the Allies as determinate in the stand they have taken. There is nothing left now but war the most bloody, sanguinary and obstinate; as that which diplomacy has failed to accomplish must now be decided by force of arms. The following, from the London Times, will show their positions:

[BY TELEGRAPH FROM VIENNA.]

The twelfth conference was held on Saturday, the 21st of April. It lasted four hours and a half, and concluded by adjourning sine die, Russia having absolutely rejected the demands of France and England. Lord John Russell and M. Drouyn de l'Huys immediately took leave of the Emperor, and were to leave on Sunday, the 22d. It now remains to be seen what course Austria will pursue.

Advices from Balaklava have been received to the 7th. The fire of the Allies had done considerable damage, but the Russians displayed extreme activity in repairing the injured works. Several French mines had been sprung, which did considerable damage to the place.

There seems to be very little hopes that Austria will join the Allies; it is generally supposed both by the English and French journals, that Austria has been insincere in her proposed mediations; that she has been all the time in favor of Russia, and that her movements in the Vienna Conference have simply been a ruse de guerre.

Mr. Layard, in a reported speech in the Liverpool "Albion," holds the following:

"It is no new notion on my part that Austria would fall us. Every speech of mine in the House last year dwelt upon that topic. I knew that Austria would not go with us; (hear, hear!) and I stated this, not because I wished to interfere with the government of any country, but because I felt certain that it was not the policy of Austria—so far as a selfish policy can be called by that name—to go with us. (Hear, hear!) And what have our diplomatists done? By playing into the hands of Austria, by allowing Austria to accumulate a large body of men, we have placed her in that position that she is now the arbitress of this question. She will gain, and we will lose; and what can we do? ("Hear, hear!" and cheers.) Austria, with from 400,000 to 500,000 men, who can be placed either in one side of the scale or the other, is a very serious consideration. By the course which we have pursued, we have been giving her time to collect a vast army which can be marched against us. On the other hand, she can control Russia by threatening to throw that army into our side of the scale. But she will not do that; and why? Because her sympathies are with the policy of Russia, and those principles upon which the Russian Government is founded; and that is the reason Austria will never go with us. (Hear, hear!) Take, again, our diplomatic appointments at this moment. Lord John Russell is now leaving Vienna."

Her policy has been, by tact and diplomacy, to stave off the war until she should be better prepared. Mr. Layard further states that if the four points had been adhered to, that Moldavia, Wallachia, and Servia would be placed under several tyrants instead of one; and that these provinces, especially that of Servia, dreads "Austrian tyranny worse than Russian."

The following will throw some light on this question:

"All hopes of Austria taking the field against Russia appear to be at an end for the present. Among the conflicting rumors that which appeared to bear the most consistency was, that Austria refuses to demand from Russia any concessions further than these: 1st, The Russian fleet in the Black Sea to remain 'in statu quo.' It is said at present to consist of three ships of the line and four steam frigates. 2dly, The Western Powers to have Consuls at Sebastopol, who are to be under the immediate protection of their Ministers residing at St. Petersburg. 3dly, The Allies to have the right to construct war ports on some part of the Turkish coast."

The subjoined extract, from the New York Herald, will throw a little more light on the position of Austria:

"Attitude of Austria.—The Paris correspondent of the London News points to the method which Austria will most probably adopt in order to creep out from the engagements of the treaty of December 2d. Thus she will continue to say that she is ready to declare war upon Russia when the conferences are broken up; but this is not the case; they are only suspended. The semi-official Austrian Correspondent has already broken this ground.

"The London Times' Paris correspondent states that on Tuesday night a courier left Paris for Vienna with despatches from the Emperor for M. Drouyn de l'Huys. These despatches are described as decided in their tone, and the French Plenipotentiary is instructed to call upon the Austrian Cabinet to declare categorically whether it means to fulfil its pledges, and to take the part that becomes it as a great power against the common enemy, now that Russia has rejected the propositions of the powers. The demand is said to be made in terms which admit neither of evasion nor delay.

"The Patrie publishes a despatch from Vienna, dated the 26th, which states that the Austrian government is about to decree a new levy of 80,000 men, and that the propositions relative to the mobolisation of the federal contingents are about to be renewed."

We have been thus particular, upon this subject, in order that our readers might be put in possession of the true position of European affairs, as the present is a most important crisis, not only in regard to England, but also to all Europe. The moves of Austria, either way, is going to alter the state of affairs materially; but notwithstanding the sad reverses of the English and French armies, they still seem to be obstinate though 600,000 men should be turned from a neutral position to that of an enemy. Should Austria refuse to answer categorically the propositions of M. Drouyn de l'Huys, she will, of course, be treated as an enemy; and the question necessarily arises, What then? Can England, France, and Turkey, with some little dependencies, cope with the united powers of Russia, Prussia, and Austria? Not without some change, and that must be the letting loose of revolutionary principles in Europe. Prussia, but especially Austria, would have everything to dread from this. Should an army of the Allies be enabled to march into the interior of Europe, and proclaim liberty to Hungary, Poland, Lombardy, Venice, and other disaffected provinces, it would strike at the very vitals of these nations, as an innumerable host would rally to the standard. England, probably, with her present indications of radicalism, would not perhaps seriously object to this; nor would France, as a nation. How it would suit l'Empereur is another matter. It might be dangerous to his peace and stability thus to unsettle the rouges in la Belle France; but we think, from some indications, he is meditating a step of that kind; and perhaps may think that by coming forward as the deliverer of the oppressed he will not only sustain the military prestige of Napoleon the First; but by accumulating fresh power will be enabled, not only to maintain his present position and gratify his friends; but also to mould and modify the disaffected elements in his own nation, by coming forward as the avowed deliverer of those down-trodden millions of Europe. If this is his object it is a great scheme. Austria, no doubt, dreads it. What will be the result time must determine. It will not be easy to obliterate from the memory of millions his past acts; a policy like the above may atone in part; but he is playing a bold game, and a little mishap will place him in a worse position than either Elba or St. Helena. On the other hand, Russia is powerful, and so is Prussia and Austria: a few more moves on the great chequer board and all Europe will be in a blaze, and there will be as much blood as the most sanguinary can desire.

The impression in Paris is, that Prussia, Austria, and the smaller German States, will coalesce in an armed neutrality.

On the 16th April the Emperor and Empress of the French visited England. They were received with great courtesy by the Queen of England and Prince Albert, and with the greatest enthusiasm by the people. All that Royalty could do was done for the visitors; nor were the subjects behind their Queen in their demonstrations of good will. There is a great contrast between his present and past visits to London. So changes the world. What next?

A telegraph is now in successful operation between the Crimea and London.

The reports from the Crimea are as follows:

"From daybreak of the 9th up to the morning of the 14th the bombardment and cannonade had continued day and night, each of the five hundred guns firing one hundred and twenty rounds daily. When evening comes on the fire is not much reduced. Although the Mamelon Tower is silenced, and some of the Round Tower guns dismounted, yet the Redan and Garden batteries still keep up a heavy fire—no sign of an immediate assault. During the night of the 14th the French dislodged a rifle ambuscade in front of the Malakoff Tower. A terrible battle between a Russian sortie and the French raged during the night, perhaps the most sanguinary since Inkermann. April 17—A dispatch to the French Government says the five of the French batteries maintains its superiority.

"The French have taken the Russian ambuscades in front of the Malakoff Tower, and have added them to the French lines, and have also crowned a ravine which runs along the fortifications of the city where the Russians formerly kept their reserves; they have also sprang a mine before the Flagstaff Battery, at the distance of fifty metres, thereby opening a new parallel, which has been successfully joined to the others. From the 12th to the 14th, the French loss was only 300. The situation of affairs was considered satisfactory to the French.

"April 19—The French Minister of War learns that the besegers were still advancing, and were consolidating their position. On the night of the 18th the Russians made a strong sortie, but were promptly repulsed. Prince Gortschahoff's account of the same date, says the besegers' fire on the 16th, 17th, and 18th, was less violent. Our batteries replied successfully. On the night of the 18th, one of our battalions made a sortie to destroy the enemy's most advanced works. Our object was fully attained; moreover, the loss of the garrison the past few days has been less.

"The latest dispatch is also from Gutschakoff, dated the 22d. It states that after twelve days' bombardment the fire of the Allies had become weak and caused little damage."

THE BALTIC.

It is stated that Liban was blockaded on the 17th, and all of the ports to the entrance of Riga on the 19th of April.

FRANCE.

It is still reported, but is considered doubtful, that Napoleon will command the Allied armies. It has been officially announced that his departure for the Crimea is postponed for a short time.

ENGLAND.

Some notice has been excited by the report that an American squadron is to make demonstration against Cuba. It is doubted whether a war between the United States and Spain would much complicate present European politics.

It has been reported that fifty British officers were to sail on the Asia. It was supposed their destination was Bermuda, to operate with Spain.

Liberia, Africa.

A meeting of the colored citizens of Brooklyn (Eastern District) was held a few evenings since in the Rev. S. S. Joycelain's Church, corner of Eleventh and South Third streets, for the purpose of hearing reports from L. H. Nelson and others, who have recently returned from Liberia, Africa. The following is an abstract:

"The place is very much neglected, so far as agriculture is concerned, owing to the extreme heat and sickness of the place. The African fever is very prevalent and its duration is from six to eighteen months. Persons attacked with the fever are first seized with a severe chill, then a burning fever, followed by perspiration; the marrow of the bones becomes softened and a general lassitude of the whole system.

The emigrants from this country—those that are surviving—are doing well, and are principally engaged in manufacturing sugar molasses and raising cotton. The labor is principally done by the natives, who carry lumber, bricks, stone, sand and other materials upon their heads, sometimes a distance of several miles.

About 10,000 persons have emigrated to Liberia during the past fifteen years, and the present population is about 1,500, all told.

Mr. Nelson recommends persons emigrating there to have some means, in order to support themselves after assistance from the Colonization Society ceases, which is at the expiration of six months, as but few of them recover from the fever in that time."—[N. Y. News.

If the above is a correct statement Liberia is no Eldrado, even for the African race, 1,500, out of 10,000 imported, including increase does not speak very highly for the philantrophy of such a step, about one seventh of the whole. If this course was generally adopted we should need no abolition societies. They would soon die off and be out of the way.

A severe storm and freshet was experienced on the 19th of last month in Michigan; towers and houses were blown down; mills dams washed away; a large barn in Lapeer struck by lightning and consumed, with all the wool of last year's clip; farming tools, two valuable cows, and seven fine sheep, with lambs, owned by Mr. George Clark, the most complete establishment in the State; the lightning struck and destroyed a stable at Coldwater Station, with seventeen horses and a valuable stock of carriages and harness.

CENTERVILLE, Del., May 1, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR, I presume I have said as much relative to the Poojah's as will prove interesting—or at least—as much as you can find room for in the columns of your valuable paper, so I will leave that part of our narrative.

Their manner of dress is somewhat peculiar—that is, it would be thought so, if in our boasted land. The women of the different Provinces dress differently, but the men dress nearly the same in all, as they dress but little at best, except the Kings, Rajahs and Rich Baboo's. As to the Queens, Ranney, and Baboo's wives, or any of their daughters, no white man is allowed to see them, except it should be by accident, as they are kept in the houses or compounds, which are enclosed by high walls of pucker work. It is not designed that these girls should be seen by any males, until after they are married, and then only by their husband, father-in-law, and very near kin.

These women sometimes go to the river to bathe and worship therein, as is the custom of all who live near the rivers Ganges, Hooghly, or Jumnah, but when they do this, they go with some of the lower Castes, dress like them, and have a Chatta on their hip, and perhaps another on their head; if a white man should perchance meet them, they would all cover their faces, with their Cuprah, as the more modest of the higher portion of the lower Castes, always do; so one might meet them fifty times and not know it; as there is but little difference in their complexion. In fact, I have seen some of the lower class of quite a fair complexion. They are, however, of different shades; some are as black as our Negroes. This I think is caused partly by their oiling themselves so much and their being exposed to the hot Sun; for I can assure you the heat is very intense in that country. The men generally have a long piece of Cuprah (Native cloth,) which they put once around their waist, and fasten it in front, leaving both ends hanging; this is about the amount of clothing worn by the working class, though they have another piece of Cuprah with them which the Coolies roll up to protect their heads, while carrying burdens; the Palankeen bearers use it also to preserve their shoulders while carrying passengers from place to place. At other times they carry them in their hands or over their shoulders. All the Coolies, Palkee bearers, Catab, and Rotee, Wallows, (Book and bread pedlers) &c., &c., dress in this way. The house-servants generally wear a garment similar to a roundabout, only open a little on one side. Those who have an English education, or while attending school, dress a little different, that is, they arrange their Cuprah so as to come down to the knees, and they have a piece to wrap about their shoulders, but when around their homes, both the rich and the poor, lounge about in almost a state of nudity. The women of Bengal Province wrap a cloth around them, extending below the knees; it is so arranged that one end comes over the head and shoulders and covers one side of the breast, and the modest will hold it up while passing a white man. The Jahs of course dress better, as a general thing; most of those of the upper part of Hindostan, and Sciend Provinces also dress better. They wear a skirt like a petticoat, and something similar to ladies' stays; this improves their looks much. They also wear a piece of cloth about their head and shoulders, so that they might be called rather respectable. The higher class dress much better, wear shoes of their peculiar kind, some turn up at the toes, others broad and rather flat at the toes, and worked over with tinsel work, some of gold and silver, and others imitation only. At first when one arrives in the country, their style of dress and manners is rather repugnant to one's feelings, but it soon becomes habitual and we pass and repass thousands per day, without noticing or thinking about them any more than we would the thousands we meet in the crowded thoroughfares of your Western cities. Though I can truly say it struck strangely upon my sight at first, and although not particularly noted for my modesty, I must say I was sometimes considerably dashed.

The Queens and Ranneys sometimes dress in very costly apparel. One dress will cost a lack, or 100,000 rupees, and sometimes more, so you see there is a great distinction of classes in that country. While one woman's dress will cost from one to four rupees, another will have one worth from 50 to 100,000 rupees. Some might think that those natives who go bare legged, bare backed, and bare headed, would get terribly sunburnt, in that tropical clime, where if a piece of tin or iron was to lay but a few moments in the sun, it would burn severely, and the ground is almost intolerably hot to ones' feet through the soles of boots or shoes; but it does not seem to affect them. They bathe in the river or tank once or oftener every day, and when they are through bathing they oil themselves all over with cocoa nut oil. This seems to prevent the sun from taking effect upon them. They use the oil as often as they bathe. The river about Calcutta (and all the places where I have been to it) early in the morning, is perfectly lined with them bathing and worshiping with their flowers and water, &c. It is singularly strange to see them go through their worship in the water; and if any one gets in over their head, or should perchance fall off a dingby in the middle of the river, the rest will not assist them to get out, and I am told that they sometimes will not allow them to get into the dingby (native boat) again. I have seen them fall off a dingby myself, and they would not pay the least attention to it, unless some white man ordered them so to do, and then they obeyed through fear. They seem to think if he should drown it is all right, and that he or she—as the case may be—will go straightway to heaven; as they consider the rivers Ganges, Hooghly, and Jumnah, all holy waters, and where the Ganges and Jumnah come together, it is considered more holy. They will perform long pilgrimages twice a-year to that place to bathe. This takes place in February, and I believe in October. I was there in February. The junction of the two is at Allahabad, 500 miles from Calcutta.

Benarez is considered by the natives as the nearest point to heaven, and when they get old they will perform long journeys to get there to die, and then throw their bodies into the Ganges; they die there by thousands. I will not undertake to describe this city and their ways, as it would make my communication much more lengthy than originally designed; as there are many curious things carried on there; being as it were a native metropolis.

They have a fashion about Calcutta and a little above there—and all through for aught I know—that when a man or woman get's sick, and their friends lose all hope of their recovery; they carry them down to the river, and lay them on the beach with their feet in the water; then if they will say certain words (I do not remember them now) their friends will fill their mouth and nose with mud; and thus stifle them to death. If they will not say those words, they then all go off, and leave them there to do as they please or rather as they can. Sometimes they are placed there at low, or ebb tide, so that when the flood tide comes in, it of course takes them off, being unable to get away. Others are put in the same situation at flood tide, and as it ebbs leaving them high and dry, and before it rises again they crawl away. When this is the case they sometimes recover, at other times are torn to pieces by jackalls or other wild beasts.

Some have been found by the soldiers and other white men, who have them taken care of. When they recover, the husband, wife, father, mother, child, brother or sister will never have anything to do with them, will not even allow them about their ghurr (house), nor can they ever recover their cast again, but must live by themselves or some one who has passed through the same ordeal. They go to another place to live, and generally turn out to be desperate characters; so I am told, I never was in any of their villages, though I have passed them in a boat, and was told that a short time since they came near killing two white men.

There was a girl taken to the river in this way just above Calcutta, and left, but she made out to get a little back out of the way of the water, but being very sick was unable to keep the jackalls off during the night, and they mangled her very much, but not fatally. She was discovered by a man the next day, and taken to the hospital, where she recovered; was then sent from there to the orphan school; got a good education, was quite a smart woman, and married a white man, and was doing well when I was there; but it would have been useless for her to have tried to get her caste again, or to associate with her relatives.

They have quit burning (as the English law forbids it) the living with their dead, though it is quite a spectacle to see them burning their dead. The vultures, crows, &c., stand by to get their portion, as some do not have wood sufficient to burn them entirely up, and others are too poor to get wood at all, so they throw them in the river, and they float so the ravens feed on them, &c.

I am as ever, your Bro. affectionately in Christ,

S. A. WOOLLEY.

From Our Delaware Correspondent.

CENTREVILLE, Del., May 3, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: Having read considerable in the papers of late, in relation to the Red Men of the Western wilds, I am induced to forward the following reflections for your consideration.

I profess to be somewhat acquainted with their customs and habits, having travelled from the Atlantic, to the Pacific Ocean, across the continent; besides residing some years in their midst, on exploring expeditions, for six months at a time, with only a few men in company. Having therefore some claims to a knowledge of Indian character, I can speak confidently, when I say, that a policy recommended by some of the public journals to exterminate them, would be unjust, as it would be ferocious and cruel. It is true that in some instances of late, they have manifested a barbarous, and revengeful disposition; but were the oppressions of the whites fairly investigated, I am persuaded that it would be found that in many instances, they were more sinned against than sinning. They are far from us, and suffer innumerable wrongs, that reach not our ears. In many instances they are shot down at random, as wolves or bears; and in others under the plea of friendship, robbed and plundered of their rights. They need a military force among them; but these should be under the direction of men of judgment, who would treat them well, maintain their rights, and treat them as friends, with sufficient power to quell disturbance, and keep them in subjection, if hostile intentions were manifested, such a course would gain their respect and confidence and answer every purpose.

If there should be any blotting out necessary, I would say it should be those men who have been employed by our Government, to disburse the appropriation made by the Government to the various tribes; for if we are correctly informed, they smuggle, steal, and make use of about one half of the Indians money, and then swindle them out of half of the remainder, by paying them off in goods at from four to ten prices, so that the Red Men of the forest have a just cause for complaint; for we as a nation, and people, have driven them from their lands and homes, with a promise to pay them for it, and then send men among them to swindle them in this manner, what must be their feelings? This as a matter of course, will cause them to feel unpleasant, and if we will just place ourselves in their shoes, with all our boasted intelligence methinks we should feel like seeking revenge. Can we be surprised at the Indians?

In looking over the suggestions of Prof. Spencer, and Dr. Clinton, I can say I most heartily concur with their sentiments, as a whole. I am well aware as Dr. Clinton says that the Indian believes in the "Great Spirit." I have been in their lodges and seen them making medicine, as they call it; which they do by imploring the "Great Spirit" to heal them. Some of them look forward to a day when they will have their just rights; and that it will be brought about by the over ruling hand of God, or "Great Spirit."

So it appears that they believe in the same God that we do; and if we are a Christian Nation as we profess to be, we should "do unto them as we would like them," or any other Nation, to "do unto us;" in case they should ever get the upper hand. For if we treat them evil now, what could we ever expect of them; we being so much more enlightened than they.

I would therefore suggest that our Government treat them kindly, send them their just dues, by the hands of good honest men, who will be true to their trust, and who would rather give them $10, than take $5 from them unjustly; just do to them as we would wish others to do to us. Then be on our guard all the time, and we shall have peace and not war; and if all the world, would take this course, we should not see the papers teeming with the wants and sufferings of the poor as we do. As to the depredations said to be committed by the Indians, much of it is done by others on their credit; in fact they are more honorable in some instances than some whites; for if they think you are a true friend they will not steal your property, as long as they retain those sentiments; but this confidence once betrayed, look out. So I would say let us "cast the beam out of our own eyes; (as a Nation) and then we can see clearly to pluck the mote out of our brothers eye." That is do right ourselves and then we are justified in making them do so too. If this course was pursued, I think all would be peace with our Red brethren of the plains. The Scriptures say "we are all of one blood," and that the Lord has "set the bounds of our habitations." So if we are to possess all this land let the Lord give it to us, and inasmuch as he has set their bounds or place on this land, be willing to submit to His will and let them live in peace. Yours as ever, S. A. WOOLEY.

Commissioners of Emigration.

The Board met yesterday, Commissioner Verplanck in the chair. Commissioners Wood and Hall absent. E. D. M. Norgan, appointed by Governor Clarke, vice Captain Marshall, resigned, made his appearance and took his seat.

CASTLE GARDEN.

Commissioner Kennedy offered a resolution to immediately take possession of Castle Garden, so as to protect the emigrants, who are now arriving in great numbers, from the impositions of runners and others.

Commissioner Purdy strongly opposed this hasty action. They should not go to expense without seeing whether they were secure of the place. The resolution, however, passed, the committee being restricted to the expenditure of $1,000.

OFFICER SEMLER AND THE COMMISSIONERS.

A communication was received from the Mayor's office, enclosing the reports of officer Semler particularizing certain violations of the emigrant laws. They were referred to the counsel for investigation and settlement.

Commissioner Kennedy, speaking of the emigration during the present year, observed that in his opinion the emigration would be large. He also stated that the consul at Antwerp, whose charge against the passengers of the ship Leopold was published in the Herald of yesterday, was, no doubt, influenced by improper motives. It appears this Mr. Gaul gives certificates of good character to ships that will give him a fee, and that his attack on the ship named was because they would not "come down" handsomely. This statement, therefore, should be received with caution.

The Chair announced the following as the committees for the ensuing year:

Ward's Island Committee—Kelly, Garrigue, Kennedy, Carrigan, Cumming.

Marine Hospital—Purdy, Garrigue, Morgan, Hall (Mayor of Brooklyn.)

Auditing—Carrigan, Garrigue.

Out-door Poor—Purdy, Garrigue, Carrigan.

Purchase—Purdy, Cumming, Kelly.

Lunatic Asylum—Kennedy, Garrigue, Morgan.

City Labor—Vice-President and President of German and Irish Emigrant Societies.

Mummy Wheat.

There was planted last season in the garrison garden, Isle of Cumbrae, a single grain of wheat which had been brought from Egypt, and had been taken from the envelope of a mummy—embalmed, it is believed, 200 years before the birth of our Saviour. This single grain yielded at last harvest the enormous quantity of 517 grains, all healthy and good, which have been re-sown. If the yield should continue at only half this ratio for the next two or three years, it will sow a field more than an acre in extent.—[Glasgow Citizen.

Miscellaneous.

The Horrors of War—A Fearful Tragedy.

THE London Times lays before its readers the particulars of a horrible affair, which recently occurred near the Dutch settlement of Transvaal, at the Cape of Good Hope, and which can only be paralled in atrocity among the achievements of modern times by the exploit of Marshal St. Arnaud in Algiers, when he smoked and burned to death thousands of his barbarian opponents who had sought refuge in a deep and spacious cave:

"In the case at the Cape of Good Hope, the Caffre Indians had murdered, in October last, under circumstances of great barbarity, ten or twelve men and women of the Dutch settlement. Immediately General Pretorious raised an army of five hundred men, and, accompanied by Commander General Potgietter, proceeded on an expedition to revenge the blood of the victims. After an absence of several weeks, they reached some remarkable subterranean caverns, half a mile in length, and from three to five hundred feet in width, where the Caffres had entrenched themselves. Upon his arrival at this spot, General Pretorious attempted to blast the rocks above the caverns, and thus crush the savages beneath the ruins. The peculiar character of the stone, however, rendered this scheme impracticable, and he then stationed his men around the mouths of the caves, and built up walls in front of them. After a few days, many of the women and children were driven out by hunger and thirst from their hiding places, and were allowed to escape; but every man who came forth was shot dead by their rifles. On the 17th of November, at the close of a siege of three weeks, the besiegers, seeing no signs of life, entered the caverns, and the silence within, together with the horrible odor arising from the bodies of the dead, told how effectually their object had been accomplished.—More than nine hundred Caffres had been shot down at the mouths of the caverns, and a much greater number had perished by slow degrees, suffering all the horrors of starvation in the gloomy recesses within."

Anointing with Oil.

IN England the custom of anointing the body with oil seems to be entirely abandoned. The present cry is "Baths and Washhouses," "Hydropathy," "Water-cure," "Fountains," "Street watering," "Scrubbing out the house," &c.; and these are now so much the fashion that the bare mention that these things may be done in excess will, we fear, render us liable to be drowned in a flood of watery effusions from the modern hydromaniacs. Nevertheless, at the risk of such a watery grave, we will assert that our belief is in oil. Yes, we actually believe St. Mark (vi. 13) when he says, "And they anointed with oil many that were sick, and healed them." The fact is, that the use of some pure unction, or oil on the surface of the skin is in many instances of infinite service, and can with great advantage be used instead of water. In this country, children are perpetually "watered," as though they were amphibious animals. In the East Indies children are rarely washed in water; but they are oiled every day. A child's head can be kept much cleaner if oiled than without it. Many young people with hectic cheeks would probably never know the last days of consumption if their parents would insist on having the chest, the back, and limbs anointed with sweet oil two or three times a week. The Hebrew physicians seem to have considered oil as more efficacious than any other remedy for the mitigation of various disorders of the human frame. The sick were always anointed with oil as the most powerful means that was known of checking the progress of disease. One of their medical prescription is this; "He who is afflicted with pains in his head or eruptions in his body, let him anoint himself with oil." In the Epistle of James (v. 14) we read, "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the Elders, and let them anoint him with oil." The grographical position of England ensures for its inhabitants an atmosphere sufficiently aqueous for their general health; indeed, if anything, it is already too moist, and therefore a little discretion is necessary before allowing one's dwelling to be "scrubbed" and the house converted into a gigantic vapour-bath. Nor should people bathe in this country to a great extent, in imitation of the Romans. The climate of England is not quite so sunny as Italy. Doing as the Romans do when you are at Rome is all very well; but trying to ape them in the climate of Britain is sheer folly, as the fountains in Trafalgar Square sufficiently testify.—[Family Herald.

Dwarf Pear Trees.

Dwarf Pears on Quince stocks are not only beautiful objects, but bear earlier and more freely and certainly, and produce larger and finer fruit than those grown on free stocks. They are also, by their small height and size, better adapted to gardens and restricted grounds, easier managed, giving greater room for variety, as well as presenting fruit easy of access, and secure from high winds, often very injurious to standard trees. The pyramidal form of training, represented above, is the most beautiful, takes up the least room, and gives the best fruit. No garden should be without its Dwarf Pear trees, at once so productive and ornamental.—[Woman's Advocate.

AN EXTRAORDINARY METAL.—The attention of the Paris Academy of Sciences was, some months since, directed to a discovery of the metal called aluminium. The Emperor, on hearing of it, ordered that every encouragement should be given to utilise the discovery, and some manufactured specimens of this metal will appear at the Exhibition. In a report made by the Minister of Public Instruction we find the following:—"When this extraordinary metal, light as glass, white and shining as silver, almost as unchangeable as gold, malleable and ductile in the same degree as these precious metals, strong as iron, and which is capable of being worked into any form by casting, by the hammer, and by the file,—when this metal, which is found in abundance in the commonest clay, shall have taken its place in the domestic economy and arts, no astonishment will be felt at the encouragement which your majesty has given in order to render its extraction easy and less costly."

Complimentary.

AT a meeting of the passengers on board the ship "Siddons," Captain Taylor, which sailed from Liverpool February 27th, 1855, and bound for the port of Philadelphia, it was

1. Resolved, As expressive of the sense of the meeting, that too much praise cannot be expressed by the passengers towards Captain Taylor, for his kindness to them generally, during the whole of this long and tedious voyage, and for his care and prudent oversight to promote the health and comfort of all; but especially for his sympathy, care, and indefatigable attention to the sick, whom he did not consider it beneath his notice to visit and administer to, in person—to render them comfortable by day or by night.

2. Resolved, That we consider ourselves in honor and duty bound to return him our sincere thanks, for his invariable kindness and affable deportment towards the Saints throughout, and that we recommend him, and the noble ship which he commands, to the favorable notice of such as are yet in the old country and wish to emigrate.

3. Resolved, That in thus expressing our feelings towards the commander of the ship, we do not wish to detract from the merits of the other officers, whose skill is undoubted, and whom we highly respect as such.

4. Resolved, That we have had a long and tedious voyage from port to port, and that our patience has been fairly put to the test; but that we have thus far overcome, and that we yet rejoice in the Lord our God, and in the great work of gathering Israel; and that we are as much determined to push on to the end as on the day we started—and we say to all that are behind, "Come after us."

5. Resolved, That these resolutions be submitted, through our President, Elder Fullmer, to the consideration of the Editor of "THE MORMON" for publication.

6. Proposed, That a vote of thanks be given to Elder Fullmer, and his counsel, for their strict attention to the wants of all under their care, and for the impartial manner in which they have enforced discipline.

Carried unanimously.

With considerations of the most profound respect towards the Presidency in Liverpool, and all in their employ, as well as love to all Saints, we have the honor, in behalf of all under our charge, as well as for ourselves, to subscribe our names, most truly yours in the new and everlasting covenant,

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Pére et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions á son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier á notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire á l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les cotés: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votro lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate, the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

Poetry.

To the Saints in the Valleys of the Mountains.

BY HENRY W. NAISBITT.

HARK! to that voice of wailing tone
Which sweeps the Atlantic's billowy breast,
And like the light, from zone to zone,
It hails, though distant still, the West.

With purport deep, its accents shrill
Betray the source from whence it flows;
No mountain's dale, or swelling hill,
No summer's heat, or winter's snows

A barrier are; but onward, on Untiring, earnest, still it flies,
Till to fair Utah's valleys comes
Its plaint renewed, then silent dies!

"Help, help, oh help! we weary are,
And tyrants crush us to the earth
Till, but for one bright glowing star,
Our hearts might wish we ne'er had birth:

"From early dawn, till o'er the skies
Night's sable mantle is unfurled,
We struggling toil, in hopes to rise
Above the cruel, heartless world,"

We praise our God, and still we must,
For wisdom, light, and truth divine;
And with his servants share our crust,
Or shed our blood as crimson wine.

From factory, workshop, mine, and plough
Our myriad voices chime as one,
That unto us deliverance now
May be secured, the victory won.

And oh that those with whom we've toiled,
And drank the self-same bitter cup,
Would lend a hand—our foes then foiled,
The mourner, slave, be lifted up.

We love our Prophet, know his will,
We love our God, and trust his word,
And union is our motto still;
This once complete our prayer is heard,

And soon in Zion we shall stand,
And Ephraim's promised blessings share,
A grateful, peaceful, laboring band,
That we a crown, might "win, and wear."

Then help, help, help the suffering poor
In every land, the wide world o'er;
Your just reward is firm, and sure,
Where tyrant's rule is known no more.

FOR THE MORMON.

Know Nothingism vs. Ladies' Rights.

AT a new theatre, Fifteenth avenue and One hundred and second street, New York, the following play was perpetrated:

ACT I.

SCENE—A room in a house.

[Enter a lady, with a newspaper in hand—soliloquises.]—The "Know Nothing and Crusader"—a curious name, that, for a paper—"Know Nothing"—why, that is the very epithet my husband applies to me when I talk of "woman's rights"—the lordly disposition of the male sex—universal suffrage—yes, universal—applying to ladies as well as gentlemen—to blacks as well as whites—to foreigners as well as citizens—he says I don't know nothing; but there's one thing he'd have me know, and that is patience—yes, he'll cram that into my head—patience! yes, I have need of it—here am I—work, work, work—all day—washing, ironing, baking, nursing baby, mending children's clothes, cooking dinner, supper, breakfast—making, mending, sewing—work, work, work, as if I were a slave—his slave—and then have him to come home and play the lord—I won't stand it, that I won't—Lucy Stone was right—women have their rights, and I'm a woman—and I have rights, and I'll maintain them, too—why, I'm an American woman—husband says that American men have better rights than foreigners—then American women must have more rights—he can't dispute that—this Know Nothing is quite a paper—I wonder if the editor is a woman's rights man—an American woman's rights' man?—it is called, too, the Crusader—the "American Crusader"—C-r-u-s-a-d-e-r—I have it—I'll be a crusader—yes, I'll be a crusad-e-r—not against the infidel—not against the Pope—against the men—how romantic!—beautiful—a band of Amazonian crusaders—fighting for our rights—our motto, Free Trade and Women's Rights—we must have a convention, and numbers must join it—and we'll have a Presidentess, a Secretaress, a Treasuress, an Editoress—yes, we must have our paper—our public dinners—our public meetings—and I'll make speeches I'll preside—I'll make a flaming speech—let me see, what shall I say?—but I must have a becoming position. [Mounts the table.]

"Friends and fellow-citizens—for we are citizens, and it is high time that it is known that we are citizens—men have sought, for ages, to rob us of our rights; but we are living in an age of improvement. The destinies of the race are onward! onward!! ONWARD!!! The social, moral, philosophical, intellectual, and political capabilities of women are being developed. Men would rob us of our position. But who are men? I ask again, Who—are—MEN? No reply! Shall I answer, ladies?—shall I answer? Our tormentors! our oppressors!! our persecutors!!! our tyrants!!!!—(what else)—our Popes; yes, our Popes—we'll shake off our chains—(flourishes the paper)—we'll free ourselves from our tyrants. No Popery, no Popery. We'll, we'll—"

Mr. T. Heigh ho! Mrs. Twaddle, what are you doing?

Mrs. T. [Descends with a scornful look.] What am I doing, eh? A pretty question from a gentleman to a lady.

Mr. T. And yet a very reasonable one, my dear, under the circumstances.

Mrs. T. Don't dear me and honey me; I've done with dear and honey.

Mr. T. You've done with what?

Mrs. T. Why, with dear and honey.

Mr. T. You surprise me, Mrs. Twaddle. Seriously, what does this mean?

Mrs. T. Why, seriously then, I'm making a speech.

Mr. T. You're making a speech—ha—ha—ha—that's too good—making a speech, and on the table—ha—ha—ha—he—he—he; and pray what about, Mrs. Twaddle?

Mrs. T. Women's rights.

Mr. T. Women's fiddlesticks—you'd better be nursing your baby—I found it crying.

Mrs. T. And pray, Mr. Twaddle, is that little responsibility any relation of yours? Are you its father? Is it your child?

Mr. T. Yes; I hope so.

Mrs. T. Then I hope you'll nurse it yourself, and make it quiet.

Mr. T. Mrs. Twaddle (with astonishment) [lugubrious can't write the look.]

Mrs. T. A-n-d Mr. T-w-a-d d-l-e [grandiloquent-majestic-can't write looks.]

Mr. T. (a little subdued.) The fire is out.

Mrs. T. (not at all subdued.) Then put it in.

Mr. T. Mrs. Twaddle. (Rather deploringly.)

Mrs. T. And Mr. Twaddle. (Not at all deploringly.)

Mr. T. The dinner's not cooked.

Mrs. T. Then cook it.

Mr. T. What does all this mean?

Mrs. T. Oh—simply nothing. When did you change your creed, husband?

Mr. T. Now come, Sarah, enough of this.

Mrs. T. Oh, ho! that's it, is it—I see—Know Nothingism will do for men; but not for women. We'll see.

Mr. T. My dear Mrs. Twaddle.

Mrs. T. And my dear Mr. Twaddle.—[Mrs. T. looks at her husband, holding up the paper.]—is that your paper?

Mr. T. Yes.

Mrs. T. Are these your sentiments?

Mr. T. Yes.

Mrs. T. Are you a Know Nothing?

Mr. T. Yes.

Mrs. T. And you belong to a secret society?

Mr. T. Yes, I do.

Mrs. T. So am I; so do I.

Mr. T. You are what?

Mrs. T. A Know Nothing. I believe in your doctrines—in these doctrines—(holding up the paper)—no foreign rule! no Pope!! no tyranny!!! You see, husband, I am a believer.

Mr. T. A what?

Mrs. T. A believer.

Mr. T. I'm puzzled.

Mrs. T. Shall I explain?

Mr. T. Yes.

Mrs. T. You say the house is my province?

Mr. T. Yes. (With curious looks.)

Mrs. T. You further say the country of America is yours?

Mr. T. Yes.

Mrs. T. It is ours, too; we are natives. You disclaim against foreign intrusion; so do I—against foreign influence; so do I. Your cry is, No Pope—no tyranny; so is mine. That was my speech. You go in for ruling your province—I for ruling mine. Your cry is, Americans, unite against the aggressor—I say, ladies, unite against the aggressors, and show yourselves men—I mean women.

Mr. T. Wife, are you crazy?

Mrs. T. Oh, no; I'm merely a Know Nothing. (With sang froid.) You say the Pope shan't interfere with your government. I say—we ladies say—you shan't interfere with ours; we are the people; we are Americans; we have our rights, and we'll maintain them. No Popery! No Popery!!

[Curtain falls.]

ACT II.

A SCENE IN CASTLE GARDEN, NEW YORK.

First public Know Nothing meeting.

[A gentleman elevated on a platform—a concourse of ladies and gentlemen, of all nations and every grade, assembled.]

[Speaker arises.] Ladies and gentlemen—I have thought proper, in this our first public demonstration, to inform you that the great day of freedom has at length dawned, when we can come out boldly and like men express our sentiments before the public; when secresy is no longer necessary in our community; when it has become unpopular to be private: when we have considered it more honorable to trample under foot our secret obligations than to keep them; when we have determined to throw to the breeze our banner, and to invite the attention of this nation and the world. [Hear, hear.] Great and magnanimous principles have been long pent up in our bosoms, and now we hail with pleasure the opportunity of letting the fires that have been devouring us blazon forth, that mankind may be struck with our benevolence, that the heart of the exile may rejoice, the stranger "be taken in," and that "all the world and the rest of mankind," may see and admire our liberal institutions. [Hear, hear and loud applause.]

[A disciple of Sam arises.] Gentlemen—I go in for Americans ruling America. This is what I go in for, sir; this is a great country, sir; it is our country; we are the natural production of the soil, sir; we grew here, sir; like figs, orangetrees, cocoanuts, coffee and potatoes, sir.

Mike. I'd like to be afther knowing if yez were not planted here fust?

[A Dutchman arises.] Myneheer! Myneheer!

Van W. Myneheer, I vantsh to know if der Dietch vas not dem fust was tzoo American comen; ven dey cam fon faderland tzoo dis New York? Mein Gott! dem vas not Americans. Der Americans ist not dem natives, der Dietch ist.

A Lady. Mr. President—Permit me to make a few remarks; I came here to represent the ladies. Now, the fair sex of both colors have been trodden under foot, they have been oppressed, abused, disfranchised and lorded over by the man. Shall it be so forever? I ask of this generous assembly, shall there be no redress for poor, disconsolate woman? shall she not have equal suffrage; a right to vote, to make speeches, legislate, go to congress? shall she not, at least, have power equal with the man? I say she shall, her destiny is onward [hear, hear], onward! [hear, hear] she shall hold that position for which she is so eminently fitted by nature. [Great excitement, much laughter, a waving of shawls and bonnets. She shall—

Mike. Mister President,—Sur, it is conthrary to my feelings to interrupt a lady; but saving yer presence I'd like to be afther asking yer honor a question or too; these are all spaking for themselves; but the divel a one mintions poor pat. Now I'd like to be afther asking yer honor who makes yer streets, and sweeps 'em? who drives yer carts? who digs yer wells? who carries yer brick and mixes yer morther? who digs yer canals? Who grades yer railroad? will yer be afther telling me? and don't yer boast of your houses, railroads, and your progress, and, be jabers, it's the Irishman that does it; and now, yel talk about not naturalizing us, will yez? faikes and we'll be afther driving that idea fron your hid wid a shillalah.

Several voices. Mr. President! Mr. President!!

Pres. One at a time. [Great confusion—Sam, Irish, Dutch, and women all try to be heard.]

Pres. Ladies and Gentleman, as you all wish to rule, I have something here that will suit you all. [Throws out a number of scepters, for which there is a general scramble.]

A voice. 1. We'll rule; we'll rule!

Voice. 2. You fool; you fool!

Voice. 1. We're right; we're right!

Voice. 2. We'll fight; we'll fight!

[Enter several Murhphys with shillalahs.]

Mike. Be aisy; be aisy;
For sure y'er all crazy.

[Enter several Dutchmen.]

Van. W. Vel den, vat ist dish all bout? Ist dish vat dem calls Know Nothing meetin?

Mike. Arrah! and if I give his cocoa nut a tip wid my sprig, he'll be afther knowing liss.

Mr. Pres. My decision in relation to this matter is that—

Is what? by a number of voices.

No. 1. Who asked for your decision?—we are the judges; the vox populi! the vox populi!

But gentlemen and ladies, am I not your President, and must I not decide?

Voice No. 2. Yes, you are our President; but you must not decide.

What am I then?

No. 1. A thing to be spoken to—to be addressed. Beg pardon—our servant, sir.

Voices. Hear! hear! hear! We are the people, sir—(hear! hear!)—the vox populi, sir—(hear! hear! from the ladies)—it is the people that must decide. (Universal applause.)

Pres. I thought I had the honor to preside over this meeting.

Voice No. 1. Yes, sir, but not of deciding or dictating.

[A gentleman steps forward, with a paper in hand, and cries: Mr. President, a song! a song! A song, a song, is universally called for.]

[Two gentlemen, "Know Nothings," and two ladies, "Women's Rights," come forward and sing, alternately, the following:]

KNOW NOTHINGS.
The nation is in danger,
Haste to the rescue—come!

LADIES.
But 'tis not from a stranger;
We feel it nearer home.

KNOW NOTHINGS.
The Catholics are trying
To trap us in their snare;

LADIES.
And you with priests are vieing
To subjugate the fair.

KNOW NOTHINGS.
The Papists, oh! the Roman;
We fear that foreign yoke;

LADIES.
Our husbands, oh! our foemen,
Their fetters shall be broke.

KNOW NOTHINGS.
They think we cannot govern,
Without some ghostly aid:

LADIES.
Our ladies, East and Southern,
Shall Governors be made.

KNOW NOTHINGS.
No foreigners shall gull us;
Their day of rule is o'er.

LADIES.
The men shall no more fool us;
The ladies take the floor.

KNOW NOTHINGS.
No smiles, or threats, or money,
Shall lead us from our plan.

LADIES.
No more of love and honey,
We'll govern with the man.

KNOW NOTHINGS.
To arms! to arms! then, natives;
Resist the foreign foe.

LADIES.
Unite! unite! then, ladies;
To conquering we go.

KNOW NOTHINGS.
They may dig our wells and prattes,
But to rule us, never—no!

LADIES.
They may wash and nurse the babies,
While we to Congress go.

KNOW NOTHINGS.
We think that we are able
To rule ourselves with ease.

LADIES.
They may cook and wait on table,
While we do as we please.

PRESIDENT.
Since ruling is a notion
In woman, priest, or man,
We'll give to each a portion,
And say rule all you can.

[Scatters more scepters, for which there is a general scramble.]

[Curtain drops.]

VIRTUE consists of our duty in the several relations that we sustain in respect to our fellow-men and to God.

Miscellaneous.

In Debt and out of Debt.

OF what a hideous progeny of ill is debt the father! What meannesses, what invasions on self-respect, what cares, what double dealing! How, in due season, it will carve the frank open face into wrinkles; how like a knife, 'twill stab the honest heart. And then its transformation! How it has been known to change a goodly face into a mask of brass; how, with the "damned custom" of debt, has the true man become a callous trickster! A freedom from debt, and what nourishing sweetness may be found in cold water; what toothsomeness in a dry crust; what ambrosial nourishment in a hard egg! Be sure of it, he who dines out of debt, though his meal be biscuit and an onion, dines in "The Apollo." And then for raiment; what warmth in a threadbare coat, if the tailor's receipt be in your pocket, what Tyrian purple in the faded waistcoat, the vest not owed for; how glossy the well-worn hat if it cover not the aching head of a debtor! Next the home-sweets, the out-door recreation of the free man. The street-door falls not a knell on his heart; the foot on the staircase, though he lives the third pair, sends no spasm through his anatomy; at the rap at his door he can crow forth "come in," and his pulse still beat healthfully, his heart sinks not in his bowels. See him abroad. How confidently, yet how pleasantly he takes the street; how he returns look for look with any passenger; how he saunters; how, meeting an acquaintance, he stands and gossips! But, then, this man knows not debt: debt, that casts a drug into the richest wine; that makes the food of the gods unwholesome, indigestible; that sprinkles the banquets of a Luculles with ashes, and drops soot in the soup of an emperor; debt, that like the moth, makes valueless furs and velvets, enclosing the wearer in a festering prison, (the shirt of Nessus was a shirt not paid for;) debt, that writes upon frescoed walls the handwriting of the attorney; that puts a voice of terror in the knocker; that makes the heart quake at the hunted fire-side: debt, the invisible demon that walks abroad with a man, now quickening his steps, now making him look on all sides like a hunted beast, and now bringing to his face the ashy hue of death, as the unconscious passenger looks glancingly upon him! Poverty is a bitter draught, yet may, and sometimes with advantage, be gulped down. Though the drinker make wry faces, there may after all be a wholesome goodness in the cup. But debt, however covertly it be offered, is the cup of a syren, and the wine, spicy and delicious though it be, as poison. The man out of debt, though with a flaw in his jerkin, a crack in his shoe-leather, and a hole in his hat, is still the son of liberty, free as the singing lark above him; but the debtor, though clothed in the utmost bravery, what is he but a surf out on a holiday—a slave to be reclaimed at any instant by his owner, the creditor? My son, if poor, see wine in the running spring; let thy mouth water at last week's roll; think a threadbare coat the "only wear;" and acknowledge a white-washed garret the fittest housing-place for a gentleman; do this, and flee debt. So shall thy heart be at peace; and the sheriff be confounded.—[Douglas Jerold, in "Heads of the People."

A Chinese Funeral.

THE Chinese who were killed by the late steamboat explosion in California, were buried with their national ceremonies, which are thus described by a Sacramento paper:

During the progress of the services, as above, the Chinese were engaged in yielding the last tribute of respect to their deceased countrymen in another part of the ground.

The ceremonies practised on the decease of a person in China vary in different parts of the country, though they are not necessarily elaborate or expensive anywhere, and all the important ones can be performed by the poorest. The inhabitants of one part of the empire put a piece of silver in the mouth of the dying person, and carefully cover his nose and ears. Scarcely is he dead, when they make a hole in the roof to facilitate the exit of the spirits proceeding from his body, of which they imagine each person po ssesses seven animal senses, which die with him, and three souls, one of which enters elysium and receives judgment; another bides with the tablet, which is set by the side of the body by the priest, and the third dwells with the tomb. Yesterday while the services were going on in English, the Chinese, not far off, were performing the last sad offices over fifteen corpses of their countrymen. At every grave incense sticks were smoking and red candles burning, while the friends of the departed came one by one to the foot of the grave and placing their hands together bowed their bodies forward several times.

In a central place among the graves a large quantity of edibles were laid out and arranged in order—a whole roast hog, piles of cakes, a large platter of cooked rice, sweetmeats, pickles and wine. In front of these viands stood a Chinese attired in the habiliments of a native priest, beating time with two steel plates, and in measured tones chanting prayers for the repose of the dead. Just opposite the person thus officiating could be observed a small, short stake, to the end of which was a paper streamer, on which was written in hieroglyphics a charm, as it is their custom on funeral occasions. With prayers for the dead, the officiating individual mingled simple quotations from the Chinese religious books. Many came to the graves and threw into them gilt paper and cards. At several places could be observed piles of paper cut into small squares, with a square gilt spot in the center of each sheet. All these were set on fire, the survivors supposing that the smoke transmits them into hades, that they there turn into celestial money and go into the hands of the departed, and by them are used to bear their expenses in the other world. During all these funeral services, there was a native band of Chinese music, which played their national airs according to their home usages.

It was a rare sight, and at once flattering to the liberality of our institutions, to see there assembled on common ground the Christian and the Pagan, each acknowledging the sacred character of the departed, and manifesting, according to their peculiar tenets, respect for their memory and worth. This unusual circumstance, together with the large number of new-made graves and coffined bodies, and the immense crowd of persons in attendance, contributed to render the occasion one of sad and singular interest.

Sleep.

A GERMAN Physiologist has made some instructive remarks on sleep, in connection with the position of the sun. He says that "the period of twenty-four hours, produced by the revolution of the earth on its axis, marks its influence most definitely on the physical economy of man. Diseases show this regular influence, in their daily rise and fall. Settled regular fevers exhibit a twenty-four hours flux and reflux. In the healthful state there is manifest the same regular influence, and the more habitual our meals, exercise, employment, and hours of sleep, the more power is there in the system to resist disease. In the morning the pulse is slower, and the nerves more calm, and the mind and the body better fitted for every description of labor. As we advance toward the evening of the day, the pulse quickens and becomes feverish. But the regular midnight rest and sleep, carried off this fever by healthful respiration. He thinks this evening fever is not entirely owing to the accession of new chyle to the system, but also to the departure of the sun, and the light. The crisis of this fever ought to take place about midnight, when the sun is in its nadir, so that refreshing sleep might prepare the body for morning labor. Those therefore, who push this crisis into the morning by keeping late hours, waste their strength and sow the seeds of disease which will spring up sooner or later. By a disregard of these facts and principles, nervous people wear themselves out in a comparitively short time. The early part of the night is wasted in wakeful excitement, the crisis is pushed forward towards the morning—the body enters upon the business of the following day unrefreshed—the nervous system is enervated in the general waste of strength, and a fretful mind is a true index of the injury inflicted upon the whole man."

ADVICE, like snow, the softer it falls, the longer it dwells upon, the deeper it sinks into the mind.

Inalienable Rights of Americans.

THE following are not enumerated in the Declaration of Independence:

To know any trade or business without apprenticeship or experience.

To marry, without any regard to fortune, state of health, position, or opinion of parents or friends.

To have wife and children dependent on the contingencies of business, and in case of sudden death, leave them wholly unprovided for.

To put off upon hireling strangers, the literary, moral and religious education of children.

To teach children no good trade, hoping they will have, when they grow up, wit enough to live on the industry of other people.

To enjoy the general sympathy when made bankrupt by reckless speculations.

To cheat the government if possible.

To hold office without being competent to discharge its duties.

To build houses with nine and six-inch walls, and to go to the funerals of tenants, firemen and others, killed by their fall, weeping over the mysterious dispensations of Providence.

To build up cities and towns without parks, and calling pestilence a visitation of God.—[New York Daily News.

A very laughable scene took place in one of the London theatres soon after the great battle of Waterloo. A dramatic representation of that world-renowned engagement was in the course of representation: a great number of sailors had been hired by the manager to represent the English and French forces, but they utterly refused to be Frenchmen; they wouldn't put on the enemy's jackets at any price; so that the manager had to procure landamen to represent Napoleon's army. In one part of the play the English forces were to run from the French; but instead of this, they stood their ground, and actually pitched all the French army into the orchestra among the fiddlers!

The "recusants" were brought up before a magistrate, when one of them made this amusing defence:

"You see, Bill Sykes, and I, and Joe Brown, and six more, was the British army, and opposite us was some six or eight land-lubbers a-hacting the Mounseers. The skipper of the show-folks told us when we'd squibbed off our muskets over the Mounseers' heads, to turn and run away from the French. In course, this here was hard work for Jack tars as had sarved their country for twenty years, to be told to run away from half a dozen land-lubbers pretending to be French.

"Well, it warn't no use o' kickin' up a row then (this was at a rehearsal!), but at night Bill Sykes and I argufied the matter over a pot of 'af-and-'af, and we concluded not to disgrace our flag, but to stand up for the honor of Old England!

"Well, when the scrimmage began, the land-lubbers called out, 'Retreat! retreat! Why don't you retreat!'

"'See you shot first!' says I.

"They come at us, and Bill Sykes, in slewing round to guard his starn, slipped on a piece of orange peel, missed stays, and come down plump on his beam-ends. One of the imitation Parleywoos made a grab to cuptivate Bill, when, in course, I covered my friend, and accommodated the sham Mounseer with a h'ist as didn't agree with him. He was one o' them mutton-fed chaps as can't stand much, for he landed among the fiddlers, and squealed blue murder!

"Well, arter a row begins, you never know nothin' till it's over. Bill Sykes and I cleared out the French army in less than no time, and then we tipped the player-folks a broadside, and took their powder magazine prisoner. The cabin passengers (the pit!) and Bill and I got surrounded; but if I'd had a bagnet at the end of my musket, I'd ha' cleared the decks like winkin'!"

AN orator holding forth in favor of "woman—dear divine," concluded in this wise:

"Oh, my hearers, depend upon it, nothing beats a good wife."

"I beg your pardon," replied an auditor, a "bad husband does."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1855.

The Signs of the Times.

WE are living, at the present, in an important age; a time that is big with events; when matters of the greatest interest to men and nations are passing before us, in the world's panorama; revolution, change and disorder is written conspicuously everywhere. China, that is said to contain a population of nearly one-half the world's inhabitants, has been and is convulsed from centre to circumference, and three hundred and fifty hundred thousand people, thrown into confusion, and their armies brought into collision; and although their art of killing may not be so refined and scientific as some of the more civilized, yet being equal in genius, talent, prowess and tact, the results must be equally disastrous, and their plots and counterplots, advancing and retreating, must be ruinous in the extreme, plunging the country in misery, and entailing all the horrors of a falsely called "civil war."

Europe, that has enjoyed comparative peace for the last forty years, presents a picture at the present time that is anything but pleasing. England and France united with Turkey in opposition to Russia, threatening to drag along with them the whole of the European nations into the vortex of perhaps one of the most bloody wars that the world ever saw. Already talent, genius, wealth and science have been brought into contact, on the most gigantic scale; what are termed civilized nations have been brought together in the most deadly combat, exhausting all the strategy, talent, science and prowess of some of the most refined nations of the earth, and yet with the greatest forensic talent, national jurisprudence, diplomatic skill, and the power of arms combined, they have been unable to effect a reconciliation; compromise has ceased, the scabbard thrown away, and the alarum of war is sounded throughout the length and breadth of Europe. It is true they are not all engaged; but how soon they may be, is to all a matter of uncertainty. The relative position of one nation to another is so peculiar that it is very difficult, when the leading nations are convulsed, for the others to resist being drawn into the maelstroom. This partially rests with Prussia and Austria, and partly not; for the Russians and Allies may put them in such a position, with aggression and intrigue, that they cannot well avoid it. Should they yield the lesser States and nations must necessarily follow; and then comes one of the most bloody scenes that the world has ever witnessed. If Sebastopol is taken, what then? Does this end the strife? Verily, no; this is but the beginning of sorrows. We need not here refer to South America, Mexico and Central America; these are only small matters when compared with the foregoing. In Europe alone near two millions of men might be brought into deadly combat, assisted by the best talent and the most refined modern implements of warfare. Already England and France have met with the most signal disasters, and thousands of widows and orphans mourn; and where, a little while ago, joy and hilarity abounded, bereavement, gloom, sorrow, mourning, and all the concomitants of war stalk in silent terror through the land, mutely but solemnly pointing to Inkermann, Alma and Balaklava, pestilence and war; and should you dare ask the spectre why do you mourn in heavy sepulchral tones, you would hear, Crimea—Crimea—Crimea: while in France you would hear the widows moan, the orphans lament, and the brothers and sisters wail, My brother! my brother! my poor husband and children! Nor can la gloire de la France, nor the glory of England, stem the upgushings of the bereaved heart; the silent, lonely, heart felt moans of the disconsolate mourners.

Nor is this all; England appears to be tottering with old age, and like many other ancient powerful dynasties, seems to be in her decadence; the prestige of her former prowess seems to have departed, and like some old man insulted by an adversary, forgetting his feebleness and infirmity, with an active mind and a knowledge of his former prowess, rushes into the strife, and being repulsed, says, "Ah, I forgot; my spirit is vigorous, but my poor body is feeble." A question naturally arises, is England fit for the present crisis? She has not proven herself so to the present. Her nobility seem to be losing caste, and a strong effort is being made to tear from them the last shreds of their aristocracy. She is humbling herself before France, is losing her ancient prestige, and unless some sudden revulsion takes place, will stand weakened and humbled before the world. The world only honor those that can hold their position; when they cannot, like the sick Hindoo they are cast into the Ganges or deserted.

France is, at the present, an enigma; subject to revolution and change; she is comparatively flourishing, but a faux pas may decapitate her Emperor, and plunge her into revolution and anarchy. Turkey is fallen; her glory is departed; and being already roasted, she must either be swallowed by Russia, or be carved up and eaten by the other powers; not perhaps nominally, but really; her independence is gone for ever.

Among all these squabbles, what are we doing? Party strife is running to a fearful height, and who can tell where it will stop? The Cuba filibustering operations are for the present lulled; but it is only the ominous calm before the storm. Insidious plans are in operation to vex this nation, and create difficulties between us and Spain. Know-Nothingism, that seemed at one time to be taking a prominent stand, is evidently on the wane. The strong anti-slavery proclivities of the North can never unite with the fierce pro-slavery feeling of the South; unless this principle is given up, they never can unite on national principles; and if they felt ever so well disposed, can effect no good. The breach between the North and South is getting wider and wider; recent Kansas moves, coupled with the rabid abolition demonstrations in Massachusetts and other States, are hastening things to a crisis, and men seem to be as regardless of the blessings of our institutions, constitution, the Union, and liberty, as though they were casting lots for apples, or turning up a card for the first deal. And men that ought to be the fathers of our nation would barter all for which our fathers died, and would plunge the most free, liberal and enlightened nation in the world in all the horrors of civil war; ruthlessly tear down the most magnificent temple of liberty the world ever saw; entail upon millions of their posterity incalculable misery, and leave a name to be execrated and damned throughout time; and for what? Merely to gratify a little, narrow, mean, sectional, perverse spirit. We have seen an article in Wednesday's Daily News on this subject that we cannot help but admire; it is bold, clear and energetic.

We may now ask, why do these things take place? We believe that the Lord is confusing the nations, and darkness is covering the minds of the people because of their wickedness, pride, and corruption; He is withdrawing his spirit from them, and leaving them to their own destruction; He has told us that He would "vex the nations of the earth," that there should be "wars, pestilence, famine," and "a fearful looking for of things that are coming on the earth." Men have forsaken God, and He is forsaking them. Our politics are confused, our religion is confused, spiritualism, and other isms, prevail, uncertainty and Babylon seem to be stamped on everything, and who can tell the end? We intend to notice spiritualism, and some of these other things, separately, and must conclude for the present by saying "it is impossible but that offences come; but woe to that man by whom they come." We say to men engaged in these present incendiary movements, Beware! The history of all past nations echoes BEWARE!! and could the shades of your ancient fathers speak, they would speak in a voice of ten thousand thunders, Beware how ye desecrate the Temple of Freedom, and barter away the rich gem of liberty for which we struggled and died.

The Present Position of Austria.

ON Tuesday, April 24, in the British House of Lords, the following took place after some inquiries into the Vienna negotiations by the Earl of Malmesbury:

The Earl of Hardwicke said, there was one point on which the noble Earl had not given the House any information—he meant as to the position in which Austria was placed at the present moment. She was placed very much in the position of parties in the other House occasionally, who were ready to play the game either on one side or the other as circumstances might dictate. Her position was, indeed, one of great eminence, dignity and power, in having placed herself in possession of two great provinces, with her armies on the frontier of Russia, and in which she might hold language that would enable her to receive the support of France as against Russia on the one side, and the support of Russia as against France and England on the other. (Hear.) The country was looking with the deepest anxiety to this point, and he should be glad to know what information the Government now had with respect to the prospects of the war in connexion with the part to be played by that great and important Power?

The Earl of Clarendon—I am afraid I cannot give a very distinct answer to the question which my noble friend has put. Your lordships are well aware of what are the terms of the treaty to which Austria agreed on the 2d of December last with Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the Emperor of the French, and I have no reason to think that Austria will depart from the terms of that agreement. I can only say that on Friday last Austria appears to have held precisely the same language as the representatives of England, France and Turkey to the Russian plenipotentiaries, and your lordships will remember that it is only on peace not being made on the bases laid down in the treaty, that Austria is to be called on to concert measures for carrying these stipulations into execution. That time has not yet arrived, and therefore it is quite impossible for me to say what precise course Austria will take. (Hear, hear.)

The subject then dropped.

The London Times states that "as Austria has adhered throughout to the views and propositions of the Western Powers, and as she has already made herself a party to formal treaties with the belligerent States, announcing an irrevocable determination completely to unite her own efforts with theirs until their common object is entirely attained (these are the words of the treaty with France and England), it is impossible that she should ignore or repudiate these engagements without renouncing her own position in Europe, and acting in direct opposition to all the arguments she has herself addressed to Prussia and the other German States. To subside into the Prussian system of neutrality, after having followed the opposite line of policy to the very verge of hostilities, would be an act of such supreme inconsistency and absurdity that it must instantly expose the Court of Vienna to all the consequences of a moral defeat both in Germany and in Europe."

This may be all very good; but as nations are no more notorious for honesty than individuals, it may be quite possible that Austria may take another view of the case, and that she may choose policy to fidelity. The Austrian Ministers seem to be extremely apprehensive of the danger and chances of a war. Austria and Russia are not very good friends. In case of difficulty, could the Allies help her, should Prussia unite with Russia? It is extremely doubtful, for the whole of their available force is already engaged in the Crimea. Diplomacy would suit Austria better than war; particularly when we reflect upon the position of her Germanic confederates. If that will not longer do—which we are very doubtful that the Allies will admit of—an armed neutrality would be the thing she would go in for next: war is the last. The question is, can she escape it?

White Indians.

A WRITER in the Mariposa Chronicle, furnishes the following description of the village and surrounding country inhabited by the tribe of white Indians beyond the Sierra Navadas, about which so much has been formerly said by other writers.

If the writer had given us the local of these Indians, it would have been more satisfactory. We have heard a great deal said about white Indians; but have never seen anything, as yet, satisfactory in relation to this matter. There is an account among some of the old archives, in Wales, that a party got drifted away from the land and that some of their party returned and reported a land similiar to America, some time before Columbus discovered this continent; from which some of those "Ancient Britons" profess to have priority of Elwin to the great discoverer. So strongly is Captain Dan Jones impressed with this idea then when in Salt Lake City, he made some voyages of discovery to see if he could not find these remnants of his nation. Captain Jones is a Welshman. The Welsh are the original Britons, and speak a language peculiar to themselves. It may be the language refered to in the following. We give it as we find it, we think it will be interesting to some of our Welsh friends:

"This village is pleasantly and romantically situated in a beautiful and rich valley; guarded on either side by lofty and precipitous bluffs, which, from the evergreens growing upon their borders in variegated colors, present a singularly picturesque appearance. The mountains and table land adjacent are thickly studded with magnificent and lofty pines, cedars and oaks; while in the valley, dressed in her richest and rarest colors, Flora reigns supreme. We were greatly surprised upon entering the village to observe the taste and utility displayed in its construction. The streets were very regularly laid out in a circular form, shaded by trees resembling in appearance the magnolia. The houses are partly Grecian in style, and of very good workmanship. That occupied by the Chief, or King, certainly would reflect honor upon a more enlightened people. It is a gigantic structure, built in the form of a pyramid, and surrounded by a succession of corridors rising one above the other. Upon the railing of each corridor—which is grooved for the admission of earth—are cultivated the most beautiful and fragrant flowers, so arranged that at a short distance the palace resembles an immense boquet. The people seem to have great respect for their Chief, who is a venerable man of about sixty. We were received and entertained by him during our stay in the village, with the warmest and most profuse hospitality. A part of his suite was delegated to accompany us in our inspection of the village and surrounding scenery. In truth, so much attention was lavished upon us, that at times I was almost induced to believe that a surveillance was placed upon our movements.

"We were told that the valley extended nearly to the desert, but that a view of its entrance was obscured by hills of sand. Of the origin of this people I could learn but little reliable. They have a tradition, however, which may shed some light upon the subject. It is that their fathers came from across the great waters; they were visiting, as was their custom annually, a neighboring nation, when they were driven by a gale from the land. The gale continued with terrible force for a number of days, driving them rapidly to the east. After enduring fear, hunger and thirst, until they were driven to despair, they came in sight of land. This land proved to be inhabited by savages, by whom they were taken into the interior and held as slaves. Soon after, a plague appeared among the Indians, which made fearful ravages. The Indians were made to believe that it was a judgment upon them for enslaving the white men, and they were accordingly liberated. Their fathers then established themselves in the valley which they now occupy. They were evidently of Asiatic origin; in stature they very much resemble the Hungarians, and talk a language very similar. I have thought it possible that they have sprung from the nation mentioned by Kossuth as inhabiting the interior of Asia."

More Emigrants.

WE learn the following from the Squatter Sovereign, of May 1: The Golden State arrived at our wharf last Friday, and put off a large number of Salt Lake emigrants. This is the third detachment that has arrived at Atchison this season, and others are soon to follow. The camps of the emigrants, just back of the town, presents a city-like appearance, their tents leaving streets, alleys, &c., between them. The health of the emigrants is good, with but little or no sickness among them. Those who were indisposed when first landed have regained their accustomed health, and are now congratulating themselves on being landed at so healthy a point. All speak well of this place, and endorse it as a most desirable outfitting and starting point.

Capture of Baker.

SOME time ago a great excitement existed in this city in consequence of the murder of the notorious Bill Poole, at Stanwix Hall. Several men were taken on the occasion. One of the principal actors in the tragedy, Louis Baker, who is charged, after Poole was down, with putting a pistol to his breast and shooting him through the heart, escaped. It was supposed that he had left New York in the brig Isabella Jewett, for the port of Palmos, Grand Canary Island. On the 18th of March the Grapeshot, Capt. Hepburn, started in pursuit, with eight officers on board, which arrived at the Island before the Isabella, and being on the look-out boarded the Isabella before her arrival in port, took Baker prisoner, and brought him to this place Tuesday evening last. On his arrival he was immediately conveyed to the Tombs.

THE editor of the Portland Argus, who is at present Secretary of Legation at London, writes home to that paper that the French Emperor, during his recent visit to England, received our Minister, Mr. Buchanan, with marked civility, and expressed the hope that America and France might always be at peace.

Conference Minutes.

A CONFERENCE of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, met at Philadelphia on the 6th of April, 1855.

Present, Elders JOHN TAYLOR, JETER CLINTON, S. WOOLLY, T. COLBURN, B. TROS, from the valley; and the whole of the officers of the Philadelphia Branch.

Conference called to order by President TAYLOR.

Prayer by Elder WOOLLY.

President TAYLOR then arose and said that he was happy to meet with the Elders and Brethren in this place, and at this time. It was a time, when the Saints were assembled in various parts of the earth, to preach, pray, commune and to consult upon matters, and transact business partaining to the Kingdom of God; and that whilst we were united here thousands were assembled, in the valleys of the mountains, the Zion of our God; as well as in Europe, and different parts of the earth, to offer up their oblations, to join in songs of thanksgivings and praise, and their voices mingle with ours in a united pæon of Halleluia! and thousands of overflowing hearts, on various parts of the earth, burst forth in loud hozannas to the God of Israel. It was pleasant to reflect upon these things and to join our songs with theirs. The 6th of April and the 6th of October, were the two semi-annual times on which those conferences were held. On these occasions the general church business, associated with the various districts, were the conferences were held, was transacted; and in the valley church business was transacted on these occasions for all the world. It was a time when everything was laid before the people, and when that part of the Government of God, the voice of the people, was brought to bear in all its force, throughout the world.

Who, under the face of the whole heavens has more cause of rejoicing then we have? and what saint is there who understands his true position before God, and his relationship to his kingdom, whose heart does not swell with gratitude and praise to the most high when he reflects, that God has in our day set up a standard, established his kingdom, revealed himself from the heavens, and restored the everlasting gospel, in all its fullness, richness; its blessings, glory and power? And that we are made the happiest participators of these blessings. The night of gloom has passed with us; the keys of the kingdom are restored; the day has dawned upon us; the curtains of heaven are withdrawn; the visions of eternity developed, the past, the present, the future, is ours; we are the Lords; and while fools and ignoramuses scoff, we know that we are based upon the rock of ages; the light of eternal truth beams upon our minds; we lean upon the arms of Jehovah, and through the rich blessings of the everlasting gospel, are seeking to lay a foundation for ourselves and posterity, that shall outlive time, and endure through eternal ages. Paul understood something of this principal when he said "All are ours, whether they are principalities, or powers, or thrones, or dominions; or things present, or things to come; all are ours, and we are Christs, and Christ is Gods."

Possessed of those rich blessings, it is necessary for us to impart them to others, and to use all diligence; not merely to clear our own garments, but actually to seek out and benefit the human family. I wish you elders to seek out places in this city and round about; and the saints to open their houses for preaching and prayer meetings, and to invite your neighbors to attend, and to use all diligence, and then you are justified. Neither does it matter whether many or few are converted, if you are faithful and do your duty; that rests with the Lord and them that hear. Here is Elder Woolley who has been in India, and also other elders who have traveled 20,000 miles and upwards; who have battled with almost insuperable difficulties, who have not baptized a twentieth part that others have who have been all the time among their friends, and well cared for; is not their work as acceptable as others before the Lord? I tell you it is. And I know by the spirit that is in Bro. Woolley that he is a good man; and I tell him that his work is accepted, and bless him in the name of the Lord. I can appreciate the difficulties that he and his brethren have labored under; and they shall have their reward. I am glad they have returned in peace and safety. In regard to the world I feel that I am made free by the gospel. I have no favors to ask of them, and am just as independent of them as they are of me, and so are you. I am satisfied with my religion, and wish to live in it and die in it; I do not wish to deceive myself, and wish to fulfil all its requirements.

I want to try if you are one with me and the church. I am going to call upon you to pay tithing, and this will prove whether your hearts are in the work of God or not. It is a thing that has been attended to for years in this church, they have lately adopted it in St. Louis; I wish to know whether you are one with your brethren; some have inquired of me about this matter, who have paid their property tithing; I will lay it before you, as I understand it. The law of tithing demands one tenth of a mans time and increase. I lay this thing before you, it is for you to say whether you will adopt it or not. I shall publish it, however, as the duty of the saints. I am not interested in it more than you are. I know that some suppose that we get it. This is a mistake. It is used for building Temples, and for Church purposes. I will put all in my eye that I ever got, and so will my brethren. It is an order that was established among the saints of God in former ages; among other things this has been restored in these days. Why do we build temples in this day? For the same reason that they were built in former days. For what purpose was Solomon's temple built? Some say to perform Jewish ceremonies in. Yes, and something else. It was built for the purpose of attending to ordinances pertaining to the Gospel, as well as the law; and hence when Jesus came with the Gospel, he whipped the buyers and sellers out of it, as one having authority, and told them that "it was written, my house shall be called a house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves."

That house was built for the reception of Jesus and for the administration of gospel ordinances; and hence when they rejected Jesus and his gospel, the house was thrown down, as useless. He came to deliver them from the bondage of a schoolmaster; to teach them the liberty and the fullness of the gospel. If they had received John and afterwards Jesus, they would have received endowments in that house; they would have been baptized for the dead and attended to many gospel ordinances in it. But they rejected him, and what then? they themselves were rejected of God. And hence they were told that upon them "should come the blood of all the prophets; from the blood of Abel to the blood of Zachariah who was slain between the porch and the altar;" and why was this? Men generally suppose they have enough to do to atone for their own sins, without being responsible for others. But they are positively informed that the blood of their forefathers shall be required of them. Why is this? Because they had the offer of the gospel; it was their priviledge, not only to save themselves, but to be baptized for the dead and administer ordinances for them; hence they became, not only responsible for their own acts, but also for those that they might have saved; but did not.

Many men talk about the second coming of Jesus. The Scriptures say, "him whom ye seek shall suddenly come to His Temple." Now who has a Temple for him when he comes? nobody but us. It is said, "the mountain of the Lord's House shall be established in the tops of the mountains, and be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow to it." The question necessarily arises, what for? The answer is given. "They shall say, come let us go up to the House of the Lord, and learn of his ways." Why do we build Temples? for the reasons mentioned; why do people flock there? for the same reasons. Are you interested in this matter? If you are, do as we and others have done. We have built some Temples, and we can build more. There is nothing coercive, it is free and voluntary, an offering not to man, but to God; not for another's interest, but for our own. I have no begging to do in this matter, it is not my business, it is yours, I lay it before you as a priviledge, embrace it or reject it as you please. It concerns you, it concerns your progenitors, it concerns your posterity; do as you please; but I know your feelings, they are to do right, to fulfill all requirements, to secure the blessings of the gospel and to be equal with your brethren. I shall, however, call for a vote in this matter, on Sunday, when all are together. My feelings towards you are good, and I say God bless you in the name of Jesus, Amen.

After some remarks from Elder Clinton, Woolley, and others, the Conference adjourned till the 7th. Benediction by Elder TAYLOR.

TO BE CONTINUED.

Salt Lake mail.

WE feel happy in being able to inform our readers that the Salt Lake Mail for April has arrived. We received the announcement on the 8th inst., by a dispatch from our worthy friend T. S. Williams. We may consequently expect the delivery of the Utah Mails at the close of this, or early in the ensuing week.

The following information has been received by Mr. Magraw, mail agent in private letters from Leavenworth, Kansas Territory. We copy from the Republican:

More Indian Depredations.

INDEPENDENCE, May 9.—The Salt Lake mail is here. It was brought by Mr. Williams of Salt Lake City.

The Indians had driven off the mules from the mail station at Devil's Gate. They had also driven off all the animals of the traders there.

All the people of Sweetwater had left for safety.

These depredations were committed by the Sioux Indians.

All is quiet on this side of Fort Laramie, but the Indians are making threats.

The party of Mr. Williams was not interrupted; it consisted of fifteen, and they traveled only in the night time.

Mr. Magraw is taking energetic steps to have the mail carried with regularity. He will accomplish it unless prevented by the Indians.

The April and May outward mails were met in good condition.

Departure for the Plains.

On Tuesday, the 8th inst., we shipped a goodly number of Saints on the Golden State, bound for Atchison, under the Presidency of Elder John Clegg, to be assisted by Elders Worley and Burgess.—Isaiah Coombs was appointed clerk of the company. This company was composed, principally, of old members of the St. Louis branch, who have labored diligently and faithfully to roll forward the cause of righteousness during our acquaintence with them, and we feel to bless them in the name of the Lord.

We shipped the same day, on the Polar Star, about one hundred and fifty of the Siddon's company, under the Presidency of Elders Parson and Ferguson. Both companies are bound, this season, for the Valley. We trust they will be blessed and preserved, that they may escape the power of the destroyer, and arrive safely at the great gathering place of the last days.—[St. Louis Luminary.

FORTY-FIVE miles of the Galveston and Red River railroad have been put under contract, to be finished by the 10th of January. Twenty-five miles of the Galveston, Houston, and Henderson railroad have also been put under contract.

THROUGHOUT Georgia, South Carolina, and Alabama, after the long-protracted drought, copious rains have fallen.

Correspondence.

From our Massachusetts Correspondent.

NEW-BEDFORD, May 2, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

PRESIDENT TAYLOR—Dear Sir: I improve this, the first favorable opportunity, to furnish you a few items of news on matters and things in general, in this section of country. After a very pleasant passage on the Empire State, from New York, to Fall River, thence by cars hither, I find myself in that place so notorious for its Whale Fishing enterprise, New Bedford. I am informed that there are upwards of three hundred sail, mostly ships and barks, belonging to this port, and manned by not less than seven thousand five hundred seamen, engaged in capturing those huge monsters of the deep, the Whale. There are many ships in port that have lately arrived from a cruise of one, two, and three years; having made good or profitable voyages. One can hardly pass along the wharves owing to the large quantity of oil that has lately been landed from the ships. The high price of oil, say for crude sperm $1,70, do whale 70 cts. per gallon, makes the business more lucrative than formally, though they do not get as many whales. The vessels are fitted out entirely by their owners, and the men go on shares; yet there is a vast difference between the share or lay of those skilled in the business, and those more verdant; these shares vary (from the Captain down) from (1-16th to 1-150th) the one-sixteenth to the one hundred and fiftieth of the oil obtained. Among the ships now in port, engaged in this business, I recognise a number that I used to see some ten or fifteen years ago in the merchant service; in fact, a large proportion of the vessels engaged in the whaling service, have already seen the best of their days while transporting from land to land, and sea to sea, the various commodities of the Nations: but now having lost the pride of youth, and the ambition of middle age, they have condescended in their dotage to become the receptacles of those greasy monsters. Among the seamen engaged in this business, there are a large share of foreigners, and particularly Portugues from the Western Islands, who having been brought up in the neighborhood of these big fish, have formed a sort of alliance or attachment, which renders them peculiarly adapted to mingle in the sports of the chase of these sea kings, whom they both love and fear; and while philosophising on the subject I have thought it probable, that their pedigree might be traced back to Father Jonah. I will leave this however to the knowing ones, and fearing to trespass too much on the patience of your readers with this fish story I close, and subscribe myself as ever, your Brother in the Gospel, ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

BOSTON, May 11, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: You will perceive by the above that I am again on my old stamping ground. I arrived here yesterday from New Bedford, and hasten to give you a few items of the many that interest the public at the present time. Governor Gardner, to whom was presented the address of both branches of the Legislature of Massachusetts, for the removal of E. G. Loring from the office of Judge of Probate for the county of Suffolk, yesterday presented his reply to that body. You will remember that the bill to address the Governor for the removal of Loring, passed the legislative ordeal by a very large majority, in both houses; thus placing the Governor in a very unpopular position should he fail to grant the requirements of the address. Yet, notwithstanding the temptation of popularity set before him, and that too by his own party, he has dared to stand up in his place (to his honor be it said) and vindicate and sustain principle at the expense of self-interest and party clique, by refusing to grant a requirement that would have capped the climax of one of the greatest political monstrosities of the nineteenth century.

His address, which appeared in the city papers this morning, though somewhat lengthy, is of a plain common sense character, which does credit to its author; the following is a few extracts.

* * * * * * *

But granting, for the purpose of further consideration, that the intention of the framers of our Constitution was to authorize, for any cause or for no cause, the removal of any or all of our Judges by address of the Legislature to the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Executive Council, I now proceed to examine in that light the present case.

Either this clause authorizes removal only for an act of Providence, there being no guilt or ground for impeachment, or it authorizes it at any and all times, without limitation, for cause or without cause. If the latter view is correct, and if such unlimited power is clearly given, the justice of using that power in the case of Judge Loring is the only question to be considered.

It is not alleged that Judge Loring has committed any crime against the laws of the United States or of Massachusetts. It is not alleged that he is rendered unfit for the performance of the duties of his office by insanity, physical incapacity, or any other visitation of Providence. This case, then, is the first during three-quarters of a century where it has been proposed to use this alleged constitutional power. This is to be a precedent by which our judicial officers are to be placed in the same category with postmasters under the general, and sheriffs under the State government, to be removed with every change of the ruling party.

Judge Story said, in the Convention of 1820, speaking of the very passage under consideration, "The first instance of removal would establish a practice which would never be departed from, of shifting the whole court with every change of the party in power." That which most degrades modern politics, which most corrupts public morals, and prevents the best men from consenting to take offices of emolument, is the custom, that long and constant precedents hardly palliate, but which has grown now to become almost a necessity, the removal of honest and faithful public officers to make room for the friends and supporters of the victorious party.

There is no official action that so disgusts a high-minded man as this now necessary practice of removal. I would not be the first to introduce it even in respect to the most unimportant offices. When, then, I am solicited to perform an act which may be construed as inaugurating this custom for a precedent during all time, as regards the judiciary, that body concerning whom the Bill of Rights declares "that it is essential to the rights of every individual, his life, liberty, property and character, that there be an impartial interpretation of the laws and administration of justice," and that "it is the right of every citizen to be tried by judges as free, impartial and independent as the lot of humanity will admit," is it strange that I recoil from the task with distrust and alarm!

* * * * * * *

To the allegation that Judge Loring has shocked the popular sentiment of Massachusetts, it may be pertinent to ask what the duty of judges is. Are they to expound the laws as made by the law-making power, or are they to construe them in accordance with popular sentiment? When the time arrives that a judge so violates his oath of office, so to shape his decisions according to the fluctuations of popular feeling, we become a government not of laws, but of men.

* * * * * * *

If we are so to hold, are we not digging a pitfall into which the most salutary enactments passed by the Legislature this winter may at some future time be hurled with all who cling to their constitutionality and expediency? It can hardly be denied that such is a fair and just illustration of the tendency of this policy, for it must be remembered that but five years ago the votes and voice of Massachusetts in both houses of Congress were given to the passage of the very statute under which Judge Loring acted.

Would it be more strange if within a few years alien hands should control our State government, and bring this precedent for removing those from judicial office, who, in obedience to a law which has but just now received your sanction, should refuse to aid in naturalizing a foreigner in the Courts of Massachusetts?

For these reasons, maturely considered, but hastily written, and many of which are merely glanced at without being fully developed, I am constrained to respectfully decline acceding to the Address of the two branches of the Legislature, for the removal of Edward Greeley Loring from the office of Judge of Probate for the county of Suffolk.

HENRY J. GARDNER.

Notwithstanding the interest occasioned by the negative address of the Governor to the Legislature, there is another source of aliment for the public maw, which takes the precedence at the present time among the numerous dishes served up by the Know Nothing cooks. It is no less than the Legislature hissing at Mr. Hiss, and Mr. Hiss hissing back. This hissing business occupied the house most of the day yesterday, and last night (which was more appropriate to the subject) until two and a half o'clock A. M. The pending motion before the house (recommended by the committee of investigation on the Lowell affair), to reject Mr. Hiss from the house, called forth from him those desperate efforts common to men struggling against elements over which they have lost control, and which threaten speedily to overwhelm them. It appears from evidence that Mr. Hiss is the man who struck Mrs. Patterson, and that Mrs. Patterson, probably the wife of the notorious Billy Patterson, is the person struck.

But the fact that Mr. Hiss indulged his quarreling propensity at the expense of government, is even more than some of the Know Nothings can tamely submit to. The efforts of Mr. Hiss to prove that there were other doors nearer to his No. 12, than was No. 13, occupied by Mrs. Patterson, and that all his good offices performed, were due from legislative gentlemen, was no go. The bill to reject him from the house as a disgrace to the same was passed by a large majority. So far so good. But the passage of a motion to strike out that portion of Mr. Hiss's memorial, that implicates others in the same fix as himself, savors a little too much of the Pharisaical order of things to pass unnoticed by those few yet left among men that are not afraid of the light, that shows unfavorably those only whose works are in the dark. The Times of this evening is out in a leading article condemning in unqualified terms the actions of the Legislature in the Hiss affair, and says an exposition of the whole proceeding will be forthcoming through the Times, probably Saturday evening. Then follows a short article, over the signature of Mr. Hiss, which was presented to the house on the evening of his expulsion, complaining of the bad treatment he has received from the Legislature, and says if this proscriptive course is continued he must fall, and if so, he hopes he "shall be the last, as he is the first in Massachusetts, who was ever deprived of his rights and privileges without trial and hearing." So the world wags on. Yours truly,

ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

HISTORIAN'S OFFICE,
G. S. L. CITY, Feb. 27, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

SIR, I resume my monthly correspondence with you according to promise.

A detachment of the U. S. troops have been sent south by Col. Steptoe, to arrest the Indians who murdered Capt. Gunnison, Kanoska, the Pahvante Chief, having agreed to deliver them up.

I am informed that on the death of Walker, the Utah Chief, in addition to the other victims which I enumerated in my last, who were slain as sacrifice, that a Piede boy prisoner was immured in a large hole in the earth, and left there to starve to death; no one being suffered to go near him.

In prosecuting my labor as Historian, I have succeeded in throwing together several splendid discourses by Joseph Smith, partly from the journal of Dr. Willard Richards, and partly from that of Elder Woodruff: these discourses will appear in the chain of history.

A discourse was delivered by President Brigham Young, on Sunday the 18th inst., shewing the position of this people in reference to the general Government, which will be found in this weeks news.

The Polysophical Institution, at Elder Lorenzo Snow's, is moving along, day schools are commencing, and evening classes have been organized. Their library is increasing in bulk, and altogether it promises to be a very useful institution.

A society has been formed for the study and practice of vocal and instrumental music; it may be well for our musical brethren on their gathering here to think of this; and bring suitable music along with them. This association takes the name of the "DESERET PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY," and Elder James Smithies is their President.

The members of Capt. Ballo's Band, aided by some liberal subscriptions from their friends, are about to erect a Music Hall.

I am told a preparatory meeting is to be held to-morrow evening, to arrange for the organization of a Theological Society.

The health of the President has been rather poor lately, but he is improving in that respect daily, and has been out to-day with his counsellors, examining the foundation of the Temple, which is again making rapid progress, after about a fortnight's delay for want of lime.

The Endowment House is now being plastered; the Presidency also visited that to-day, as well as the works on the new Tabernacle for large gatherings of the Saints, such as Conferences, &c.

Dr. Garland Hurst, our new India Agent, has been out with Elder D. B. Huntingdon, among the Utah Indians, and found them very friendly. They have not yet elected their new Chief, but most likely Ar-ra-peen will be chosen; he is a pretty good Indian, and a man of good parts. Dr. Hurst seems determined to do all the good he can, and manifests a good and gentlemanly spirit.

They have commenced to make the road North of the city, by cutting two immense ditches across the swamp; they have lowered the Hot Spring two feet, and made a good road across its outlet. Considerable earth fencing has been made this winter, for pasturage, and preparatory to farming operations this Spring. Good progress has also been made on the city creek waste ditch, on North Temple street.

Yours truly,

GEO. A. SMITH.

Hindoo Castes—How Lost—How Redeemed—Curious Customs—Sincerity in their Religion—Their Belief in God—Complexion—Size—Marriages, &c.

CENTERVILLE, Del., May 1, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: Agreeable to promise in my last, I now resume my pen in continuation of my narrative relative to the natives of the East Indias.

There are offences committed by some, by which they lose their caste; but they can recover them again by passing through certain punishments. There are various little acts which will cause this loss; such as to drink out of a cup, after it had been used by a Christian, or to eat anything that had been on a Christian table, or in his or her hand, either would be sufficient; or if a white man should accidentally touch one of their chattas with his cane, it would not do for them to wear again, and if they happened to have their connah in it, the whole must be thrown away and paid for by the white man. I can speak of this from experience, for I had to pay for one lot myself through an accident of this kind, and had they eaten it, although the stick was about five feet long, it would have broken their caste. The English law requires every one to pay for anything they pollute. There are many ways, but it would be needless to mention all.

There are certain ones of whom you can buy their castes for a short, or long time. For instance if you want a wet nurse, you have in the first place to buy her caste, and then give her a good salary per month besides. You might say an individual ought to have a good price for their religion, if it was a good one. The price varies from twenty to one hundred rupees.

At the expiration of the contract they (the natives) have to buy it back, which is done by making quite a feast, and inviting all her relatives and near acquaintances, with their Padre (priest), and making him presents, &c., &c. They have singing and dancing on the occasion, after this is over she has her caste or religion as before, but it has cost her about all her caste-money by the time she gets through with her feast, presents, etc.

Others have to pass through a more severe punishment to theirs. I saw two men who had made themselves cripples for life, in order to recover theirs. One had held his arm upright until it became stationary; had closed his hand so that his finger nails pierced through his hands and come out at the back.

Another man had his arm or wrist laid on the back of his neck, and kept in that position until it became immoveable; others hold their foot up against or opposite the thigh until they have no power to remove it; and in this manner will they regain their standing, and from that time out will be supported by their respective casts. They have a notion among them, that if there are not cripple beggars among them, they will not prosper. So in some instances, they will make cripples of their children, in order to have such all the time in their midst. But in some parts, I conceive this entirely unnecessary, as there are plenty who are naturally so; as there there is a disease of the feet and legs which makes cripples by scores of them. It commences by swelling in the foot, and runs up the leg, seldom much above the knee; in some instances the swelling of the ancle is to such an extent, that it entirely covers the foot, and leaves nothing appearing but the toes. It looks awful, but they say it does not pain them until it commences to ulcerate, which often is not for years after its commencement. In some parts this disease is more prevalent than in others. I never heard of a single instance of their being cured.

I would ask where is there a church or people, who would pass through one-half those natives do, for the sake of their religion. They will perform pilgrimages of hundreds, yes thousands of miles to worship, go on foot, and in some instances measure the whole road with their own body, by lying down, then arising and walk their length and lay down again, and so on, and when they arrive at the place throw themselves to be crushed under the wheels of Juggernaut, or make cripples of themselves for life to regain their standing in the church, and for the sake of their religion. This, to be sure, is degrading and wrong; yet, the hireling priests of our enlightened age pretend to say, that if a man is only sincere in his religion, that is quite enough, he will be saved, let him belong to whatever denomination he may. I am certain those natives—as a general thing—are as sincere in their belief, and more so, than many of the so-called Christians.

But will their religion save them in the kingdom of God, with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob? Will it cause them to become "heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ?" Will it enable them to escape the plagues, spoken of by the prophet of old, to be poured out upon the inhabitants of the earth in the latter times? Will it lead them in the "strait and narrow path" to the gates of the celestial mansion of our God and his Christ?

I answer, without fear of successful contradiction; never, No! never in worlds without end; and so it is with the religion of the present day. Men may be honest and sincere in their religion, but to say, that we ever can be saved and exalted with faithful Abraham without doing the works of Abraham and keeping all the commandments of God, would be folly in the extreme, or for a man to think God is a just being, and then say he would allow one man to enter into the Paradise of God, on flowery beds of ease, living in all the pomp and show of the world all their life long, riding in their fine carriages, having their ten thousands a year for teaching and instilling incorrect principals into the minds of the people. While another has to go up "through great tribulation, be a stranger in a strange land, be deprived of everything but life itself, practice and teach correct principles, and do good to all men, and especially to the household of faith," yet both enjoying the same blessing in a world to come. This would be charging God with injustice, and making Him worse than man. Our Saviour says, "it is not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in Heaven." So it will not be by doing wrong sincerely, but it will by doing right honestly that we will get into the Kingdom of God. I presume the rich man who fared sumptuously every day, and let the poor man lay at his gate, without any thing to eat, done it sincerely, but in "hell he lifted up his eyes being in torment" and saw the poor man with faithful Abraham, in the Paradise of God. All the honesty he possessed did not save him from torment. So when men come along and tell a person they can be saved if they are only honest and sincere in their belief, know assuredly that, those men are not sent of God, but of the evil one, for God never will save any one in his sins, but from them. For God is no respector of persons but all who worketh righteousness will be accepted of him. Our Lord says, "he that saith he loveth me and keepeth not my commandments is a liar and the truth is not in him." So I would say to all do not let your hireling priests deceive you by telling you it does not matter whether you keep the commands of God or not so long as you are honest in keeping the commands of men, for the Prophet foretold, that men would "teach for hire, and divine for money," in the last days and instead of teaching for doctrine the commandment of God, "would teach for doctrine the commandments of men;" and thereby "bring upon them swift destruction."

As to the natives, they believe in a God who "dwells in a tabernacle not made with hands." They say "God is a spirit," which is true. They (the Padre) say that they believe God is ommicient and omnipresent. They say they do not worship those mud images, as God himself, but inasmuch as he is every where present and dwells in all things he is in their images, and some seem to think in a double portion, inasmuch as they were built expressly for him to dwell in, and that when they get down before the image they do not worship it but God which is therein. They say they cannot see God himself, so they make something tangable, and in worshiping that they worship the true God, this I had from their own mouth. So I consider their idea of God in some respect, far superior, to that held by some of modern Chistendom. But I have digressed a little from our narative, you will excuse me and I will return.

As to the people they are generally very dark in complexion with straight black hair, and in the lower provinces are rather small boned, but the further you go to the northwest the more athletic they get, they stand and walk upright, they are generally tolerable well formed, they average in highth about the same as the whites. When you get above Lahore and into the Cashmere country, they are large robust men, and the Cashmereans are fair, and white particularly, the females, and while the natives of Bengal, Hindostan, and Scind Provinces practice a plurality of wives, the Cashmereans, have a plurality of husbands. When a woman is handsome she has as many as seven husbands all living at the same time. she is the head of the family. She sets one aside and raises another, at pleasure, and bestows here favors upon one or another as circumstances or their effort to please shall dictate. They are governed to a great extent by beauty of person, and they order the men around as they would children.

I am as ever yours faithfully,

S. A. WOOLLY.

Extracts of a Letter from Elder Andrus.

CAMP OF ISRAEL, near Atchison, K. T.
Sunday, April 29, 1855.

DEAR BRO SNOW: Through the tender mercies of our Father that is in Heaven, I am spared to address you once more upon the subject of the common salvation, that relates to the gathering of the people of God.

We arrived here at 12 o'clock P. M., Friday, 27th ult., with the same number that we left St. Louis with, so far as the Latter-day Saints are concerned, although many others, through fear, left the boat. Three deaths occurred on board, and several were put off on account of sickness. We have three cases of sickness in camp that are still very bad, and we are not fully prepared to say how they will terminate, but we hope and pray for the best. We found on our arrival, Br. Ballantyne out at the Grove; Br. Fletcher, his counsellor, and Br. Siler were working with teams who readily responded to our wishes, and hauled us and our luggage from the levee to our first camp-ground, where we pitched our tents, and when night came on, we had a peacable and quiet place to lay down; the green grass around us, the rolling prairies in the distance, clad in their mantles of green, was a change from the muddy Missouri that all seemed to enjoy with much delight. To add to our happiness, we met with Br. Ballantyne and the members of his little camp, under the open canopy of Heaven, and the shining beauties that the delightful moon gave to these prairie fields, and the singing of the sweet singers of Israel, as they died away in the distance, under Heaven's high-arched halls that were spread above our heads, caused all hearts that were not past feeling to rejoice, while we returned thanks unto the Lord for all past blessings.

We found Br. Ballantyne's camp in good health. Four or five families had moved out to Mormon Grove, and commenced putting in early garden seeds early on the morning of the 28th. In company with Elders Ballantyne and McGaw, I started for Mormon Grove and vicinity, to search further in regard to water for stock, and to make further preparations concerning the opening of a farm, and also to systematise something that we could submit to you for your approval or disapproval, as the spirit may lead you. * * * *

We found, in our travels out, that there was plenty of grass to sustain our stock, which made all feel, whose faces are set Zionward, as though they would like to be off, and I came to the conclusion that I would start after the stock on Monday morning, the 30th, ond see to the getting down the flour and bacon, hoping by that time that the balance of the company that we left in St. Louis and our freight will be ready, and according to the spirit that is working in us, we should like to see them on the road.

Any suggestions you may feel to make or counsel, will be gladly received and cheerfully complied with. I am in hopes that we shall be able to get this letter into the hands of the clerk of the Polar Star, if not, I hope it will get to you without delay.

In council with Elders Ballantyne and Mc Gaw, it was resolved that we would fence in one hundred and sixty acres, to be called the P. E. Fund Farm; that the entire farm and its interests be under the immediate control of the P. E. Fund Company. Any suggestions or instructions will be gladly received.

I remain your brother and servant in the Gospel of peace.

Letter from the Crimea.

Death of Elder Ross and Priest Brodlie—Other Brethren wounded—Interest in the Work.

BEFORE SEBASTOPOL, March 30, 1855.

Dear Brother F. D. Richards—Since I last wrote I have had many, many severe trials to undergo, but I am happy to say God in His goodness and mercy has been my protector, and I have passed them with health and comfort of the Holy Spirit. My news at this time is not so pleasant as I could wish, but God's will is my will, and I can only say, "Thy will be done, O Lord."

About two weeks ago I wrote to sister Ross an answer to a letter that she sent to Teacher W. Walker, stating in it that Elder Ross had been obliged to leave the Crimea and go to Scutari, on account of his health. This week I have learned that Elder Ross has departed from this sinful world, dying in the full faith of a glorious resurrection. Poor Brother Ross has left a wife and two or three children unprovided for, but I know God will protect the widow and her orphans. In a few days, or, in other words, as soon as the brethren receive any money, I will remit you some for our sister's relief. I have not sent her word of our brother's death, as I do not as yet know the date, but in my next letter to you I will send you and her all the particulars I can get. When I see my brethren called away from me—those whom I have often held sweet converse with; I often feel very lonely, and wish the time was come for me to return from this Babylon.

Our labors in this part of the vineyard have been productive of much good, but we have no time nor place to baptize, or our number would be increased. I live in hopes that the time is not far distant when many who have heard our voices will have the opportunity, if not by us, by some other servants of God, to be adopted as heirs to the kingdom of God.

Since I commenced writing, I received a letter from Elder Bell, who stated he was going to the Valley. May God our Father bless him and his, and may he have a quick and pleasant passage. O, how I wish I could but see him! by him it was I learned the truths of heaven. My prayers are and always will be for his welfare. If you should be writing after the Saints, please to give him my love, and say it is all right, we will meet again in this world or the world to come. In his letter he told me that brother Thomas was returning to England in the same ship as Elder Burridge, Brother Thomas, 41st Depot, was wounded in the hand at the battle of Inkerman. I have likewise to inform you that brother Corporal Peter Hay, 55th Depot, left for England with loss of an arm. Both were in good standing, but had no certificates, as I could not see them after they were wounded. Priest Brodlie died on the field of battle, 5th November. He was noted for his calmness when dying on the field, by his comrades.

Brothers McLean, Spurr, Higgins, indeed all the Branch, send their love, and ask for the interest of the prayers of the Saints, that we may be protected, and that we may return to unite ourselves with them in thanksgiving to our Heavenly Father for His goodness to us.

Please to excuse this scrawl; but the fact is, I have not the convenience nor time to write much. It has not been in my power to hold any public meeting, but I have done all I could by privately speaking to any one who would listen to me.

It is now half-past ten o'clock, P. M. I came off the trenches at eight o'clock, after having been there twenty-eight hours, and shall have to go again to-morrow at four P. M., for forty-eight hours more. Our duty is very hard, so please to excuse me. May God bless you. Amen.

I remain yours in the new covenant,

HENRY RUSSELL.

Departures by the Atlantic.

EX-PRESIDENT FILLMORE, accompanied by five members of Congress, departed for Europe by the "Atlantic," which sailed on Wednesday last. Mr. Fillmore goes, it is said, simply to see the country; that his intentions are to visit the most notable places in England; will probably visit the Rhine, the Alps, and Italy, and view the Exhibition at Paris on his return. The Congressional associates of Mr. Fillmore were Messrs. T. T. Flagler, E. B. Morgan, and Judge Pringle, of New York; Galisha A. Grow, of Pennsylvania; and E. B. Washburne, of Illinois. These gentlemen, however, are to leave Mr. Fillmore in London, where they will ship for Constantinople, and from thence to Eupatoria, on their way to the seat of war in the Crimea.

Siege of Sebastopol.

A LETTER from the camp before Sebastopol, of the date of April 2, says: "The French, who have hitherto enjoyed comparative repose, are now very hardly worked. They have three nights out of seven in the trenches, and take twenty-four hours at a time, as our men do. In proportion as they are employed our overwork diminishes. We have now three nights out of seven in bed as a fair average. The most harassing part of the duties of the French is marching considerable distances to the trenches. Many of the men come from the rear of Lord Raglan's quarters to the right attack. Our Allies send down very large parties and reserves. Not less than 12,000 or 14,000 men are marched on duty for the right alone every night, and the French march large bodies of men in rear of all their working and covering parties. We cannot afford to send the full complement of men to our batteries, and the engineers and the officers in command of the trenches have frequent 'difficulties' respecting the disposal of the troops, and complaints and reports are not unfrequent in consequence."

California.

THE Northern Light arrived from California on Wednesday last, but brings no news of importance. An interesting and animating discussion took place in relation to the division of the State into three States, by including part of Utah Territory. The bill was introduced subject, of course, to the approval of Congress. The object is to make one a slave State.

ROBBERY AND ATTEMPT AT MURDER.—On Friday last, Mr. E. Londen was attacked by three Mexicans or Chileans, while on his way from Kentucky Flat to Camptonville, who robbed him of about $1,000, and beat him nearly to death, cut round his arm to the bone, carried him some distance from the road, and left him in the chapparel for dead. After lying there insensible two days and nights, he came to himself, and managed to crawl to the trail, where he was found and carried to Camptonville. The citizens turned out and arrested twenty-seven Chilenos, but the wounded man failed to identify any of them. It is thought he may recover, though his life is still in great danger.—[Sierra Citizen.

Regarding the Chinese in California, the San Francisco Sun says:

In several mining localities of the state, these people are forbidden to set foot; from others they have been unceremoniously expelled. What is to become of them? The Legislature refuses taking any definite action concerning them, which has incensed their former foes to an embittered opposition. This is particularly true of Shasta and one or two other counties, from which they have flocked in droves. In the last week four hundred of them have taken up their residence in Sacramento. There is no labor for them there, so that their case is an exceedingly hard one, and should be attended to by some one or in some manner without delay. Have they no agent in California, or no intelligent countryman with influence at home, who can write back and tell them to stay where they are? If they have, it would be a charity for him to perform towards them this kind office. As it is, they are accumulating amongst us only to bring injury upon themselves, which is very much regretted.

SANTIAGO SACKED BY ROBBERS.

The California Chronicle, April 19th, has the following:

By the arrival of the clipper schooner Simeon Draper from Mazatland, which vessel arrived on the 15th instant, we learn that the country is in a state of rebellion and completely overrun with robbers; and it is almost impossible for any person to travel by land without being molested. Santiago had been sacked by a band of robbers, and it was reported that some of the inhabitants had been murdered and the females carried off.

This band of marauders proceeded up the river to a village, and committed the same depredations. A body of the citizens followed and overtook them; a fight ensued, which resulted in the defeat of the pursuing party, who were compelled to surrender, being promised that their lives should be spared by so doing; but after laying down their arms, they were killed, with the exception of one man, who escaped. Great excitement prevailed at Tepic, where an attack was apprehended from the banditti.

Troops were arriving from the neighboring towns to protect the place. The stage was stopped one league from San Blas and robbed. Mr. Vanhorn, who came passenger on the Simeon Draper, had purchased a number of cattle and horses for the purpose of bringing them to this country. He was overtaken by the government troops, his stock taken from him, and himself thrown into prison, and was unable to obtain any redress from the authorities. Our informant was four days at Santiago after the above occurrence.

The U. S. sloop-of-war St. Mary's, Capt. Bailey, sailed from San Francisco on the 17th April, for San Juan del Sud.

INTERESTING DISCOVERY IN A TUNNEL.—Mr. Butterfield, who is running a tunnel into Table Mountain, near Sonora, California, has given the editor of the Herald a description of a discovery made by his company last week, in the course of their excavations. They have got their tunnel in a distance of three hundred feet. Here, one hundred and ten feet from the surface of the ground, they found the trunk of a pine tree, twenty-two inches in diameter, in a good state of preservation, and with its bark on. The sap appeared to be in a partial state of petrifaction, and the outside was char red, giving unmistakable evidence of the contact of fire at some period. Having cut out the portion of the tree found in the tunnel, the company have commenced sinking a shaft for the purpose of reaching the roots of the tree. Our informant states that there is but little doubt that the formation surrounding this tree is a solid bed of lava, which, at some remote period, flowed into its present location, covering up trees, &c., (as this discovery shows,) in its progress.

It has been proposed to build a railroad tunnel under the English channel between Dover and Calais, so as to establish a permanent communication between France and England. Several projects have been proposed; among them that of Dr. Payerne, who offers to perform the work, if supplied with 140 submarine boats, 1,500 sailors and workmen, 4,340,000 cubic yards of material, and 240,000,000 francs. By means of such a tunnel the channel might be crossed in thirty-three minutes.

THE Arkansas river having nearly dried up, the Little Rock (Arkansas) Gazette says: There is not, in Little Rock, a barrel of flour, a bushel of meal, or a pound of coffee or sugar, for sale. Flour would go off readily here at $15 a barrel, and corn meal at $2 a bushel; sugar and coffee would sell for any price. There is the greatest scarcity of every article of provisions or family groceries.

STRENUOUS efforts are now being made in Louisiana, and especially in New Orleans, for the suppression of the practise of carrying concealed weapons. The new law passed by the Legislature of that State makes the carrying of concealed weapons a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment.

THE Chicago (Ill.) Democrat says, that Messrs. Gibbs & Griffin have at present over 400,000 bushels of wheat and corn in their warehouse in that city—the largest amount ever in one store in that locality at one time.

THE correspondence of the British army in the East amounts to 45,250 letters received, and 43,125 sent monthly. A postmaster, three assistant postmasters, and seven letter carriers, have been stationed in the Crimea; and eighteen horses and mules are specially emyloyed for the conveyance of mails there.

AN entrenched camp for 40,000 men is to be established near Constantinople, and will be occupied by French troops; the city is also to be strongly fortified. The French will be established in Turkey, and it is predicted will never again leave there.

DR. TINSLEY, of Cuba, claims to have discovered that vaccine virus, after passing through the system of a negro, is useless for the white race.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systémes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de réconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

Egypt.

EGYPT, once famous seat of earthly pow'r,
How great and lofty in thy glorous hour;
How fallen, prostrate, and how crushed art thou;
How once magnificent; how humble now.
Where is the grandeur that once formed thy boast?
Where are the myriads of thy mighty host?
Where are the monarchs who once filled thy throne?
Where are thy altars? where thy gods of stone?
Where is thy wisdom by the world proclaimed?
(The school for Solon and Lycurgus famed).
Where are thy cities and their splendid towers?
The palaced mansions of thy kingly powers?
In vain we search; we only find their graves;
Their groaning country is a slave of slaves.
How loved thy sages, a false age to trace,
And strove to deck thee with superior grace.
Vaunt of thy past! thy sole remaining boast—
Thy future's cheerless, and thy glory's lost.
The lake of Moeris now no longer sighs,
To sooth thy land parched by thy burning skies.
His pyramids no more their tale shall tell,
When Moeris governed or Thothmosis fell.
The crumbled ruins of thy lab'rinth's maze,
Force sad reflections as the travellers gaze.
The Kings that built thee have all past away,
The worms have fattened on their mouldered clay.
Thou sole memento of their passed hour—
A fallen emblem of their faded power!
Proud Thebes, who so long didst glorious shine,
And aped a splendor which was thought divine;
Thy walls are fallen, and thy gates no more
Emit the millions who went out before.
A mass of ruins only marks the spot
Where crumbling Luxor or Carnac now rot;
Once noble pillars of thy former fame,
Now tottering tokens of thy present shame.
And Memphis, where are now thy rich array,
Thy pompous pageants and thy rare display—
Thy sacred bull, thine altars and thy priests—
Thy temples, off'rings, worship, and thy feasts?
Fallen and crushed thine obelisks now lie;
Defiled thy temples, open to the sky;
Thy tombs despoiled, and by stranger hands
Thy fathers carried into stranger lands;
Thy pyramids yet stand, unscathed by time;
As mighty monuments of mighty crime,
Built on the sweat of a crushed race of slaves;
The doom is just, they're now thy glory's graves.
Thy Kings have ruled proud conqu'rors in thy ways,
And kingly subjects drawn thy despots' cars;
But how reversed may now the tale be read,
A tyrant's heel is stamped upon thy head.
In vain thy Nile with rising floods o'erflows;
In vain thy fruit luxuriantly grows;
In vain thy reapers and thy planters toil;
In vain rich harvests crown thy thriving soil;
In vain each feature smiles with fresh'ning grace:
Clime of a murd'rer, thou cans't ne'er efface
The branded stigma stamped upon thy face!
As in thy deserts, the fierce simoom's breath
Performs the mission of the conqu'ror death;
As the tornado's mighty, fearful blast
Sweeps with destruction when it rushes past;
So certainly that curse pronounced on Cain
Falls on his children who his mark retain.
Unchecked their crimes, unawed their impious pride;
Unwarned by judgments which they'd fain deride;
Untaught by wisdom or experience' page;
Untaught by time, and foolish in their age;
Faithless they were, when in the courts above;
Mean neuter cowards when all others strove.
JOSEPH had saved them, but still faithless, they,
Bound Israel fast in chains of slavery.
Without the Priesthood they're condemned to be,
Nor feel its value to set mankind free! ELDER J. M.

Pro-Slavery vs. Anti-Slavery.

WE lay before our readers, this week, an epitome of the proceedings of the feeling manifested by both sides of the all-absorbing question of slavery; they need no comment.

The following is from the Louisville Journal, and is the most moderate Southern paper that we have seen:

The Kansas Outrages.

It is painful to speak of the occurrences in Kansas and upon its borders within the last few weeks, but they are too important in their nature and are likely to be by far too important in their consequences to be passed by in silence. We have waited to see statements from all sides in order that we might be able to speak upon the subject without danger of being mistaken. We have no feeling that could prompt us to speak as a partisan. We wanted the Missouri Compromise to be let alone, but, as it has been repealed, we wish to see Kansas admitted at the proper time into the Union as a State either with or without Slavery, as her own qualified voters shall decide.

We have only slight means of judging whether a majority of the present population of Kansas Territory are for or against making it a Slave State, but it certainly cannot be denied with a semblance of truth that the recent election, so called, of delegates to the Territorial Legislature was the most open and scandalous mockery of an election ever heard of, in the United States, the old Plaquemine election of 1844 scarcely excepted. An official census of the inhabitants of the Territory was carefully taken only four weeks before the election, and from this it appears that, in some precincts alone, some of them very small ones, on and near the Missouri border, the votes polled at the election considerably surpassed the whole number of voters in the entire Territory. The truth is, an army of Missourians, variously estimated at from three thousand to five thousand, armed with bowie-knives and pistols and rifles, and even cannon, marched into Kansas on the day before the election, distributed themselves wherever they were wanted, awed all opposition to silence, deposed and put up election judges to suit themselves, allowed the privilege of voting to whom they pleased, and refused it to whom they pleased, compelled by threats and the display of weapons the receiving of their own votes, offered personal violence to all who were obnoxious to them, carrying everything before them, and the next day, retuned to Missouri under streaming banners and to the music of fife and drum and trumpet.

In several precincts of Kansas the judges refused to receive votes unless the persons offering them would swear that they were inhabitants of the Territory, but in every case the Missourians compelled the refractory judges either to yield the point or to resign their offices or to fly for life. We have details at this moment before us almost enough to make a volume, but we have no room for them here. Even the Louisville Democrat's Kansas correspondent, who evidently exulted in the incidents of the occasion, admitted the fact of the irruption and voting of the Missouri ruffins. Writing from Lawrence, in Kansas Territory, and speaking of the Missouri detachment that regulated that precinct, he said: "On the 28th of March, a large train of wagons and horses entered this place from Missouri, led by a Col. Young as chief, assisted by a D. Moss and several others. They encamped about a quarter of a mile west of the town, and during the next day, were reinforced by several parties, amounting in the aggregate to near a thousand men. They made no secret of their intentions. They came to vote, and so announced on all occasions. The leaders were evidently men of great influence with those under their orders, else they could never have restrained such a disorderly and irresponsible crew of blackguards and ruffians. Whisky in any quantity they had on hand, and were not sparing in its use, as was evident by the whoopings and yellings that incessantly arose from their camps." All of the papers in Kansas say that the Missourians voted in the Territory several thousand strong, and some of those papers not only proclaim the fact, but glory in it, and some of the Missouri papers defend it as right and proper. One of the Kansas papers, very violent in favor of making Kansas a Slave State, a paper called the Squatter Sovereign, boasts that those in favor of making the Territory free did not dare to go to the polls, and that they could not have done so with safety. The Sovereign says: "Freesoilers, as a general thing, acted wisely, and kept away from the polls."

Those who undertake to defend the outrage of the Missourians upon the elective franchise of Kansas, allege that the inhabitants of Missouri had just as much right to go into Kansas and vote as the persons sent out to Kansas by the New-England Emigration Society. We have seen the monstrous allegation put forth in divers quarters. It is both infamous and shameless. It is a miserable mockery, which only adds insult to injury. The apology is as false as the offence is atrocious. The people who have gone to Kansas from the Eastern States have gone there to settle. No one but a fool can suppose that men from the East would be at the heavy expense and the vast trouble of going two thousand miles, a large proportion of them with their familes, to cast their votes in a legislative election, and then to be at the heavy expense and vast trouble of returning home again. No, the Eastern emigrants went to Kansas to establish themselves there and to identify their fortunes with the fortunes of the Territory. If they desired that it should be a free Territory and a free State, they had a right to indulge the desire and to vote accordingly. They have gone to make Kansas their home, and their children's home. They are, in general, men of character—intelligent, enterprising, orderloving. They have taken with them, far more generally than emigrants usually do, the conveniences and necessaries of life. They have carried with them school teachers and ministers of the gospel. The papers of all the cities through which they have passed have spoken highly of their appearance and deportment. There have been no squalid wretches among them. Undoubtedly many of them are fanatics on the subject of Slavery, and have received pecuniary aid from fanatics of the worst character—but that is nobody's business; they can do no more than vote in Kansas to make or keep Kansas free territory—and that they have a right to do. As the New-York Courier and Enquirer says, if they choose to go out in companies, if they see fit to avail themselves of any agencies, organized or unorganized, in order to produce concert of action, and secure common ends, they have a perfect right to do so. No arrangement of this sort can, in the slightest degree, affect their character as settlers; and from this character alone, under the law of Congress, they derive the right to vote. The people of Missouri, who took possession of the ballot-boxes, for the most part are not settlers. They are sheer interlopers—riding into the country one day for a bad purpose, and out of it the next. Their abode, both present and prospective, is in Missouri, and all their civil rights lie there. They have no more right to a vote in Kansas then they have to a vote in Illinois or Iowa. They are in no sense squatters, because they are in no sense settlers, and they therefore have nothing to do in squatter sovereignty. Their taking part in it, as they have, is a flagitious usurpation. If they do not like the Northern Anti-Slavery emigration societies, as we certainly do not, let them counteract these with Pro-Slavery emigration societies. The way is as open on the one side as on the other. It is nobody's business how the emigration is effected, provided it is real. The actual settlement is the only point in law; the actual settlers the only parties in interest.

The determination of the Missourians living near the borders of Kansas to make that Territory a Slave Territory and a Slave State, at all hazards and by whatever means, is abundantly evident from the late proceedings of the residents of Platte County, Mo. In that case all the principal men of the County, to the number of two hundred, assembled as a mob, destroyed a newspaper press simply because it would not recognize the right of Missourians to vote in Kansas, attempted to take the lives of the editors and proprietors, and solemnly pledged their word and honor, that, if those gentlemen should dare to settle in any portion of Kansas, they, the people of Platte County, Mo., would follow them into the Territory and put them to death. Thus, this Missouri mob, a portion of the army of pistol and bowie-knife voters who had crossed into Kansas and borne down everybody and everything at the election, now boldly and audaciously announced to the world that they claimed and would exercise the prerogative of deciding who should and who should not settle in the Territory of Kansas—that they would not permit the people of Kansas to decide this matter for themselves—that they would cross the line and cut the throats of any who should presume to become the inhabitants of the new Territory against their wishes. We do not speak now of the infernal resolution to hang every preacher of the Northern Methodist Church who should come among them to preach the Gospel of Salvation, for that, however revolting and horrible, is not to our present purpose—we speak only of the resolves of avowed citizens of Missouri, to prevent, by threats of murder, and, if necessary, by murder itself, the emigration of men into Kansas, who, it was thought would be likely to exert an influence in favor of making Kansas a non-Slaveholding State.

If any man, whether editor or private citizen, chooses to brand us as Freesoilers in our propensities because we denounce the outrages of the Missourians upon the rights of the inhabitants of Kansas, and are in favor of permitting those inhabitants to fix their own institutions for themselves according to the provisions of the Nebraska law, and without obstruction or hindrance from any outside power, we have only to say that he is a calumniator. The late proceedings at Kansas and Missouri are infinitely more to be deplored by the South than the North.

The Mobile Tribune says:

"No man with any knowledge, in the South, can for a moment believe that there is or can be any harmony between the Christian organizations of the Free and Slave States. Why, then, patch up and endeavor to check the disruption which will presently be inevitable between them?"

Upon which Mr. Garrison, Anti-slavery, held the following:

"Yes, I ask the clergy who will assemble, within a week, in the city of New York—the clergy North and the members of the churches North, who are here assembled—why this attempt to patch up a false union between yourselves and the slaveholders of the South? Their condition of religious union is that you shall acknowledge slavery as divinely instituted; as sustained by the Old and New Testaments; and that you shall declare anti-slavery to be infidelity. Unless you shall do this, they will cut the bonds of your union and separate from you. Certainly, the language of the slaveholding South to the Abolitionists is, "No Union, religiously, with Abolitionists." They are consistent men; they cannot, as slaveholders, say otherwise. On our part, as Abolitionists, we meet them as frankly and as directly, and say, "No Union with Slaveholders, religiously;" and so the hour has come that we separate. All this is logical; all this is a moral and a religious necessity."

At an Anti-slavery meeting held in the Metropolitan Theater, Broadway, on May 9th. The following resolutions were passed:

"Resolved, That Liberty and Slavery are, in their nature, antagonisms, which no power in the universe can reconcile; and that any effort to make peace or to effect a compromise between them is an insult to God, a crime against nature, and an outrage upon man.

Resolved, That the flag under which three millions and a half of the people are held as chattel slaves, and driven under the lash to unrequited toil—that the Constitution which grants to slaveholders and to slave-breeders an increase of political power in proportion to the multiplication of their victims—that the Union which is cemented with human blood, and perpetuated by a pledge of its entire military and naval power to keep the oppressed in their chains—is a flag to be trampled in the dust beneath the feet of freemen; is a Constitution rightly described as "a covenant with death, and an agreement with hell," and to be given to the consuming fire; is a Union to be assailed as the concentration and "sum of all villanies," and utterly destroyed. Therefore,

Resolved, That the time is fully come to form a Confederacy, in which no man shall be held as a slave, nor allowed to be put on trial before any tribunal on the issue, "Is he a man or a beast, a freeman or a slave?"—and in which slaveholding, under all circumstances, shall be placed in the same felonious category with highway robbery, piracy and murder."

At a Cincinnati Convention:

"Resolved, That American Slavery is antagonistic to the principles of Christianity and true democracy; therefore, all attempts to reconcile them or to make them co-exist in harmony, under the same social, political and religious institutions, is an insult to God and an outrage upon man.

Resolved, That the State of Wisconsin, by her people, her legislature and her judiciary, has placed herself in an attitude worthy of admiration and the example of every sovereign State; and that we now turn our eyes towards her as the leader in the assertion and maintenance of the doctrine of State rights, hoping that, by the noble position she has taken, the arm of Federal usurpation shall not be allowed to break down the guarantees of either National or State Constitutions.

Resolved, Therefore, that we deprecate the action of a portion of the anti-slavery men of this country in identifying themselves with the new political movement popularly known as Know-Nothingism; that we feel it to be our imperative duty to oppose it, because it tramples down the doctrines of common brotherhood; because it avowedly ignores and subordinates the question of American Slavery; because it is palpably unjust to foreigners seeking homes of comfort and fields of enterprise on our shores; because its indiscriminate proscription of all Christians of the Romish faith is at war with the fundamental principles of Protestantism; because we abhor its guilty cowardice in veiling its deeds in darkness, in a land where the people rule, and discussion is free."

The following are a few acts commenced by the South in carrying out their principles:

"We learn, says the Tribune, from the Rochester Democrat that the Rev. F. Starr, Jr., a Presbyterian clergyman for three years past settled at Weston, Platte Co., Missouri, has arrived at Rochester, having been expelled from Weston by the same gang of Pro-Slavery ruffians who threw the types and presses of the Parkville Luminary into the river. They gave him notice to quit within two days under penalty of being lynched, and he deemed it prudent to leave. It does not appear that he had ever preached against Slavery, but only that he was a clergyman of Northern origin."

WETTING DOWN THE DOG STAR.—We call attention to an article, from the Platte Argus Extra, in regard to the submerging of the Parkville Luminary Office in the Missouri River. This paper has, since its establishment, aided and assisted the Abolitionists. It has grown bolder and bolder in its attacks upon the institution of slavery.

We have frequently heard it asserted, that slaves in Platte county subscribed to and read this paper without their master's knowledge. It had become an intolerable nuisance, and the citizens of Platte owed it to themselves to abate it.

The citizens of Platte have done just what, in our opinion, they should have performed. These Northern scoundrels should be taught, that they cannot come into a slave State and promulgate sentiments, which left unchecked, would soon lead our slaves to insurrection. Missourians have been too apathetic in regard to the conduct of these Northern fire-brands. They must, for the future, be suppressed—at the cost of their property, if that will accomplish it—at the cost of their lives, when every other remedy fails.

The conduct of the people of Platte will be approved and hailed with delight, by three-fourths of the citizens of the State. There will be some to condemn—you may know in what catalogue to place them. Of the papers in the State, we know of but four, that will speak in terms of censure. We will not call their names, but would say two of them claim to be whig and the others are Bentoniac. We shall wait with some little impatience to see our prediction verified.—[Brunswicker.

While the Louisville Journal, a Southern paper, holds the above, Bennett, of the Herald, comes forward as their apologist in the following:

"Meantime our Northern vagabond intermeddlers, fanatics and scheming agitators, in connection with this Pierce administration, are responsible for what has occurred in Kansas, and for the ultimate results of this ugly and ominous territorial imbroglio. The people of the South will look out for their own safety and future security; it is for North to say whether there shall be union or disunion."

The following is from the Richmond Examiner:

"There is no intelligent man, of any party or section of the United States, who does not know and feel that the question of Slavery is the vital question of this Republic—more important in its bearings upon the destiny of the American people than all other questions, moral, political, and religious, combined. Politicians may cry peace; but there is no peace for the Slaveholder."

"It is all an hallucination to suppose that we are ever going to get rid of slavery, or that it will ever be desirable to do so. It is a thing that we cannot do without—that is righteous, profitable and permanent, and that belongs to Southern society as inherently, intrinsically and durably as the white race itself. Southern men should act as if the canopy of heaven were inscribed with a covenant, in letters of fire, that the negro is here, and here forever—is our property, and ours forever—is never to be emancipated—is to be kept hard at work and in rigid subjection all his days."

The following is from the Rev. Mr. Brownlow, who publishes a paper in Tennessee:

"The true-hearted citizens of East Tennessee, and property holders, ought to enter into leagues, and whip, black, and ride on a rail, irrespective of age, calling, or family associations, every preacher, citizen or traveller who dares to utter one word in opposition to slavery, or who is found in possession of an Abolition document. These are our sentiments, and we are willing and ready to help others to carry them out."

CHICAGO, May 18, 1855.

Geo. S. Park, late of the Parkville Luminary, publishes a long letter in the St. Louis Democrat, in which he says that Stringfellow and Atchison have organized a secret association which are sworn to turn out and fight when called upon to do so, and which is to be governed by the following rules: All belonging to it are to share in the damages accruing to any member when proscribed, even at the price of disunion; all are to act secretly, to destroy the business and character of Northern men; and all dissenting from their doctrines are to be expelled from the Territory. Western Missouri is to be held in constant terror. All the whig and Benton presses are to be destroyed. The destruction of the hotel in Kansas City, with the presses at Lawrence, are decreed, and cannon is to be taken there to demolish them. The onslaught is not to stop until every free soiler is driven out of Missouri and Kansas. Park says he telegraphed to Governor Price and President Pierce for protection, but no answers were returned. By the threats previously made, he traces the destruction of the Luminary establishment to Atchison. Mr. Park promises further developments at an early day.

The New York Tribune is in favor of sending an armed force to Kansas immediately. It says:

It is evident that the time to try men's souls has now come in Kansas. The villains who have gone there from Missouri, with clubs, bowie-knives and revolvers, to override the genuine settlers and establish slavery at whatever cost, must now be met determinedly if their nefarious purpose is not to be accomplished. If the Executive will send thither a couple of regiments to maintain order and see that the people of the territory are not outvoted and domineered over by Mr. Atchison's gangs of brigands from Missouri, very well. It is the plain duty of the President to send the troops there for that purpose.

The Providence Post is also in favor of "having something done," and asks the following questions:

Why is it that the President of the United States does not interfere to protect the peaceful inhabitants and to enforce the laws? What is our army, supported at so great expense, good for, if it cannot be employed in this business? The plain truth is, that all this violence, all these outrages, unprecedented in our history, are the natural consequences of the policy that commenced by breaking down the Missouri compromise and substituting a "popular sovereignty" of mob law in the place of the settled law of the land; they are the regular steps in the march of slavery.

We desire to prevent civil war and fraternal bloodshed. Hence we say, that since the Missourians have literally expelled a Governor who was not only involved in land and Indian speculations, (for which he deserves to be broke, as the President knows, if one-half of the Indian Bureau Commissioner's report be true), but who, it is also alleged, interfered with the political rights of the people of Kansas, will the President send back such a Governer at the head of troops, and put him over, and maintain him over, a free and jealous people by force of arms? This is the point for the President and his Cabinet to decide. If the President does not propose to sustain Governor Reeder by the United States troops, then why send him back to the theatre of his speculations and of his Anti-Slavery intrigues? If he does mean to sustain him by force, and if he shall thus plunge this now peaceful country into a civil war, to carry out the views of his Anti-Slavery allies, then upon his weak head be the blood which will flow in the inevitable contest! Why, at this very moment, the United States troops shield from the fury of the people the Abolitionist murderer of Clark; and yet we are taught to believe by the Democrat, an Abolition sheet in St. Louis, and its eastern copyists, that the violence which reigns in Kansas, comes from the southern portion of its people. There is not a well-informed man from the West now in this city (and there are many here) who does not believe that Governor Reeder and the two Judges, who united with him in his speculations upon the Indians, would be driven from Kansas within twenty-four hours, if he were again to set his foot upon that Territory. Before he left Kansas, it is said upon good authority, that he deemed it prudent to go inside of Fort Leavenworth for protection! He dared not trust himself in the hands of the people who complained of his outrages upon their rights.

The Charleston News learns that the President endorses Reeder, but thinks it will be a hard matter to re-instate him:

Accounts from Washington state that the President endorses the course of Governor Reeder in Kansas, and will uphold him against the sovereign squatters. We confess that we don't see exactly how the President will proceed. If he sends a body guard of troops to escort Governor Reeder to Kansas, and place him on the Gubernatorial chair, the squatters will resist and rally by hundreds, if not thousands, to place some one else there. If the squatters obstinately refuse to accept Reeder, and insist on setting up for themselves, nothing less than Gen. Harney, with his regiments, could do anything against them. A correspondent of the Missouri Republican, who seems to be one of the most sovereign of the squatters, writing from Kansas, says that the driving of Park and Patterson from their homes is but the begining of what will be done, and all men like them are to be treated in the same manner. "We," says this correspondent, "have borne them as long as they can be borne, and we have determined, henceforth, to take in hand all such fellows as may be discovered."

The Charleston Mercury has the following.

Mr. Reeder, Governor of Kansas, has recently returned to the bosom of his constituents in Pennsylvania, and has delivered a mournful oration on the state of the country he was sent to govern. If their were any proof wanting that he had been acting all the time as the partisan of the Abolonists, it would be furnished by this speech. He, a Governor, appointed by the President, deserts his charge, and runs to make a pitiful appeal to the sectional prejudices of a country district in Pennsylvania, instead of first approaching the power that appointed him and making his charge in a legal manner. He is evidently seeking to get up a ferment with the North, by way of forcing the Administration to his wishes. They are not likely to be caught by such poor chaff as he can spread.

The Mississippi Free Trader thinks the South has achieved a great triumph in Kansas:

This great work is, in a great measure, due to the sterling principle and inflexible firmness of the Administration, which, nevertheless, has been denounced for it at the South almost as much as at the North by a certain class of politicians, but which, we have no doubt, will receive, in the end, the very general approval of the Southern people. To its cordial support and approval of this measure of tardy justice to the South, it is to be attributed, in a great measure, the defeat of the Administration in every Northern State. Every shade and variety of anti-slavery opinion was arrayed in one combination against the Administration on the ground of its fidelity to its Constitutional obligations and its pledges of opinion, and the result has been one of the most overwhelming defeats ever suffered in this country. But the defeated party is a Spartan phalanx. small in numbers, but inflexible in principal and unconquerable in spirit. Such a party may be defeated, but not annihilated.

The Albany Atlas tries to frighten the South by insinuation:

Squatter sovereignty, border intervention, and the organization of secret political societies, may strike the imagination of the South as very pretty things: but what will the common sense of the States most interested say to the combination should the machinery be set at work against themselves?

The St. Louis Mirror says:

* * * We confess our sympathies are entirely with the people of Missouri. They have done nothing more than any other men would have done in similar circumstances, where their dearest rights were assailed and their property threatened. The Abolitionists settled in Kansas were found to be an intolerable nuisance—their agents and emissaries have already been discovered over the Missouri border, tampering with the slaves and persuading them to run off. * * * Wrong produced excitement, and injury exasperation, and we do not deny that individual instances of violence have been committed. The like has happened in every new territory since the foundation of the government. The frontiersman is ever bold, reckless, and disposed to rely upon his own strong arm to defend his person and maintain his rights. * * * In California, Judge Lynch may hang up a dozen malefactors in a day, and not one note of disapprobation is heard from the Free Soil press; on the contrary, the act is rather justified on the plea of necessity. But let the frontiersmen of Missouri associate together for the protection of their dearest rights—raise subscriptions, dispatch some of their fellow citizens to settle in the new territory, then, from one end of the North to the other we hear the cry raised of encroachment, trampling upon the laws, outrage upon the North, and violent and bloody doings of the slaveholders. These cries are re-echoed by some prints established in our own limits, and one in particular—the Parkville Luminary—does not hesitate to lend aid and comfort to the enemy by constantly denouncing our people. Its proclivities and sympathies are evidently with the Abolitionists; it is doing immense harm, incalculable injury upon the interests of the State, and yet it cannot be reached by any legal remedy. Can we be at all surprised that in a moment of excitement an outraged people arose and sunk this pestilential sheet in the waters of the Missouri?

We have preferred giving the above to delivering our own opinions on the subject. Such is public opinion, such is party, such is the public press, and such is the position of the country in relation to this question. There is matter enough here for the most vitiated taste; and if any one wants to see confusion worse confounded, or, an exhibition of a greater Babylon, we think they are unreasonable.

Among the rest, Henry Wilson and Charles Sumner, Senators of Massachusetts, have been lecturing in Massachusetts and New York, on this question, to crowded houses. At one of their abolition meetings in New York, the question was asked by a mulatto, Frederick Douglass, "What good would a dissolution of the Union achieve for you? What would you do if it were dissolved?" "Do?" replies the white man, springing up with furious gestures to his feet; "we would unite, as a Northern Confederacy, with the slaves of the South against their masters;" and the New York Daily News says, "This blatant sedition was rapturously applauded by the select few grouped around Garrison, where he sat perched like a bird of evil omen above the rostrum!"

The following we subjoin from the Syracuse Standard of May 12: while it shows the conflicting elements that are interwoven with Know-Nothingism, at the same time bears upon the same subject; with it we conclude this painful matter:

THE KNOW NOTHING COUNCIL.

This body was in session nearly all of Thursday night, when it adjourned sine die. What kept them until the "short hours" is not known. It is surmised, however, that the vexed question of slavery was up during the night.

At the close there were only about 150 delegates in attendance on the Council. This shows a remarkable want of interest in its doings on the part of the Lodges, the number of which is said to be 1,280 in the State.

One of the chief objects of the Convention appears to have been the expulsion of refractory members. Among those turned out to grass were Mr. Rose, of Westchester, and Mr. Chubbuck, Librarian of the Assembly. Their offence was being seen in conversation with outsiders, who were believed to be unfriendly to the Order.

It is evident from all the facts that have come to light, that the Order is rapidly going down hill in this State. There was much dissatisfaction manifested among the delegates outside of Corinthian Hall, and the leaders bore in their countenances and behavior unmistakeable signs of disappointment and discouragement. The rank and file, who have been fooled and cheated by it, are revolting in all parts of the State, and will abandon the concern altogether.

The Massachusetts Know Nothings have adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we hail with hope and joy the recent brilliant success of the Republican party in the States of Maine, Iowa, Indiana, Pennsylvania and Ohio, and we trust these victories are a foreshadow of others soon to come, by which the Free States shall present one solid phalanx of opposition to the aggressions of slavery.

Resolved, That in the present chaotic condition of parties in Massachusetts, the only star above the horizon is the love of human liberty and the abhorrence of slavery, and that it is the duty of all Anti-Slavery men to rally round the Republican party, as an organization which invites the united action of the people on the transcending question of slave dominion which now divides the Union.

The Know Nothing State Council of Georgia adopted, at its last session in Macon, the following resolution:

Resolved, That slavery and slave institutions are protected by the Constitution of the United States, and the obligation to maintain them is not sectional, but national; that the right to establish them in the organization of State Governments belongs to the native and naturalized citizens; and that Congress has no constitutional power to intervene, by excluding a new State applying for admission into the Union, upon the ground that the Constitution of such State recognizes slavery.

Here are six States avowedly committed to the abolition of slavery; and of course the whole South against them.

DOES FREEZING KILL?—In the basin under the dome of the Crystal Palace we noticed last fall a number of goldfish flashing their bright sides in the clear water. Yesterday we saw them again, as lively as ever, and remarked to Sam. Brevoort, the Superintendent:

"So your fish lived through the Winter, but they are not so bright colored as at last fall."

"No wonder—the color froze off; the wonder is the life did not, for that basin was a solid cake of ice, and those fish were as solid as any part of it. But they thawed out as good as new, except the color, and that is coming on with warm weather. I think that settles the question, that freezing don't kill."

"OH, dear!" exclaimed an urchin, who was chewing a green apple, "I've swallowed a know nothing."

"A know nothing!"

"Yes, he is givin' me the grip."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1855.

Captain Gunnison.

LAST week the Herald and Times had each of them a communication from Utah in relation to further outrages of the Mormons, for which, according to both their statements, the Mormons ought to be killed, obliterated, or exterminated; both of the communications are evidently written in as rancorous a spirit as the editors of these two papers generally manifest; we suppose their correspondents have got their lessons from these gentlemen of the quill; one of them, the Herald's correspondent, indeed partakes so much of the genuine spirit of Mr. Bennett, that he comes right out with it, and says that "the Gentiles would lynch Brigham if they had the power." Now that is regular Bennettism. He would lynch Brigham if he had the power too. What a pity but these gentlemen had a little more power! Now it so happens that the Mormons have the power; but as they do not belong to that respectable community, the followers of Judge Lynch, the Gentiles don't get lynched. Yet these lynching gentlemen profess to give an account of the affairs in Utah, which account excites the lynching propensities of the Herald and Times, and they would have the President turn lyncher, and send out troops to kill off the Mormons. How very charitable! Much obliged, gentlemen, for your kindness; and it is to be hoped, that as you have treated the President so very courteously, he will pay some attention to your very friendly admonition.

Now what are the facts in the case? Capt. Gunnison, and a party along with him, were most brutally murdered by a small tribe of Indians, called the Parvant Indians, during the Indian troubles in Utah, and at the time of the Indian war. Now, no people felt more sympathy for Capt. Gunnison and party than the Mormons did. The Captain was well known in Salt Lake, and very much respected; and when news of the affair was communicated to Gov. Young, he immediately sent Mr. Huntington, an Indian interpreter, to inquire into the affair, see after their effects, and bury the dead: for their own party had left them on the ground. Mr. Huntington and posse attended to this matter, secured their papers, and buried their mutilated remains. Thus Gov. Young and the Mormons did for them what their own party had neglected, or were, under the circumstances perhaps, afraid to do. These are facts which we defy the Herald, Times, or any of their correspondents to controvert.

Col. Steptoe next goes out with a company and very properly inquires into the affair; a detachment is sent for this purpose. The Indians are called upon to give up the murderers; the same number are demanded of those killed—man for man. What is the result? according to the Times' correspondent, instead of seven men, three men, one squaw, and one child are given up. Now does any one believe that the squaw and child were among the murderers? No! but according to Indian usage, they are given up life for life, no matter whom. The court of course did not believe it, and the woman and child were dismissed. There were then left three Indians that perhaps had been engaged in the affair. We, of course, don't know; but should think, from the finding of the jury, that there was sufficient evidence to prove that. We think that though Kanosh, their chief, was absent, some of his leading braves were the men that concocted and carried out this plan.

These men were probably given up because the chief could do better without them than some others of his braves; and then comes the very questionable mode of trial that they had to submit to—not for white men—but we have our doubts about the propriety of trying untutored savages by the same law that you do white civilized men; but their treatment would not, under the circumstances, be acknowledged by any civilized nation. The Indians were then at war with the Mormons or whites; a series of difficulties had been induced, principally by California emigrants killing off Indians on their route. We have been called upon frequently to protect emigrants in consequence of their forerunners having killed, and by that means irritated, the Indians. One of these companies of emigrants had, a short time before, sought to take the bow and arrows from an Indian of the Parvante tribe, and in the scuffle the emigrant was wounded with an arrow, upon which the emigrants shot the Indian, and others of the same tribe were also killed. The Indians vowed revenge, which they too successfully carried out in the massacre of the lamented Capt. Gunnison and party, who were their victims. Now we would here ask, however we may mourn over our friends, is it right to condemn to death men, who, according to Indian usage from time immemorial, have killed their enemies and thought they were doing right in time of war? Would Russia, England, France, or the United States, who profess to be civilized, sanction such a procedure as the killing of enemies when taken prisoners? And yet because a Mormon jury, under the above circumstances, would not condemn those victims selected by the chief, the Mormons must all be killed off and be lynched on the spot, providing there was power. But Messeurs Bennett and Times, you can't inspire a Mormon jury with your murderous principles; on the other hand, Mr. Bennett, they would not take cowhidings so submissively and patiently as you do. They are neither poltroons nor cowards. History developes that the greatest tyrants have always been the meanest sycophants and cowards—the most tame, humble, and supplicating in time of trouble.

But we are very gravely informed that Gov. Young had instructed the jury as to their decision. We think if he had the jury would have been smart enough not to tell of it. The judge told them "they must either find them guilty of murder in the first degree or acquit them." The jury awarded, according to their finding, murder in the third degree. They did not believe in technical formalities, nor starch-stiffened old fogy machine-administration; but matter-of-fact justice. "But the Mormons liberated them;" that is an assertion; when government finds prisons to keep such men in they can be kept; but I would like to see those editors try their hands at keeping condemned Indians in a private house. Mr. B. would think he was in a worse position than when he got his flagellations.

But these same correspondents say that if it had been Mormons they would have done differently; but they were not. This is false; one of them was a Mormon, by the name of William Potter, and perhaps some of his friends were on the jury. A number of men, Mormons, had been killed in different parts of the country. John Dixon and John Quail were killed just before, and John Hoagland was severely wounded; one of them, John Dixon, a young man, who had been in our family for years, was barbarously murdered. What then? It was a time of war; they were its victims. Some of their property was afterwards found in the possession of Squashhead, a Utah chief. Did we kill him? No; we are not quite so sanguinary as Bennett & Co. But Gov. Young, to promote peace, made presents to him and many others, to a great extent, which we are glad to find Government have since made appropriations for: however, he did this upon his own responsibility. We were with him at the time.

Then we are told about the appointment of Judge Kinney: this is really news. Does our news concerning Presidential appointments come from Utah, or Washington? Will our correspondent answer?

A word more about the Indians and we have done. Government had not made any arrangements to pay for their lands, and while in California, New Mexico and Oregon, treaties had been made, there was none made with the Utah Indians in the Territory of Utah, while some of the Utes residing in New Mexico had received presents, &c., for lands; those in our Territory had not. We had settled on their land and it is very difficult for Indians to understand the difference between arthodox christianity and Mormonism. They were not aware that Mormons were proscribed, and that they had not privileges like others, and why, when other Indians were getting pay for lands, they could not be remunerated for theirs. Bennett, or the editor of the Times could have explained this matter to their satisfaction. We thought they were not justly treated and that we were not fairly dealt by to be thus situated. We thought under all circumstanstances that a little forbearance was necessary to those who had their land settled without remuneration, and many of them recklessly shot like dogs, by the emigration. Our cotemparies would have them killed, and then the Mormons on the back of them. We confess we like Mormon justice better than Gentilism.

Mormon Elders.

OUR readers will be much interested in reading a communication from Br. James Fergurson, formerly Attorney General, for the Territory of Utah. The same mail brought us a letter from Seth M. Blair, United States Attorney for the Territory of Utah. He has been laboring with success as a Missionary in Texas, for the last two years, and is now on his return to Utah with a number that he has baptized. Professional men, among the Gentiles, are generally too much elated with position to care about religion. Our professional men make religion the first and professions secondary. A good Elder makes a good Lawyer, or Attorney General; and a good Attorney ought to be an Elder. No man ought to plead law or prosecute for crime, who does not understand Gospel as well as law; and also is not governed by the principles of justice, virtue, and truth, which emanates from the gospel. Commend me to a man, always, who fears God. When he neither fears God, nor regards man he is not fit for President, Governor, Judge, Magistrate, Attorney, Scavenger, or Matchseller.

HUNTINGTON, Pa. May 15.—The Penna. Railroad bridge over the Juniata at Birmingham, 18 miles east of Altona, was burned on Sunday night. It was the work of an incendiary.

The North and South.

WE think, by a reference to our first page, it may easily be discovered that there is enough to do, at the present time, to attend to matters at home. When men are defying law; denouncing the Constitution; publicly talking about instigating slaves against their masters; dividing the Union; banishing Governors; proscribing the elective franchise, and using pistol and bowie-knife argument; there is enough of real difficulties on hand, without trumping up something artificial about the Mormons.

Utah.

WE have received files of the Deseret News up to March 28th, from which we extract as follows. The News, in an article headed "Inconsistent Conduct of the United States towards her Territories," holds the following:

"A few personal items, and we will leave the subject for the present.

Where was uncultivated Utah? In the tops of the mountains, begirt by still loftier alpine heights, and clad in robes of desolation, until a noble people, fleeing from the red hand of persecution solely on account of their religious faith, came and began to decorate her sombre garments with the bright hues of civilization.

Thanks to Ex-President Millard Fillmore, who, through his republican consistency, and an ardent desire to extend all the even-handed justice in his power, appointed Brigham Young to be Governor of Utah, a man who was unanimously the choice of every resident in our Territory. And honor too to President Franklin Pierce, who so long withstood the howlings, and the scratchings, and whinings at the door of the "White House," of the hungry hunters of office who wished to fatten upon the spoils, to spy out the liberties of an innocent, moral and industrious people, and reap in fields which they had used no effort to make or sow. But the pressure was too great even for his resistance, though when compelled to give way he acted with all possible magnanimity by appointing the gallant Lieut. Col. Steptoe to be our Governor—an appointment that could not have been more acceptably made, outside the ranks of our own population.

We speak understandingly upon this subject, for we have the honor of a personal acquaintance with the Colonel, and so far as our observation and judgment extend, we have found him to be in every particular an intelligent, honorable and upright officer, citizen and gentleman. It was this fact, coupled with his knowledge of the unanimous wishes of our population for the re-appointment of Governor Young, with his having signed a petition to the President and Congress to that effect, with his familiarity with the illiberality of such appointments, and with the certainty of having to resign an elevated and highly honorable position in the army to serve but two years as a Governor where the united voice preferred Governor Young to all others, which doubtless moved him to refuse to accept the appointment.

This refusal is stated upon report, which, if true, substantiates the correctness of our estimate of the Colonel, and corroborates our idea that President Pierce made the best appointment for us that our enemies would let him."

We will give the whole of the above which is only a piece of a well and ably written article at another time.

We learn that great efforts have been lately made, to increase the facilities for education. This we are glad to see, for isolated as we are from the rest of mankind, every effort should be made to keep us even at least with our Gentile neighbors; among other schools we find a society established entitled the "Universal Scientific Society."

The following officers were unanimously elected, viz: Wilford Woodruff, President; John Taylor, E. T. Benson, Lorenzo Snow, Orson Spencer, Albert Carrington, S. W. Richards, and John Lyon, Vice Presidents; Robert L. Campbell, Secretary; George D. Watt, Assistant Secretary; George A. Smith, Corresponding Secretary; W. W. Phelps, Assistant Corresponding Secretary; David Fulmer, Treasurer; George B. Wallace and A. F. McDonald, Auditors; J. V. Long and Walter Thompson, Reporters; T. R. Hawkins, Secretary pro tem.

The following will show the object of the Society:

ARTICLE I.—Title—"Universal Scientific Society."

ARTICLE II.—Object—The improvement and elevation of the intellectual powers and pursuits of its members.

1. By having lectures and essays on every branch of useful arts and sciences.
2. Through the use of a good library and reading room.
3. By collections in every department to form an extensive museum.
4. By obtaining instruments and apparatus to illustrate and advance the arts and sciences, and by every other laudable means within their reach.

As we find our name among the Vice-Presidents and as we are also a regent of the University, we call upon all our friends who may wish to assist us in this undertaking, who may have scientific or philosophical, instruments, books, maps, or curiosities or anything calculated to advance the interests of either the University or the above Society, to forward to us and we will see them sent to their appropriate place. They must be sent to us free of expense.

The Hons. G. A. Smith and E. T. Benson, attended a Lyceum meeting at North Cotton, Wood Ward. They say the City Plot is surveyed 200 rods by 97. 416 rods of earth has been built, 6 feet high and 6 feet thick, thirty houses erected within the limits of the wall, two school houses 30 by 20, that the ward contains 150 families and that they raised 20,000 bushels of wheat, that President Kimball's, large flowering mill is doing a good business. That there are three saw mills, two shingle and lath mills, a hemp and flax breaker propelled by water, and a thrashing machine factory. That the whole ward is dotted with splendid mansions, and comfortable houses. They give an account almost similar of the prosperity of Centerville. The hot spring had been lowered two feet by a ditch to pass the water to the lake. Two large ditches have been cut at the warm springs preparatory to making a good road.

There is great complaints about the irregularity of the mail. In the News of March 21st, they say the Eastern mail left Independence the 1st of Feb. and arrived in this city about 1 o'clock P. M. of the 16th inst. It started with one through and one way letterbag. It also started with four canvass sacks in which papers, books and documents are put and merely tied up. Only three of these sacks were brought through, one of them full, one of them half, and the other one third full. The News has the following:

SIOUX INDIANS.

By the politeness of Mr. T. S. Williams, of the firm of J. M. Horner & Co., we are enabled to furnish the following news:

SANDY POINT, 7 miles west of Fort Laramie, Feb. 14, 1855.

Messrs. J. M. Horner & Co., G. S. L. City:

GENTS—A part of our horses and mules, about sixty-five head, were driven off yesterday by the Sioux Indians; among them were three of your mules—the three best. There were six left by your partner, Mr. Williams; you have three remaining. We do not consider any property safe on this river, or lives either, any longer, as the Sioux, we think, have commenced their war on the traders, as well as the soldiers.

We remain, yours respectfully,
WARD & GUERRIER.

The Church Historian desires to obtain the names of the brethren who took part in the fight at Nauvoo, September, 1846. They will forward their names to C. E. Bolton, at Perry's store, or to Judge Smith, at the Post Office, G. S. L. City.

All is peace and prosperity in Utah; if they don't have so much news as we do, they are not bothered with so much excitement; there is no filibustering, no slavery or pro-slavery, no Kansas operations, no financial crises, no list of robberies, or murders, or Swartwouting; they can't even get up a knock-down. They have not yet learned that Bennett and the Times have ordered the President to send soldiers and kill off the varmint. Why, they will have to die before they know anything about it—happy ignorance! But Bennett has had them killed off so often they have got used to it; and furthermore, however it may shock his piety, the Mormons will live to see him dead and damned.

CALIFORNIA.

Elder P. P. Pratt writes from San Francisco, Jan. 20, that baptisms progress slowly, but that a wonderful revolution is in progress in the public mind. At a general conference held in St. Mary's Hall, Santa Clara, Dec. 30 and 31, five branches of the Church were represented, viz: San Francisco, Union City, Santa Clara, St. John, and Sacramento, with 120 members, mostly in good standing and active; and some are determined to "gather" to the Stakes of Zion, and do their duty. Elder Pratt was in good health, as were generally the Elders of that mission.

A BRIEF SKETCH OF THE HISTORY OF JOSEPH SMITH THE PROPHET, AND OF HIS PROGENITORS, WRITTEN BY HIS MOTHER, LUCY SMITH.

This work was first published in England, in 1853. I procured the manuscripts while on my last mission in the United States, and was informed, at the time, that most of the work was written under the inspection of the Prophet; but from evidences since received, it is believed that the greater part of the manuscripts did not pass under his review, as there are items which are ascertained to be incorrect.

These imperfections have undoubtedly arisen either from the impaired memory of the highly respected and aged authoress, or from the lack of correct information; or, which is the most probable, from the carelessness of the scribe in writing from time to time isolated statements from her mouth without a sufficient understanding of their connection.

In future editions the work will be carefully revised and corrected so far as we have knowledge. In the meantime, it is believed that this history will be interesting to the Saints, and to the public generally, as from it they can make themselves acquainted with some of the greatest and most remarkable events of modern times.

If the schools of our Territory would introduce this work as a "Reader," it would give the young and rising generation some knowledge of the facts and incidents connected with the opening of the grand dispensation of the last days.

ORSON PRATT, SEN.

[Papers published by the Latter Day Saints will please copy.]—Deseret News.

WE learn from the Millennial Star, England, that a very interesting meeting was held at the house of F. D. Richards, 36 Islington, Liverpool, being a re-union of the following Elders:

President Richards, President Daniel Spencer, Elders Dan Jones, C. G. Webb, Israel Barlow, George D. Grant, Cyrus H. Wheelock, W. C. Dunbar, James Ferguson, Wm. H. Kimball, P. C. Merrill, Joseph A. Young, J. A. Little, Edmund Ellsworth, Edward Martin, James Bond, John Toone, Moses Thurston, J. D. Ross, John Barker, and John Perry.

Many interesting remarks were made. The spirit of God was in their midst, and among other matters they discussed some of the good things of this life. Body and spirit, temporal and spiritual things always go better together. If it was not for this confounded big pond between us we should have liked to have been with them. Never mind, "there's a good time coming, boys, wait a little longer." We are going a pic-nicking and boat-sailing one of these days; wouldn't you like to be here?

The following, from the Millennial Star, shows rather a curious mistake:

"I will now relate a little anecdote, and conclude my letter. A few days since, as I was about to get my ticket at a railway station in this place (Wellingboro'), a policeman came up to me, and said, 'Is your name ——?' I said, 'No, sir.' He said, 'I believe it is;' and he told me I was his prisoner, at the same time he put on the hand-cuffs. I remarked, in a mild tone, he had better not be too fast, lest he might be mistaken. He said he saw me last night at ——. Said I, 'I preached in Wellingboro' last night.' He said he knew better, and he pressed me on to the police station, and kept me locked up for a while, during which time I wrote a letter to brother J. Bull, President of the Branch, but the policeman would not send it. I also wrote some in my journal, having my carpet bag in my lap for my writing desk.

After a while I was taken before the superintendent of the police force, who asked me a few questions in a very gentlemanly manner. After which he told the policeman to take off the irons from me, and gave him a good chastisement. He then turned to me and said he was very sorry for the mistake, stating that I bore the description, to some extent, that was given them of a man whom they were in search of; but, says he, 'As you have been committed, you will have to go before the magistrates to be acquitted according to law.' The magistrate being out of town five miles, a carriage was made ready, and we soon were seated in the same. I preached to the superintendent all the way there and back, and he seemed much interested in what I said.

After the magistrate had acquitted me, I bore a faithful testimony to him, which made him quake and tremble from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. The superintendent said I must call on him whenever I came to this place. Accordingly I do, and always meet with a kind and warm reception. He pays brother Bull for the privilege of reading THE MORMON, which he says he is very fond of. I have been invited to visit several of the families of the police force. In short, we now have means of doing that good that we otherwise would not have had.

I close by saying, may you ever share abundantly in those blessings God delights to bestow on the faithful, worlds without end. Amen."

Yours truly, R. W. WOLCOTT.

Bro. Woolcot was formerly a Methodist preacher; was passing through the Valley on a gold-digging excursion, or to manufacture Methodists, we don't know which, and got Mormonized. He is now on a mission in England. How singular that a Mormon Elder should be taken for a rogue; more singular that they should lose by their bargain, and find him to be an honest man; most singular that he should Mormonize his captors. Well, Paul made a Mormon of his jailer. After all there are stranger things.

A LARGE number of extensive mills have been but in operation in the Minnesota pineries this season. The last St. Paul Times gives an account of one which cost $120,000. It uses thirty saws, besides shingle, lath and clapboard machines, and employs 180 men, 50 yoke of oxen, and 17 span of horses in the pineries.

THE cost of the Norwalk disaster to the New York and New Haven Rail-road has been $280,000, and there are still unsettled claims against the company, It will not probably escape the liabilities and losses on account of that terrible affair short of $300,000.

Emigration.

THE ship Chimborazo arrived at Philadelphia on the 21st ult. with 432 Saints on board, under the Presidency of Elder Edward Stephenson. There was daring the voyage one infant died, and another young child was injured by a fall, which was the cause of its death. One or two births. The passengers were all in good health and spirits; between two and three hundred went forward on the 27th; the others employment was mostly provided for.

The ship S. Curling, S. Curling, master, arrived at this port on the 22d ult.; Elder Israel Barlow, President. She had when she left Liverpool 581 passengers on board, and had an increase of three on the passage, and no deaths; thus she had a net increase of three. Most of the passengers left on the 24th by way of Philadelphia, en route for the Valley; the remainder of those who were going forward, went on the 25th. All in good health and spirits.

The Mormon Immigration.

THE Valley of the Salt Lake is being rapidly peopled with Mormon immigrants from all quarters of the habitable globe, and the work of propagating the principles of this singular sect is now systematically carried on by elders and missionaries in almost every civilized as well as semi-savage country. These men labor with a zeal untiring, a devotion that knows no limit, suffering hunger and thirst, privation, insult and contempt, for the advancement of the faith they preach and profess. The great object sought to be attained by the Mormons is the establishment of a mighty theocracy, in the valley of the Salt Lake, where they may enjoy, without fear of molestation, the free exercise of their religious and social opinions. To this end the most strenuous efforts have been made to promote immigration to Utah, not only from the United States and Europe, but even from remote Asia and Africa. In every seaport of any consequence in this country and in Europe, emigration agents are located to give information to the inquiring, and to aid those who desire to go to Utah, and arrange for their safe and speedy transportation to that distant country. All along the line of travel, too, other agents are in waiting with the necessary supplies for the journey, and under the auspices of Mormonism the great land voyage across the plains is now almost as safe as a journey from New York to Albany.

The faithful of the fold of Latter Day Saints whose poverty prevents their undertaking the journey, are forwarded at the expense of the "Perpetual Emigration Fund." Wealthy men among the sect support this fund by their contributions, and those who are sent out at its expense mortgage a certain portion of the proceeds of their labor after arriving in the happy valley to repay the cost—thus the fund is made perpetual. The season for emigrating is between November and April; this season the Liverpool agency have sent off over 3,600 immigrants, of whom above 1,100 were sent at the expense of the fund. Heretofore these immigrants have usually entered this country through the Southern ports, avoiding New York altogether; but it would seem that the aversion is wearing off. Yesterday the packet ship S. Curling brought to New York 570 of these immigrants, and the ship William Stetson is on the way hither with 293 more. We believe there are still other vessels now due here laden with Mormons.

From a visit to the S. Curling we are enabled to lay some interesting facts before the readers of the Tribune respecting the order and management of the voyage. A large majority of the passengers are of the poorer classes of British peasantry, Ireland contributing but a small proportion, who are sent out to Utah at the expense of the Emigration Fund. They are mainly in families, only a few single men and women were on board. The married people were of all ages from tender 18 to hale 80, and appeared to enjoy good health and spirits. The vessel was the cleanest emigrant ship we have ever seen; notwithstanding the large number of her passengers, order, cleanliness and comfort prevailed on all hands, the between decks were as sweet and well ventilated as the cabin, and the orlopdeck was as white as scrubbing brush and holystone could make it. It would be well if the packet-ships that ply between this port and Liverpool were to imitate the system of management that prevailed on board this ship. The passengers were under the presidency of Elder Israel Barlow and two Councilors, Elders Perry and Robinson. The company was divided into seven wards, each superintended by a President and two Councilors, who together attended to the affairs of the ward, such as cooking, drawing water, morning and evening worship, looking after the sick, setting the watch, and in short directing the affairs, temporal and spiritual, of the people committed to their care.

These sub-Presidents and Councilors received their orders from the executive head of the expedition, President Barlow and his Councilors. The routine of daily duty was somewhat as follows: At 4 A. M. the men told off in rotation the night previous commenced cleaning the wards, at 5 o'clock morning worship, at 5 1-2 cooking commenced, the stewards of each ward being allowed the use of the galley for half an hour and priority of use being assigned to the wards in rotation every day. At another stated time water was served out. Dinner cooking commenced at 11, and tea at 5. At 8 o'clock evening worship was celebrated, and then the lights were put out and the night watch set. The duty of the latter was to guard against visits from the sailors, or indiscretions of any kind among the brethren. All of these duties were discharged with military precision at the summons of the bugle; for instance, the call to prayess was "Rosa May," and the night watch was set to the tune of "The Soldier's Tear." As far as we could learn, comfort, cleanliness, good humor, and good health prevailed throughout the voyage. The Saints will set out for Utah by way of St. Louis as soon as possible. Wagons, teams, and tents are now waiting for them on the Missouri River, and they expect to reach the Promised Land in September or October next.

In conversation with the Secretary of the expedition, Mr. William Willis, we learned that he was by profession a schoolmaster, and he had been a member of the Church of England. This is his first visit to America—his wife and family are already in Utah, where he will join them. In 1851 he went to India as a Mormon Missionary. From Calcutta he travelled from station to station to the Himalayas, 700 miles of the distance on foot, teaching and preaching the Mormon doctrines, to Europeans. Up and down the Ganges he wandered preaching with variable success. Next he journeyed through Burmah, tarrying at Rangoon about six months, where he made the acquaintance of some of the American Missionaries, among them Messrs. Kincaid and Vinton. During his Missionary tour he visited Penang and Singapore, and was the pioneer Missionary of his faith on the Island of St. Helena. He said that about 200 Mormons are now waiting for an opportunity to embark from India for Utah, and the efforts of the Mormon Missionaries are very successful, more especially among the natives, whose language they have learned.

We asked him for little light on the alleged plurality of wives among the Mormons. He said it was part of their faith to have as many wives as they desired, only when a man took a new wife he must first obtain the consent of the presiding Elder. Women are not permitted to enjoy a plurality of husbands but only a moiety of one. The slightest violation of the (Mormon) marriage relation on the part of either sex is punished with excommunication from the church. We asked why Mormons did not practice their peculiar views in this respect in Europe and the United States. He replied the Church always respected the laws under which they lived; any attempt by a Saint to carry the plurality principle into practice in Europe or here would be visited with instant expulsion from the Church. In Utah where Mormon law is paramount they lived up to their principles to the fullest extent. We did not ask him how the women liked polygamy but in the course of an argument by him in its favor the Mormon estimate of the sex was indirectly shown. He said woman was created as a help-meet for man to bear him children.—[New York Tribune.

China Mission.

PAROWAN, Feb. 16, 1855.

BRO. GEO. A. SMITH—After having visited the people, and, as far as possible, introduced the subject of our mission, we were politely informed, in most instances, that they did not wish to hear of our religion, and desired no reference to the subject. Upon other topics they were free and sociable, but felt to wonder at our presumption in endeavoring to establish our doctrines in Asia under the circumstances in which we placed ourselves; for they looked upon any person in a dependent position as worthy of no regard whatever, and beneath their notice. The other missionaries presented themselves backed by the god of this world, and were received with courtesy and respect, as desirable acquisitions to society; but the servants of the Lord were despised, their company not desired, and their doctrine unheeded even by the lowest caste of the English and American population.

China contains a population of 367 millions, and connect Japan and other countries contiguous to China, and though they have different dialects, about 400 millions of the human race have the same written language. The government of China is Patriarchal, and the religion of their leaders or officers of government is observed by all classes, and the presumption is, that when their leaders change the lower classes will change also.

The religion of China is Buddhism, and was introduced by the Tartars at the time the Dynasty was changed, and they became masters of the country, and required the Chinese to wear "tails" as a token of submission; this transpired about 180 years ago. The present revolution is to throw off the Tartar yoke, and return to the religion of their fathers, (however upon this point there is much speculation.) Yet it is confidently asserted that the present leader of the rebel party claims to be inspired by his Father, (the Almighty) with revelation to rid his country of the Tarters; and it is reported by the missionaries that he believes in visions, dreams, &c.

They hold that we are of the same family of spirits, are brethren and sisters, and that Jesus Christ was our brother, and was sent forth to do good to his brethren, and to do what his Father commanded him; so they believe that the present leader is sent forth by the Father to do the great work. They are far from being an ignorant people; the arts and sciences flourish in their way, and their paintings, and mechanical ingenuity in the manufacture of articles, more various perhaps than any other country will rank them not behind many nations, who boast of their superiority. Their great skill is displayed in imitation which they can accomplish to perfection. The country is not of greater extent than the United States, and to support such a vast population farming must be admirably conducted. They have a mountainous country, and the surface is tilled to their very tops. Much of the soil is irrigated, and produces in great abundance. The principal diet is rice, and other vegetables. They are a quiet and harmless people, and do not interfere with their neighbors.

A short time ago the ruins of a church, or synagoge, were discoveted near the centre of the empire, in which the books of Moses were found, and sent to England by the missionaries. Chinese history shows that their religion was formerly so much like that of the Jews, that they say the Jews took the form of religion from them.

When I reflect that this vast portion of the human race have the same characters for a language, with a history for so many years back, and comparatively so little known, I am led to wonder, and acknowledge the hand of God in this for some wise purpose.

Respectfully, JAMES LEWIS.

Correspondence.

From our Correspondent in Ireland.

THE following is from our old friend Ferguson, who resigned his Attorney-Generalship for the Territory of Utah, to go on a mission to his native land, Ireland. The letter exhibits the man, and needs no comments of ours. We can only say we are glad to hear from him, and we are sure our readers will at all times be pleased to see a representative for the "Shamrock" in the columns, as well as in the vignette of the Mormon:

199 COLLINGWOOD ST. BELFAST, April 30, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR BROTHER TAYLOR: My first business should be to apologize for my delay in acknowledging the receipt of a copy of your paper. It was as welcome to me, as a properly-boiled potatoe is to a hungry Irishman. After all the praises already bestowed, what can I say! Irishmen were once celebrated for their blarney: but the go-aheadity of Americans has snatched it all from them. I can but say—I like the Mormon. When I tore off the covering, I could but say to myself: How properly commenced! How like the way the Almighty works! who, before striking a blow towards the creation of our planet, commanded that Light should first shine. And when searching around among the mottoes rendered illustrious alike by their authors and their applications, I found the trefoil of my poor neglected country, hugging up close to the right wing of the strong eagle. I began to feel that there was yet a warm place for my Erin, close to the heart of the protecting genius of my adopted land. A multitude of feelings crowded upon my mind, as my eye glanced gladly from motto to motto; and from article to article; and ever foremost, and uppermost, the thoughts of our home, away—far off, in another land, flitted across; and with true fervor did I thank my God that that home—pure, holy and happy, had an advocate, true fearless and devoted like yourself, to demand for her her rights; and hurl back the falsehoods of her vilifiers in their begrimed teeth.

After I received from you the kind "God bless you" at home, up till my arrival in England, nothing but the usual routine of travel occurred to me. I was warmly welcomed in Liverpool by Prest. Richards; and after a short, but happy visit to Scotland, I arrived in this town on the 1st of last August.

You are aware that there had been many a hard struggle, by many a faithful man, to establish the Truth in Ireland. Still, in too many places the venerable ramparts of Superstition, that enclosed the thoughts, principles, and affections of the people, appeared impregnable; and rather were they content to perish, engulfed in the dark shades of their own darling walls, than venture beyond; and open their hearts to the light of Truth. I found but few believers; but among them were some of the genuine grit. Among the best was Elder H. E. Bowring, in Dublin, an appointee of your own, when on your last visit to England. In the midst of much and pretty bitter opposition (in the worst of which Elder Patrick Lynch—now, I presume, in Philadelphia—had a good share), we have struggled along, and I am glad to say we are advancing. Already some forty have been added. In addition to three native traveling Elders, I have with me Elders McAllister (in Belfast) and Bond (in Dublin) of the mountains, equally with myself, devoted to the interests of the Irish missions. As I have often felt after a cold night's march in the pelting storm, when the sun's rising strength burst through the dark clouds; so I feel now, that after a stormy dark time, the fog is dissolving, and there are bright times in reserve yet, for many a child of the sod. To you who have been an eye-witness, I need say nothing of the condition of the people.

While a general apprehension is, on the minds of all, that something fearful is at their doors, to a great majority of the people no change could be for the worse. And yet as veteran prisoners, the rust, accumulating co-temporarily with the greyness of their beards, has endeared to them their chains, and they tremble to hear the thunder whose bolts might rend them.

Though the naturalizing principles of the Gospel should, and do destroy all feelings of nationality, I cannot but watch, with great interest, the movements of the two parties, Native and Foreign, forming and accumulating strength and bitterness, in the midst of our Great Republic.

While I should much regret a forgetfulness on the part of my Irish brethren, of the deep debt of gratitude, thrice due to those whose bloody struggles in affliction, wrested from the grasp of an intruding tyrant, the privileges in which they claim a share—struggles, too, rendered doubly fearful through the strong opposing ranks of the claimants' progenitors—I should equally regret a forgetfulness on the part of my American brethren, of the Emancipating genius that presided over the assemblies of their fathers; and directed the ingathering of all, of every country, who had the fortitude to burst their prison-doors, though princes were their goalers; and seek repose under the expansive wings of Liberty. Can it, oh, can it be, that the death-blow is given to the Eagle of our country, and her murderers already glut themselves on her agonies, longing that with her last gasp she may flap her broad wings, in desperation but once clawing at the rotten spoil of an ocean speck, and then close them again forever! No, no, it cannot, will not be. Though the bow has been bent, and the shaft struck deep; there is a balm in the chambers of the West, to heal up the wound, however gaping and venomous as your light beaming from Utah among the constellations, is an apt representation.

Then again, stronger, gladder, and more expansive than ever, will our favorite bird spread abroad her wings; and as typified by your embrace in her congenial shadow, the withering rose; the crushed thistle and leek; and best, and more eternally verdant than all, the trodden down Shamrock.

Of the general movement of matters of all kinds in these countries, you are regularly informed from better sources than I can be. The work of God never flourished better. Prest. Richards lives high in the warmest affections of all the Saints, and especially of those who know him, as those only can know one another who have tasted of the clear, sanctified streams of our mountain home. I am anxious to hear from many of the brethren, with you in the United States. Among the rest, though I have much wished it, I have heard nothing from my dear friend, Elder James M. Barlow. Probably you would do me the kindness to tell the Brethren that I may be found through the office (36 Islington, Liverpool, England.) With kind love to all the Saints, and especially the Elders from home, in which Elders McAllister and Bond join; and to your dear family at home.

I am, with true respect, your brother and fellow-servant in Christ,

James Ferguson.

From Our Utah Correspondent.

Historian's Office,
G. S. L. City, March 29, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Dear Sir:—I again address you to post you up with regard to affairs in Utah, although there is but little of importance to communicate. It is a general time of health, in the mountains. The Saints in Iron county, have made some iron, from the ore, that will make horse nails, in some of their experiments with the Puddle furnance.

Chief Justice John F. Kinney, assigned by the Legislature to the Second Judicial District, held a District Court, at Nephi City, last week, for the trial of the murderers of Capt. Gunnison and party. Three of the Indians were convicted of murder in the third degree and sentence pronounced, imprisonment in the penitentiary for three years.

The weather has been fine during the last month. Farmers are busily engaged putting in grain and the counsel is to put in all they can. The workmen are busily engaged on the Temples foundation, bowery, &c. The new counsel-house is nearly completed and will be finished by Conference. The gates to the Temple block are being closed, to secure it from intrusion. The new Bowery on the north of the Tabernacle, will not be completed by conference, for want of suitable lumber. The Nauvoo Brass band gave a concert last evening at the Social Hall, of vocal and instrumental music, it was pretty well attended and highly entertaining and interesting. Great interest is taken on the subject of education, numbers of societies have been formed for that object. Elder Orson Hyde, has taught a grammer class of about thirty scholars for thirty evenings past, last evening was examination, the scholars appear to have made astonishing progress and most of them were new beginners. A new bridge is about completed across the Provo river which will be a good one, one hundred and seventy feet in length with substantial stone butments and piers. Several large fields are being enclosed in Utah county.

The Brethren of Cedar city are about building a Seventies Hall, the stock has mostly been taken at twenty-five dollar shares, Bishop Lewis, of Parowan, is building a store house for the tithing grain.

I think the congressmen, that are contending about the Rail roads, from the Pacific, had better apply to Nebraska and Utah Territories for right of way and build the road while they are talking about it. I close for the present and remain as ever yours, &c.,

Geo. A. Smith.

A Terrible Whirlwind in Illinois.

Loss of Life and Damage to Property in Cook County.

Chicago, May 24, 1855.

Accounts reached this city last night of a most terrific hurricane and whirlwind in the town of Jefferson, Cook county, and other places north and west of us.

On Tuesday afternoon a revolving funnel-shaped cloud passed swiftly along near the ground, about sixteen miles north of here, carrying up large sticks of wood, stones, &c. It described a semi-circle towards the southeast, twisting off large trees, and whisking them out of sight instanter. The whirlwind then broke in two and disappeared, but almost immediately formed again, and passed directly back, north and west, with redoubled violence. It struck a heavy frame house one mile from the Illinois and Wisconsin Railroad, tearing the roof instantly off, and almost immediately afterwards taking the whole house up the spout with all its contents. Nine persons in the house were drawn up and hurled down in different places; four of them were instantly killed, and others mutilated beyond any prospect of recovery.

The whirlwind then passed over a post and rail fence, leaving not the slightest vestige of it. It next took up a barn, and threw it upon the horses and cattle it contained, crushing them at once. The timbers of the house and barn were hurled down to the ground with such violence as to bury them almost out of sight! The house belonged to Mr. Page, whose wife, son and two grand-children were killed! Additional intelligence from the locality more than confirms the above! Accounts are given of persons being carried up one hundred feet in the air and then hurled down with great violence.

A number of eye witnesses have testified to the ravages of the tempest and describe it as most terrific. The same after noon, a severe hail storm occurred in this city, after which the sky presented a very singular appearance to the northward, and the weather changed from the most oppressive heat to the most chilling atmosphere.

Miscellaneous.

The Austrians in the Principalities.

A private letter from Bucharest, of the 29th ult. says:

On the 25th of February some Groat soldiers entered by force a private house in Krajova, where they ill-treated and murdered the mistress of the house, and dangerously wounded the husband. The Government intervened, and by menaces and persecutions prevented the inhabitants from following up the matter as they had determined, by carrying their complaint to the foot of the Sultan's throne.

On the 11th of March an Austrian officer who was passing along the principal street of Krajova, seeing a lady at the window whom he considered pretty, entered the house and ascended to the apartment. The lady, understanding that the man had come with intentions dishonorable to her, opposed his entering her room, and when he forced his way in, uttered loud cries for help. The people in the neighborhood ran to acquaint the husband of what was passing, and the latter ran to his house, and said to the officer, "What do you want here, sir; whom are you seeking? I do not know you. You are not billetted in my house, and this lady whom you are insulting is my wife." He had scarcely said these words when the officer drew his sword, plunged it into the bosom of the unfortunate husband, and then marched off as if he had performed some glorious feat of arms. The woman uttered cries of despair when she beheld the deed.

The neighbors crowded into the house, and the sight of the corpse bathed in a pool of blood, excited a sentiment of horror and a thirst for vengeance. Some hastened to announce the murder to the authorities, sent of couriers to Kalaat, in order to inform the Turkish commandant, who lost no time in sending to Krajova a battalion of infantry, a squadron of cavalry and artillery, and the greater part proceeded to the quarters of the Austrian General to demand justice and reparation. The latter told them that they might go to the——; that he would not punish his brave soldiers for the sake of fellows of their description. This brutal reply excited general indignation, and the inhabitants finding themselves aggrieved in what they held most sacred—their honor, property and lives—assembled at different points of the town, and closed their shops. The rallying cry was, 'Death to the Austrians'! One against four! Let the people of Bucharest submit to be slaughtered like cattle if such is their pleasure.

A general rising ensued, and the inhabitants, armed with sticks, stones, iron bars and axes, attacked the Austrians, they met in the streets, and put them to death. The Austrians, also, turned out in arms, formed in line, and charged the people, killing about forty persons. The fury of the population redoubled. The Roman soldiers and the national Gendarmes also drew up in battle array, rushed upon the Austrians with fixed bayonets, and drove them out of the town with considerable slaughter; 300 Austrians and 50 Romans lay dead on the field. Our men afterward reentered the town, and the Austrians remained encamped in the neighboring fields, after burying their dead, without daring to return. The govenment found it necessary to interfere. The chief of the police of Bucharest repaired to Krajova to inquire into the affair, and notwithstanding his anxiety to exonerate the Austrians from all blame, he was obliged to admit their guilt. The administrator of the town was superseded in his post, because he too warmly defended his fellow-citizens.

The shops are still closed, and the Austrians continue in their camp outside the town. The exasperation of the people has not abated. They loudly insist on the formation of a high commission, and are determined to send a deputation to Constantinople to demand justice from the Sultan, in virtue of the first clause of their capitulation signed by Mahomed II., in 1460, in favor of the Romans, and by which the Sultan "undertakes, in his own name, and in that of his successors, to protect Wallachia, and to defend it against every enemy, requiring only supremacy over that principality, the Woiwodes of which shall be held to pay the Sublime Porte a tribute of 10,000 piastres." This deputation will certainly leave for Constantinople if the Prince does not oppose its departure. Such are the sufferings of this kind, peaceable, and hospitable people. Will it be believed that these atrocities have been perpetrated in the 19th century and at a period when civilization is engaged in a powerful crusade against barbarism?

P. S.—The number of victims to the brutality of the Austrians hitherto kown is 247. This number is official.

From the London Times of the 23d.

The Siege of Sebastopol.—In the present state of the siege of Sebastopol, all that the allied Generals can hope to effect is to subdue and occupy some of the outer works which the Russian engineers, under the command of General Tolleben, have constructed with so much skill, hardihood, and efficiency. Accordingly, while the principal efforts of the French are directed against the triple battery which they call the Flagstaff Battery, but which is commonly described in our plans as the Garden Battery, our fire is mainly directed against the Great Redan, in front of our own Lancaster battery and Picket's hill; and the French attack on the extreme right is occupied with the works in front of the Malakoff Tower. Of these three points of attack the first is the most advanced, and that which most nearly threatens the interior of the town. We do not anticipate that the effect of the fire which commenced on the 8th of April will be the immediate reduction of the place itself, and we shall be well satisfied if this attack leaves the allied armies in possession of some of the advanced works which are the main defences of Sebastopol, and have hitherto proved the most formidable obstacle to the success of the siege. A decided advance of this nature would be the surest pledge of our ultimate success. It has been well observed by a French contemporary writer of great judgement on military affairs, that the natural irregularity of the ground about Sebastopol, and the difficulties of the position of the besieging armies, represent on a large scale those defences which the art of fortification invents and constructs for the protection of places less favored by nature. Thus the ravines and hills outside the town, sloping down to the valley of the Tchernaya and the harbor, form so many covered ways, counter-approaches, and detached forts which the Russian engineers have used with as much skill as if they had been artificial outworks to the town, while, on the contrary, the scientific officers of the allied armies have evidently been perplexed by the novelty and irregularity of the ground, although these circumstances, judiciously employed, might have been turned to our advantage. Thus the Russians have so placed their new batteries on Mount Sapoune as to enfilate our position, should we advance to the attack of the Malakhoff Tower. Yet in the earlier period of the siege the choice of all these external positions was in our hands.

Several occurrences, which were announced by the last mail, clearly indicated that important events were shortly to be expected. We received at first with some uncertainty the statement that 15,000 Turks under Omar Pasha had landed at Kamiesch Bay; but it is now assertained that early in the present month, Colonel Simmonds was sent back to Eupatoria to organize this expedition. Five French steamers arrived to convey the troops, and, although the weather in the first week of April prevented their immediate embarkation, it is certain that some of the finest regiments in the Turkish service have been conveyed to Sebastopol to take part in the ensuing operations. At the same time we learn that the Egyptian division, which is composed of excellent troops, organized by French officers, has been despatched in all haste from Constantinople to the Crimea; and before long the first detachments of the Sardinian corps will have proceeded to the seat of war. Before the month of May is much advanced it is certain that the allied armies in the Crimea will amount to a far larger force then had been anticipated. The medical officers have been instructed by Lord Raglan to make further preparations for the contingencies of active war. Dr. Hall reports that 1,400 patients can be accommodated in the hospitals on shore in the Crimea, including the new huts applied to this service, and that 620 can, if necessary, be embarked in steamers fitted up as hospital ships.

While these preparations and the continued fire of the whole line of batteries against the town, and its outworks indicate the near approach of a more decisive period, in this difficult and protracted siege, it is probable that the enemy is not idle behind that range of hills, which altogether masks his positions and his movements from the observation of the allied Commanders. Lord Raglan reports on the 7th that fresh troops and considerable convoys have entered the town, and that other bodies of troops have quitted it. There can be no doubt that a powerful Russian army occupies the stragetical position of Simperopol, with a view either to relieve the place we are besieging or to fall at a suitable moment on the works near Balaklava. Hence, the importance of increasing the strength of the troops who have to guard our extended lines of countervallation, and to cover the whole of our own intrenchments, while we are working steadily onwards towards Sebastopol. We find, however, nothing in this recent intelligence to divert us from the conviction we have repeatedly expressed, that, although the attack upon the southern side of the place may be carried on as far as possible with the means we have for its reduction, no decisive success can be obtained until we are in a condition to invest the north side also by the operation of some part of the allied armies on the Belbeck or in the interior of the Crimea.

Petrifaction of Human Bodies.

In the old Cathedral Church of Bremen is a vault, the atmosphere of which possesses the peculiar property of preserving from decay all bodies that may be placed therein.

Visitors are shown eight human bodies, besides a number of cats and dogs, monkeys, birds, &c., all of which, by mere exposure to this atmosphere, have become dried and free from all offensive effluvia, resembling in appearance coarse parchment.

The body nearest the door is that of an English Major, said to have lain here one hundred and eighteen years.

The second, that of a German student, who lost his life in a duel. The hard, dry flesh still shows the sabre wounds on his throat and arm. His body has been here one hundred and seventy years.

The third, that of a Swedish countess, whose body has remained free from the lot of common mortals for one hundred and four years.

The fourth, that of a Swedish general, who was killed in the "Thirty years' war," and whose throat still exhibits the mark of the wound of which he died.

The fifth is that of his aid-de-camp, who lost his life at the same time, by a cannon ball striking him in the side.—The destruction of the parts is plainly visible.

The sixth body is that of a workman, who fell from the steeple of the church when near its completion—four hundred years ago—and broke his neck. Owing to this accident, the peculiar properties of this vault became known: for the body of the deceased workman was laid in this vault for a few days, and having evidenced no signs of decomposition, the singularity of the fact induced the authorities to permit it to remain during all that time.

The seventh is the body of an English lady, who died one hundred and thirty years since of a cancer on the lower jaw; the ravages of the disease are still perceptible in the ulcerated flesh.

The eighth is the body of a working man who has lain here for sixty years.

In a marble sarcophagus, standing the middle of the vault, are said to repose the mortal remains of the Sweedish Chancellor, Van Auglebrechten; but they are not permitted to be exposed to public view, on account of some still surviving relatives of the family.

Each of these bodies retains to a great degree the appearance peculiar to life itself. Thus the Swedish General was a short, round-faced man, inclined to corpulency; his aid-de-camp a slender, well proportioned man, in the prime of life. As in general appearance so also in facial expression do these bodies differ; the parchment like skin, though drawn tightly over the bones, still shows something of the manner in which the muscles beneath once worked.

The only reasonable solution of the peculiarity of this result (for no other part of the church possesses it) that I have heard, is that here all the plumbers' work of the building was executed, in melting and otherwise preparing the materials for the roof. We can only suppose then that the entire chamber became so-surcharged with lead, that it has continued ever since to give forth vapors, which, forming an antiseptic chemical compound of lead, have operated upon the cadavera exposed to its influence.

Artesian Well of Grenelle, France.

One of the most extraordinary things in Paris or indeed in the world, says a correspondent of the Newark Advertiser, is the Artesian Well of Grenelle. It was begun in 1834, and finished after several forced suspensions about the year 1841. It is bored in the centre of the Court of the Albatoir, goes seventeen hundred feet (one eighth of a mile) into the bowels of the earth, and the column of water nine inches in diameter rises in a copper tube one hundred and twelve feet above the surface. From this elevation it descends by means of another tube to the ground, and is conducted to the reservoir at the Pantheon, whence it is distributed for the use of the inhabitants. The temperature of the water is constantly about eighty degrees Fahrenheit. It holds salts in solution, among the rest, iron (which colors glass submitted to its action), and is highly charged with carbonic acid gas.

The force that drives a column of water up to an elevation of 1800 feet, and with such rapidity as to supply 3,400,000 gallons in 24 hours; the force that shows itself to be variable, sometimes comparatively quiet, at others almost terrific in its violence, is thought to be vonlcanic, and to result from expansion within the inner crust of the earth,—to be in fact a sort of explosive escape from an artificial valve in the immense steam boiler on whose surface we live.

When the well was first opened, and before the water was carried to its present height, vast quantities of mud came over, from which the height of the column now clarifies it. But for a while the residents in the vicinity were greatly alarmed, thinking that the ground on which they lived was being gradually undermined by the action of the water, and that some day they would be engulfed. This notion has long ceased to alarm them, as it is evident that the auger has pierced through the rocky exterior into the very interior, the soft central mass of earth, whence the detritus that frightened the Parisians proceeded, and not as they ignorantly imagined, from just beneath their homes.

The Cost of a Bombardment.

The Courier and Enquirer says that the British Government and people are beginning to understand, by means of augmented taxes, and the opening of the fire of the Allies suggests the cost of the iron balls which have been thrown into Sebastopol by the five hundred cannon which have vomited them in what Gorchakoff called "an infernal fire." Each of these guns fired one hundred and twenty rounds a day, which gives a total for the five hundred, of sixty thousand rounds. This fire had continued for thirteen days, making an aggregate of seven hundred and eighty thousand missiles rained upon the city. The daily delivery of iron to the Russians would amount to two million seven hundred thousand pounds, and a total for the thirteen days, of thirty-five million, one hundred thousand pounds—the prime cost of which, in the rough, at the average price of pig iron in England for the year, was not less than three hundred and thirteen thousand, three hundred and eighty dollars.

"If the cannon balls fired from the allied lines during the thirteen days were rolled into rail bars, weighing sixty pounds to the yard, the bars would extend three hundred and thirty-two miles, or if laid for a railroad, would suffice for a single track road from New York to Albany, with all the necessary turn-outs.

"The charge of powder for each gun would probably average about six pounds, which would show an expenditure for the thirteen days of four millions six hundred and eighty thousand pounds of powder. Such powder is worth here eighteen cents a pound, but in England would not probably cost more than fifteen cents, at which price the powder cost seven hundred and two thousand dollars."

His Holiness the Pope came near losing his life in the cloister of the monastery of St. Agnes, while entertaining some distinguished guests at dinner. After dinner, about one hundred and fifty persons were surrounding him, having very graciously permitted the pupils of the college to kiss his foot; with this pressure the floor gave way, and Pope, prelates, cardinals, generals, and soldiers were precipitated through it. Pio Nino descended unhurt, and sitting in the papal chair, was extricated from the wreck amidst the cry of Miracolo! Miracolo! from all around.

We received on Thursday last a brief epistle from our friend P. P. Pratt, in San Francisco, enclosing an advertisement, which we published some time ago.

It would seem from the following extract that he is going to make things move:

"To-day I received through the Western House a press, type, paper, &c., from the Sandwich Isles. To-morrow I start for Santa Clara, fifty miles, to organize and see a company off for the Lake.

Yesterday I received, at the same instant, news from Oregon, Sandwich Isles, Liverpool and New York. The New York news was no more nore less than the first and fourth numbers of The Mormon. It is first-rate in design, type, size, paper, presswork, and above all, in subject matter. It did my soul, heart and eyes good to see it. Please send me on to this office 24 numbers weekly."

As P. P. Pratt is an old editor and publisher, we certainly appreciate his good opinion of our attempts in this place, and in reply can assure him that we shall hail with pleasure the coming forth of his "Mormon Herald."

Louis Napoleon was shot at lately by an Italian; but although within two or three yards of the Emperor, the assassin failed in his design.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, Il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions á son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier á notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire á l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systémes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.

No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

Our Church in the Valley.

Half screen'd by the trees in the Sabbath's calm smile,
Our Church in the Valley how meekly it stands!
Our villagers gaze on the now hallow'd pile—
It is dear to their hearts, it was raised by their hands.
Who loves not the place where they worship their God?
Who loves not the ground where they may repose?
Dear ever the daisy that blooms on the sod,
For dear is the earth out of which it arose.

Then say, shall the Temple to our Father we've built,
Which the storms for long ages may battle in vain,
Be abandon'd by us through supineness or guilt,
Or say, shall it fall by the rash and profane?
No! perish the impious hand that would take
One shred from its altars, one stone from its towers;
The dear blood of Martyrs has been shed for its sake,
And its fall, if it fall, shall be redden'd with ours.

HOWARD.

Pro and Anti-Slavery Again.

Last week we gave a very lengthy account of the Slavery and anti Slavery question; but as it seems to be the great absorbing topic of the day, the following ably written article, from the New York Daily News, of May 15, will be read with interest:

THE TOCSIN SOUNDING.

Last week, with its throng of anniversary celebrations, was especially marked with incidents which bode no good to the peace and progress of our common country. Two Senators of the United States, elected to their exalted position by the votes of a free people, and representing one great commonwealth of this confederacy, have appeared upon the public rostrum before the eyes of vast audiences to uphold, defend and urge forward an attack upon the feelings, the principles and the rights of sister States, which, if continued, must plunge us first, in all the horrors of a civil war, and, afterward, into the lowest depths of political and national degradation.

Nor, in saying this, do we court the aid of rhetoric or seek to amuse our readers with mere idle figures of speech. The facts themselves are too portentous; the time too truly "out of joint;" the horizon around us too darkly overhung with boding clouds to permit a sober mind one hour's indulgence in the sports of metaphor and decorative phraseology.

Henry Wilson and Charles Sumner of Massachusetts,—whatever the men may be in themselves, whether of the stuff that makes up dangerous traitors or the mere partisan demagogues of the moment; whether endowed with transcendant courage and ability or merely criers of the forum; whether equal to the task of guiding, directing and consummating a gigantic treason, or simply available automata inspired and moved by mightier intellects and hands,—have, at least, uttered a public manifesto of disunion with their Senatorial lips, and signed and stamped it with their Senatorial names and station.

We know the plea they make full well, it has been uttered, for ages, by all sides and parties, in all lands and for all causes. It is the plea of Liberty, in whose name, alas, so many and such fearful crimes have been committed: and to sustain this plea all the devices of appearance; all the arts and graces of eloquence; all the carefully marshaled line of sophistries; all that the closest eye of the historical compiler, assisted by ripe scholarship and practiced ingenuity could bring to bear for point and illustration, was advanced and enforced against the fabric of our Union with zeal, and energy, a fire, that has its fit portrayal only in the pages upon which the sublimest poet of our language has painted the lurid splendors of infernal conclaves. And this was done from the histrionic stage, amid all the meretricious illuminations and adornments of a theatre, before an audience of thoughtless men and giddy women, assembled there as they would have crowded to applaud the song of some gifted warbler of the Opera, or to weep and shout by turns under the spell of tragic genius in its most studied paroxysms.

And what an actor stood before them in Charles Sumner! A form towering like Lucifer's—the Son of Morning—above all his fellows; gesture grand and dignified; a brow lofty and broad; a voice at once powerful and sweet, and words in flowing sentences so honeyed that all the "bees of Hymettus" seemed to swarm around his lips.

He performed his part with a dramatic effect, too, fully equaling the pre-eminence of his person; the very monotony of his accent seemed to give weight and solemnity to his phrases, and when he reached the culmination of his mise en scene, and invoked overthrow upon what he styled the "Slave Oligarchy," there arose that thunder of applause Forrest commands so well when he brandishes the war hatchet of Metamora. Boxes, pit and gallery united in the ovation, and we too could have joined it had Mr. Sumner worn the sock and buskin appropriate to the boards on which he stood. But when we remembered the avowal he had uttered, the contest he proclaimed, and the inevitable results of madness so magnificent, yet so perilous to every interest that is held dear by the citizen of this Republic, we found no response within our hearts but indignation and shame. Indignation that eminent talent and position should be thus prostituted to do the work of our nation's enemies; and shame that an American audience, however unreflecting, could be found not only to sit by patiently but to applaud, while our self destruction as a free people, attended by the most flagrant violation of every solemn compact, of every sentiment of justice, and every principle of reason was thus recommended as a civilized expedient and enjoined as a popular duty.

"But," some one who reads this may reply, "your view of Mr. Sumner's harangue is exaggerated; it was but a public lecture, and was paid for at the rate of 25 cents per head by all who heard it." This is true; Mr. Sumner received his pay, yet the laborer is worthy of his hire, and even the soldier must have his rations and his wages. Mr. Sumner was put forward to utter the words of treason, and was provided with the "material aid" of the occasion, but he figured in no temporary show. Behind him stood the black ranks of foul conspiracy; the British Garrison was close at hand, and Phillips was the valet who waited behind to gather up the champion's mantle, and to exclaim "well done! brave free-lance!"

Their language and their aims are not to be mistaken, although the later full extent of them may not be understood. If any doubt remained on that point it was dispelled by the session of select conspirators on Thursday last at the Baptist Church in an obscure but adjacent street. There were none of the pomps of the Metropolitan in that conventicle, but the house dedicated to God's service re-echoed with an uproar of an orgie which the fashionable amphitheater perhaps would not have tolerated. Denunciation and abuse were uttered there in coarser but bolder tones; they thrive, at present, under the shadow of the pulpit! Art and elegance lost something, but plainness was, undoubtedly, the gainer. The Garrisons, the Phillips, and the Burleighs laid aside that little gloss of courtesy they had assumed on Broadway, and reverted to the vernacular of vulger treason. Mingling their hoarse ravings with the feeble twaddle of unsexed women, and disgracing their deluded colored hearers by gestures and language which the latter would have been ashamed to use, they strained every privilege accorded to men under any decent form of government to the utmost, by invocations to the most hellish passions that disfigure humanity. "What good would a desolution of the Union achieve for you? asked the mulatto, Frederick Douglass, in defense of his own peculiar views. "What would you do, if it were dissolved?"

"Do?" replies the white man, Wright, springing with furious gestures to his feet, "We would unite as a Northern Confederacy with the Slaves of the South against their masters!" and this blatant sedition was rapturously applauded by the select few grouped around Garrison where he sat perched like a bird of evil omen above the rostrum!

Yes, reader, these same men sat near Charles Sumner when he sought to cover up the grave of our public peace with the flowers, of his accumulated rhetoric; they dug the pit to whose edges he was tempting an unwary people; they prepared the poison he presented to your lips in a chalice carved and wrought by a master's hand. He came forward to perform the part assigned him, but they grouped behind the scenes, managing and developing the plot. He and they are one—not in talent, not in presence, not in power, but one in wickedness, one in effort and one in doom. They stand alike before you—open acknowledged, self-proclaimed conspirators against the rights of your American brethren, against your own tranquility, against the Constitution and the traditions of your country, against the true destinies and happiness of the race which they pretend to succor, against the hopes of nations, against the grand voices of history past and the halcyon promises of the coming time, against all that is right, that is just, that is reasonable in man, and against the recognized handiwork and mandates of the omnipotent God!

Oh! it is idle to gather phrases and metaphors from every quarter of earth and heaven, to ransack the stores of fancy and group together the phantasmagoria of a mystic philosophy, for the illustration of "a cause" like this.

Pathetic pictures, fine spun quibbles of logic impassioned appeals to the vague sympathies of heated imaginations and unsteady intellects and even the salvos of theatrical applause drowning the consciousness of truth in the intoxication of a dazzling falsehood, cannot change one jot or one tittle of the great fact that stares us in the face. A political crisis unexampled in modern annals is upon the world. In Europe, the arts of peace and industry are being brushed away by the rising tide of war which threatens to career ere many weeks in one devestating deluge of blood from the Neva to the skirts of the Atlantic, endangering Western civilization, and throughout the East washing down in ruin every landmark that Christianity has, in the lapse of long ages, toilsomely set up to measure her progress there. To what abasement has not the spirit of the Western people already fallen? Behold France bound hand and foot, and triumphed over in her degradation by the Coup d'Etat—an ambush of the night! Look at England trailing in the dust at the chariot wheels of her conqueror—her meteor flag that "for a thousand years"—thus the boastful ditty runs, "has braved the battle and the breeze" ducking its obeisance to the tri-color which has been dabbled by a drunken soldiery in the blood of women and children; her proud Queen—Victoria Plantagenet—Victoria Regina—bending her royal knee while around the knee of Louis Bonaparte her royal hand binds the Order of the Garter! Is this no slavery? Are here no rights of man, no dignity of man, no happiness of man trodden and trampled down? No! Look then to yonder festering promontory where the best and bravest children of the people are offered up to the Moloch of War in hecatombs—where atrocities and miseries are inflicted by a hellish ambition and a brutish incapacity which would make the lot of the comfortable Southern slave almost a vision of Eden beyond death to the British soldier, and thence turn your sickened gaze back to the desolate firesides, the ruined homes of "Old England"—aye, of poor old England—spit upon and laughed at in her dotage by the French Usurper. Your sight will embrace mourning and desolation that cannot be solaced in one view with the English bondage of the workshop, with the bitter slavery of English operatives, in her mines and in her factories, and in her ships and on her streets.

What message will you bring back to us from this free Europe, this liberated England, this elevated France which, unasked, proffers the boon of "the abolition of slavery" to us! Will you not say—"There I have seen war, and famine, and pestilence, and death and rottenness—besotted rulers, a false Christianity, a ruined and enslaved people!" Will you not say: "here on these shores peace and plenty open their arms to receive all who fly from the misery and darkness beyond! Here is the home of that white race to which God has given the intellect that can master the material world and grapple with the mysteries of hidden science. Here is sown the germ which will give liberty to America, progress to Europe, and enlightenment to the darkened sons of Africa and Asia. Here we will find, in the march of human endeavor, the Utopia of the world.

Yet all this, and in the face of the pregnant time, would these mad fanatics change! For peace, they would give us sword and fire; for the Gospel, imprecations and a weltering sea of fraternal blood. Where the homes of our parents and our children in woodland and city, secure and blest under the sun of an advancing freedom, they would sow blackness and ashes! Where man is coping successfully with the rudeness of nature, and beautifying the desert while he tames his fellow man, they would give us the infernal revelry of barbarian camps, holding their jubilee of hell over the burning and the slaughter of our kindred; while upon themselves and upon the common race, impenetrable gloom settled down, blotting out their high deeds of modern achievement, their aspirations and their hopes for other untold cycles of wrong and martyrdom. The colors are deep, but they are real if they give but a faint reflection of the abyss before us. And the enemy is at our gates.

Yes, Charles Sumner, it is this consummation that you lend abilities worthy of the great cause that beckons to us all; and you and such as you would overtake your country. In that hour the Marat of the plot would triumph! The blood-thirstiest villain would preside in the council of savages, while for you, the scholar, the dialectician, the gentleman, there will be but the pre-eminence of the scaffold.

But our people are awaking to the truth, and the hand that first aimed the treason is palsied. A few weeks may bring us a message from beyond the ocean that will rally every patriot around the flag of our Union, and, in that hour, when the hearts of our eternal foes quail before the retribution that awaits them, shall there be no scourge for the domestic traitors whose impious hands have been laid in violence upon the hallowed tables of our Constituion!

We give the following, to make out a ballance, in double-entry, that our readers may be posted on both sides of the question.

THE COMING CRISIS.

It is clear that our Nation is approaching a crisis which must settle or unsettle American politics for many years to come. The great battle between Freedom and Slavery, toward which the partisans of the latter have been hurrying us for many years, has actually begun. It is no longer a war of words or of ideas. It is no longer a question for the ballot-box, but for the cartridge-box. For the first time in the history of our Government, its authorities, its laws, its officers, are powerless to protect American citizens on their own soil; and, what is more alarming than all, there appears to be no serious attempt to sustain the laws or the officers; the Government itself apparently winks at the violence that tramples its own authority under foot.*

What is to be the end of these things? Where are these outrages to stop? If a territory large enough for an empire can be invaded by an armed banditti and its laws struck down with impunity for the purpose of planting Slavery there, what security have the States that when the Slave-power shall have gained the complete ascendancy it now contends for they shall not share the same fate? The power that tramples upon the dearest rights of freemen in Kansas will not hesitate to do the same thing in any State of this Union when opportunity offers or occasion demands. Slavery knows no law but its own will. It respects no right but might. Itself the offspring of war, its hand is ever against Liberty and all the muniments of Liberty.

The issue which Slavery makes in Kansas now, must be met now, or not only Kansas is lost but our national liberties are all lost. The day that sees the conquest of that immense and fertile Territory "acquiesced" in by the people of the Free States will see the hearse and shroud of American Freedom. The people of the North must never acquiesce. From hill-top and valley, from farm and workshop, from the pulpit, the school-house and the fireside must the word go forth, "Kansas shall never be given up to Slavery. It was guaranteed to Freedom by our fathers and the fathers of the Republic, and free it shall be though a thousand Unions and millions of freemen fall in its defense."

The Free States have already been pushed to the wall and can retreat no further. They must now turn on the aggressors or be crippled and subjugated forever. The struggle in Kansas is their struggle. The results will be theirs. If mob law, the bowie-knife and Slavery conquer Kansas the North is conquered. The day that sees that Territory a Slave State of this Union sees the sceptre of Slavery wave over the entire American Continent. It must never be. The spirit that nerved our fathers in the days of our country's earliest struggle for liberty must nerve the arms and hearts of their children now against a far more relentless tyranny. If the National Government will not do its duty and protect the liberties of the people the people must protect themselves. The Free States must take the weapons into their own hands and use them.

Don't tell us that it will dissolve the Union. The failure of the Union to protect the rights of the people and to protect the public tranquility is itself a dissolution of the Union. By that failure it absolves every American freeman from his allegiance to the Union and proclaims the right and duty of all to protect themselves. The only Union to which the people of the Free States owe allegiance is a Union for Liberty under law. And when it becomes perverted for the overthrow of Liberty and Law, it has no rightful sovereignty over the acts or consciences of Americans.

Disguise it as we may, to this it is coming, and that rapidly. We must bring the Union back to the policy of the fathers, or it will be dissolved. It cannot be sustained by the bowie-knife and revolver. It ought not to be if it could. And the sooner the North comes to look this thing in the face the better. With such men as are now defying all law and authority and all decency in Kansas, no Union can be other than a disgrace and curse to the people of the Free States. Away, then, with all bug-bear fears of a dissolution of the Union. It can never be dissolved while true to the purposes for which it was formed. When it becomes hopelessly false to those purposes, its end cannot come too soon.—[The Independent Democrat, (Concord, N. H.)

* Not exactly the first time; we could cite to a number of circumstances, where thousands of American citizens more than once have been driven from their homes without redress. Did the writer ever hear of some thousands in the State of Missouri, who were obliged to leave their homes, and after paying Government for lands, could not be protected in it? Did he ever hear of a place called Nauvoo; a city of 10,000 inhabitants, destroyed, deserted, and forsaken, and millions of property lost? Oh! that was your ox; it was another matter. The flood-gates were then open. The shoe now begins to pinch.—[Ed.

The newspapers in the southwest of Missouri report that a large gold mine has been discovered on the head waters of the Arkansas river, about five hundred miles west of Springfield, Mo. The mine is said to be as rich as any of the gold mines of California, and hundreds of dollars have been taken out in one week.—[St. Louis Evening News.

Utah.

We have received files of the Deseret News up to March 28th, from which we copy the following article:

Inconsistent Conduct of the United States towards her Territories.

In a Republican Government so liberal, and professedly enlightened, as that of the United States, a person might reasonably expect to see the principle of "popular sovereignty," the basis upon which the whole political machinery is alleged to rest, carried out to the fullest extent, and not only each state but also each territory be left to operate untrammeled so long as they kept within the bounds of the Constitution. Again, it is not strange that our Revolutionary fathers were more or less influenced by the precedents of the government whose yoke of "taxation without representation" they had so recently thrown off, but it actually is strange that, in this boasted age of progression, the very principle against which our fathers so manfully struggled should be carried out towards our territories, almost as extensively as it was by Great Britain towards the Colonies. This is as entirely opposed to reason, justice, and the professed principles of freedom and "popular sovereignty," as it was in the days of the Revolution, and the perpetuity of so glaring an inconsistency can only be accounted for upon the principle of traditionary influences, human weaknesses, delight in oppression, and love of power though unjustly obtained and exercised.

Such will continue to be the practice so long as placemen, office-seekers, and demagogues can manage to hoodwink, and lead or divide the masses of the people.

The revenue of the United States is raised from duties and land sales, for at present the mail carrying is reported not to pay expenses. This is taxation so far as duties are concerned, and is revenue in every sense of the word, and "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives."

Now, it is well known that residents in territories pay revenue, in common with residents in states, on all the imported articles they consume, in the purchase of public lands, and in the payment of postage, and for all this how many votes have they in bills of such vital interest and importance? Not one, no more than the Colonies had in the British Parliament.

The Colonies could draw up a petition and forward it to the home government for their consideration, and a territory can only send a delegate to Congress, a mode but little more than tantamount with the privilege of petition, as the delegate has no right to vote on any question, no matter of how much importance to his constituents. The inhabitants of territories, in addition to paying their proportion of revenue, are proportionally interested in the administration of the affairs of the General Government as managed by the President and Congress, and rightly so, since they are members of the same body politic, and hence, in a free government, should also most unlimitedly be members of the same body corporate.

It may be asked, are they not? No. Are they taxed, and are they liable to have their legislative proceedings and internal policy scanned by those who are in power without their voice? Yes; though, fortunately for the development of freedom, "popular sovereignty" is beginning to be better understood, and many of the most intelligent and influential of our statesmen and writers are battling for territorial rights to self-government, but this has to be done in the midst of much violent opposition from the partisans of hoary headed superstitions and false traditions through which craft they have their place and living.

But how taxed, and subject to be controlled in the acts of their Legislative Assemblies, without any election in the matter! By having no vote, as we have shown, in the body where all revenue bills must originate, nor for the appropriation of that revenue, and by the wording of Acts establishing territorial governments, viz.:

"All laws passed by the Legislative Assembly and Governor shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States, and if disapproved shall be null and of no effect."

You can now clearly comprehend that all the territories of our boasted Republic, although contributing their full quota to swell the public revenue, are entirely at the mercy of men for whom they are denied the right of casting one vote for or against. So far as mere dollars are concerned, this tyrannical relic of monarchial usage is not so particularly odious, but when it threatens to interfere with the internal or home policy of freemen of the descendants of those patriotic sires who fought to achieve "popular sovereignty," it behooves every lover of liberty and equal rights in our Union to take a bold and unequivocal stand against the farther prevalence of practices so rankly savoring of despotism.

There is still another incongruous feature that should not be overlooked, and that is the mode in which the appointing power is exercised, thus keeping open an overflowing and increasing fountain of corruption, bitterness, and oppression. To more clearly elucidate this inconsistent practice, we quote Noah Webster's definition of a Republic, "a state in which the exercise of the sovereign power is lodged in representatives chosen by the people." It has been shown that a territory in the matter of "taxation without representation," is held almost precisely in the same relationship to our parent government that a colony is to a monarchy; and by the definition just given it is obvious that the appointing power, as exercised, is another link from the same chain of barbarous usages. Why so? Simply from the fact that that the Governor of a territory is the executive or "sovereign" power thereof, and is appointed by the President and Senate, men in whose elevation to power the people to whom the officers are appointed have not the echo of a voice. This usage is another case in the similarity before alluded to, and is precisely such as Great Britain exercised towards the revolutionary colonies. All this is but cold shouldered treatment, and left handed kindness to those enterprising persons who go forth to redeem the unsettled wilds of our country; whereas a nation so wealthy, with such an extent of unoccupied domain, and withal so boastful of republicanism, should extend every possible encouragement to the permanent occupancy and improvement of new regions, and, in lieu of fettering and discouraging by the arbitrary and tyrannical exercise of high-handed power, should break off every shackle, and guarantee the broadest exercise of the freedom that is consistent with the Constitution.

Who are the men who settle our territories, who make the first roads and bridges, open the first farms, build the first houses, and make the barren waste rejoice? They are the most energetic and enterprising of your citizens, and have been raised side by side with the residents of your states, to whom you vouchsafe the full and free rights of self-government, and a voice in your highest councils. And does the enterprise necessary to found a new settlement disqualify them for knowing their own wants, making their own laws, and choosing their own officers? Shame on such an absurdity, and a double shame on all who would put the weight of a feather upon the elastic step, and buoyant fortitude of those most loyal and intelligent pioneers who go forth amid hardships and privation to multiply upon American soil the happy firesides of American sons and daughters. What should be done by the parent government to foster the extending of the area of unalloyed freedom? Knock off the shackles which now bind the expansion of the full force of her territories, and to do this effectually and consistently, whenever they petition for it, and present a proper state constitution, admit them into the Union as states, with the privilege of sending at least one representative, and this too regardless of the number of their population.

But if this is too long a stride for the short steps of "old usage," and for the square rule of old Say-so," begin by allowing their delegate a vote as well as a voice, expunge the usurped authority to "disapprove" their legislative enactments, and permit them to elect all of their own officers, except such as are also appointed in states to carry out the policy and laws of the general government, and a person to look after the proper disbursement of such funds as Congress should appropriate to assist the creeping child to speedily attain full stature.

If this is still requiring too sudden and great an expansion of the parchment skin of old "Tradition," it does seem that the smallest amount of consistency would compel the appointing power to gratify the wishes of the people, by appointing officers of their own choice.

A few personal items, and we will leave the subject for the present.

Where was uncultivated Utah! In the tops of the mountains, begirt by still loftier alpine heights, and clad in robes of desolation until a noble people, fleeing from the red hand of persecution solely on account of their religious faith, came and began to decorate her sombre garments with the bright hues of civilization.

Thanks to Ex-President Millard Filmore, who, through his republican consistency, and an ardent desire to extend all the even-handed justice in his power, appointed Brigham Young to be Governor of Utah, a man who was unanimously the choice of every resident in our Territory. And honor too to President Franklin Pierce, who so long withstood the howlings, and the scratchings, and whinings at the door of the "White House," of the hungry hunters of office who wished to fatten upon the spoils, to spy out the liberties of an innocent, moral and industrious people, and reap in fields which they had used no effort to make or sow. But the pressure was too great even for his resistance, though when compelled to give way he acted with all possible magnanimity by appointing the gallant Lieut. Col. Steptoe to be our Governor—an appointment that could not have been more acceptably made, outside the ranks of our own population.

We speak understandingly upon this subject, for we have the honor of a personal acquaintance with the Colonel, and so far as our observation and judgement extend, we have found him to be in every particular an intelligent, honorable and upright officer, citizen and gentlemen. It was this fact, coupled with his knowledge of the unanimous wishes of our population for the re-appointment of Governor Young, with his having signed a petition to the President and Congress to that effect, with his familiarity with the illiberality of such appointments, and with the certainty of having to resign an elevated and highly honorable position in the army to serve but two years as a Governor where the united voice preferred Governor Young to all others, which doubtless moved him to refuse to accept the appointment.

This refusal is stated upon report, which, if true, substantiates the correctness of our estimate of the Colonel, and corroborates our idea that President Pierce made the best appointment for us that our enemies would let him.

If any free born American citizen will successfully combat the correctness of the main principles so briefly set forth beneath the caption of this article, we will examine his reasoning, and see whether by its light we can detect any error in what is above advanced.

Worshipping an Emperor.

A regiment of Baschkirs, four hundred horses strong, on their way to the Crimea, arrived at St. Petersburg, where they bivouacked over night. It was anticipated that these children of the desert would be much astonished at the Moscow railroad, but they were not. They affirmed that the train, by no means, went so fast as the breeze on the steppes, and a good Baschkir horse could keep up with the train. The locomotive was, however, pronounced to be sorcery, but the Baschkir sorcerers could do some clever things also. On their entrance into St. Petersburg an empty barrack was assigned them; they begged, however, to be allowed to take up their quarter in the open air; if an earthquake came, the walls of the building might fall and crush them. On being required to resume their march in the morning after their bivouac in the capital, they were much cast down, and eventually refused to leave, as they had been promised that when there they should see the Emperor. On this circumstance being made known to the Emperor (Alexander) he immediately rode down to the place. Their delight at seeing their Czar knew no bounds, they laughed, they sobbed, they threw themselves on his boots, and then his horse; they crept in and out between the horse's legs, which they embraced from time to time and conducted themselves entirely as children highly delighted at meeting a long absent parent. After receiving the Emperor's blessing they marched.

A Lincolnshire Magistrate in 1780.

As Sir Francis Whichcote was dressing one morning, he perceived the undergroom making very free with his wall-fruit. When breakfast was finished, he wrote a note addressed to the keeper of the House of Correction at Folkingham, which he ordered the culprit to take without delay.

The note contained the following words: "Give the bearer a dozen lashes; he will guess the reason." This he signed with his initials. Whether the offender was conscience-smitten, or, what is still more probable, took advantage of the wet wafer to acquaint himself with the contents, I know not; but he bribed a helper in the stable, by the promise of a pot of beer and the loan of a horse, to take it for him. The governor after reading the note; ordered the bearer to be tied up, and the directions were scrupulously obeyed, to the consternation of the poor fellow, who had no idea why he was thus treated until his return, when his account of what had taken place caused much merriment in the stable-yard. The tale very soon came to the ears of the baronet, who laughed very heartily, and took no farther notice of it, then fining the delinquent half-a-crown for the privilege of being flogged by deputy, and ordered it to be given to the suffering party.—[Gunning's Reminiscence of Cambridge.

A Russian Incident.

A letter in the Constitutionel, from St Petersburgh, mentions a circumstance which has just caused some sensation there. A person of large property, M. G——w, having said at a private party, "I would willingly give 10,000 roubles (the rouble is somewhat over 4fr.) for the war, if I knew when we are to have peace," was summoned the next day before the military governor, who received him in the presence of several persons of distinction, and said, "Sir, if you pledge me your word to pay this day the sum of 10,000 roubles, I am authorized to gratify your curiosity on that point to which you alluded last evening." "I promise to pay that sum," replied the other. "Well then," said the governor, "I have to inform you that we are to have peace when you come back from the Caucasus, where you are to proceed this afternoon, after having paid the sum agreed on. God be with you."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1855.

What Can We Think About Others?

THERE has been a great hue and cry among the editors lately about the Mormons; it seems to be quite an engrossing subject among the gents du plume. One would think from their writings that some great political volcano had belched forth its fiery lava, that its lurid flames could be seen throughout the length and breadth of the land, and that from the distant mountain tops the molten lava threatened to overflow the United States, and make another Petrea on a more magnificent scale.

Mormonism! it is indeed a singular thing, and excites the curiosity of men in general, and in a great many instances their most deadly hate. Their anger originates, however, not so much in anything that they can find fault with, but because there is nothing that they can object to. We are frequently reminded of the drunken man who went home with a determination to whip his wife; it runs: Well, now, says Jim, I'm determined to whip Sal. But says his friend, "Suppose there is no cause, what then?" "What then, eh! why I'll whip her any way. Do you think I don't know how to do it? Try me, that's all." "Why, how will you do it? what excuse can you make?" "Excuse, eh! why, if I must tell you then, and you can't get it through your head, you see, sir, if she finds fault with me for being drunk, I'll whip her for finding fault; and if she don't find fault, I'll whip her because she ought to." What can we think about those writers and venders of falsehood but just the same as we would of the above named hero?

We have said before, and say now, that we defy all the editors and writers in the United States to prove that Mormonism is less moral, scriptural, philosophical, or that there is less patriotism in Utah than in any other part of the United States. We call for proof; bring on your reasons, gentlemen, if you have any; we shrink not from the investigation, and dare you to the encounter. If you don't do it, and you publish more of your stuff, we shall brand you as poor, mean, cowardly liars; as men publishing falsehoods, knowing them to be so, and shrinking from the light of truth and investigation.

Why do we speak thus plain? Because we have reasons. A highly respectable gentleman of this city, who was associated with Colonel Fremont in his late exploring tour across the Rocky Mountains, having read the Times' statement of the trial of the Utah Indians, and the correspondence of the Herald, with its remarks, called at the Herald office to have them contradicted, as he was among those Indians, and conversant with the whole affair, and knew those statements to be false, and wished them to publish a few items from his journal; but the Herald declined publishing this statement. It was, of course, not anti-Mormon. This we were not surprised at. He next called on the Tribune with the same statements; they said they would publish it, but have not. The Times we recommended him not to go to, as we thought it impossible for them to speak the truth. So much for honest editors; now for their correspondents.

We last week published a statement in relation to this matter; but were not then in possession of all the facts. Since then we have seen a merchant from Salt Lake, who was at the trial, and who positively and unequivocally denies the statement made by the Times and Herald, and reveals some of the most disgusting, degrading, humiliating scenes that ever transpired in any Court House or country. It is alleged that the Mormons are tampering with the Indians; but some of our chaste heroes, our honorable men, have been tampering not only with Indians, but with squaws; but these copper-colored vestals, not knowing the etiquette of courts, nor of polite debauchery, came to make a demand for wages, in the shape of paints, blankets, &c., to the parties who were then in court engaged in administering law, and who it seems had forgot to redeem their pledges; and these good Christian souls, who were zealously administering justice to the heathen, had to give up their special and particular pleadings, to listen to and obey the judgment of an Indian and his squaw. Such is one item of the court evidence that the correspondent of the Times has forgot to give us. There are many more. We are in possession of the details, which will be forthcoming at the proper time. In the meanwhile, if they should hear of the sudden appearance of some of these gentry followed by the cry of "blankets," they need not be surprised; perhaps some of those gentlemen and associates thought that a crusade against the Mormons would cover up their deformity; but neither that nor the blankets combined can hide their sins—they will out.

What do the Mormons think of such men and their abettors? Men give their opinions very freely about us; we will be as frank in giving ours. We think such characters are too mean to handle with tongs, and we think that men who will sustain such reptiles, and belie and seek to injure an innocent people, are unworthy of any other society than that which is as corrupt as themselves. We don't give the explanations for the benefit of such characters: we would as soon have their bad opinion as their good one, and are just as independent of them as they are of us. We neither want their association in time nor in eternity. We love an honest man wherever found, or whatever his creed or profession; but we most unequivocally despise a fawning sycophant, a corrupt dedauchee, or a mean, truckling liar.

Mormonism in Wales.

A WRITER who styles himself A Native American, in the Herald, has been at very great pains to prove that the Herald's reporter was mistaken in saying that a "large number of Welsh" were among the immigrants which arrived on the William Stetson, and that Mormonism was "rife in Wales." He says there was only fourteen or fifteen who wore Welsh names. This may be; but his latter statements are not so conclusive. Whatever his respectable Welsh friends may have told him, we know that if Mormonism is a disgrace they may certainly consider themselves disgraced, for they are pretty thoroughly inoculated with it. He talks about Christian sects. Why, Mormonism is not of these sects; it is the Christian religion, and is not an opinion, a scism, a split off, or an amalgamation with any of them. He enumerates thirteen quarterly reviews, six newspapers, Watts' Hymns, Milton's Paradise Lost, and the Bible, that are translated or published in the Welsh language. We presume he is correct in this, and might have added a great deal more; but this does not prove that there are not many Mormons there. We have seen thousands of Welsh Mormons in Wales, and multitudes in the valleys and on their way. We think they are quite as respectable as other Welshmen, and have not disgraced themselves much. We have seen upwards of two thousand in Merthyr Tydvil; we have also met many in Swansea Cardiff and other places. They have translated into their language the Book of Mormon, Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and Hymn Book; they publish a periodical called the "Udgorn Zion," besides a great amount of Mormon literature. So much for theory when opposed to fact. If our Native American had been a Native Welshman he would have understood the thing better.

THE "WILLIAM STETSON" arrived in this city on Sunday last, with two hundred and ninety-three Saints, all in good health but one sister Perks, who had been confined the day previous. Four infants had died during the voyage and one born, leaving a decrease of three.

The ship was cleanly and in good order, and speaks well for the management of President Smethurst and council, as well as for those under his charge. Many gentlemen have expressed their surprise at the cleanliness and order on board our ships. We have been asked counsel in regard to the managing of ships. We think there is more in the men than anything else; we can control Mormons; we would not like to engage Gentiles. A gentleman, visiting the city of Nauvoo, once said to Joseph Smith, "Mr. Smith, how is it that you can keep such good order among your people! They are the best ordered community I have met with." Mr. Smith replied, "O, that is very easy." "Easy!" responded the gentleman; "it is one of the most difficult things that I have met with in the world." "I don't find it so," responded Mr. S. "Indeed!" replied the gentleman; "will you have the kindness to show me?" "Certainly," said Mr. S. "I teach them correct principles, and they govern themselves." This, we think, is good for Mormons, but would not do for Gentiles. We fear that should the order be given it would be as the man who boasted "I can call spirits from the vasty deep." "So can I," says another; "but they won't come."

A VERY interesting letter will be found in another column, from a Mrs. Thomas, in Utah. We, of course, cannot endorse all she has written; but allowing a very little for enthusiasm, it is very good; and we think is a strong rebuke to many of our slanderers. We can assure our cotemporaries, that whatever their opinions may be about the Mormons, there is nothing so revolting to both Mormon men and women, as the abominable sensuality, the beastly licentiousness, and the low, degrading meanness of a great majority of our Gentile neighbors. And when their military and legal stars, these genteel, polite gentlemen, act such disgusting parts, what can any community, having any sense of propriety, think of the people from whence they come, if these are sent out as choice specimens! We have what some of our cotemporaries would call "rich disclosures" to make on some of these subjects; but which we feel, as a part of the human family, to be almost too debasing, humiliating and degrading to make known.

The writer of the article referred to is no doubt acquainted with the matters to which we refer, which may account for her strong language on some of these points.

THE NEWS of last Saturday seems to be very much troubled about the rising magnitude of the corrupt Mormons, and looks about in hopeless despair for a palliative. We are surprised that such great statesmen can't find a remedy for so small a political evil. We would suggest that he do not touch them with his very delicate and chaste fingers; he might be contaminated; he ought to handle them with mittens.

OUR Cincinnati correspondent, Professor Orson Spencer, has walked into Bennett this week, and handled him without mittens. We refer our readers to his communication. We thought we were pretty hard with the cudgel; but he has done up the thing scientifically, theologically and systematically. We like to see things done by professional men.

WE refer our readers to a very interesting communication from F. D. Richards, President of the European Church.

The Triumph of Mr. Wise.

THE Democrats have had a most signal victory in Virginia, in the defeat of the Know-Nothing candidate; Mr. Wise, Democrat, was elected by 10,000 majority. This signal triumph is looked upon as the precursor to the downfall of Know-Nothingism. There was a great jollification at Tammany Hall on Thursday evening, over this victory. The Empire pocket-piece heralded the news from the Park; bands of music were in requisition, flags unfurled with appropriate devices, speeches made, and altogether there was what would be called a high time among the Democrats. Such are the changes of life. What next!

Departure for the Plains.

ON Monday evening, the 21st inst., about three hundred and fifty souls of Saints left this city on board the Equinox bound for Atchison, in charge of Elder William Glover. Elders William Pitt, Charles Smith, Benjamin Brown, Elias Gardnes, N. T. Guyman, M. G. McMullen, John Mayer, S. H. Earl, O. M. Duell, James F. Bell, J. W. Coward, Joseph Hall, and Daniel Cavern, have all left by this boat. These brethren have held important and responsible missions in Europe under the Presidency of Elder F. D. Richards, having faithfully executed their duties, and honored the trust imposed in them. They are returning home to Zion with Bro. Richards' approbation, counsel, and blessing, and the blessings of many thousands of faithful Saints upon their heads. We may mention also Elders Alred, Pace, Secrist, Colburn, and Riser, who also share liberally in the good feelings, confidence, and blessings of their brethren; and are now wending their way with joyful hearts to their peaceful homes in the west.

It is a source of unbounded pleasure to us, to shake hands with our faithful brethren, after their long absence on missions, to the dark and benighted nations of the earth; where they have suffered bonds and imprisonments, and every indignity that could be offered them, because of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We hail their return with pleasure and satisfaction, and pray God the Eternal Father to conduct them in safety to the blest home of the Saints, with all those who love truth and righteousness.

Elder Seth M. Blair has recently returned from Texas with a faithful band of brethren. He has been out on his mission about twelve months—has done a good work and is returning home to Zion with our approval and blessing, and has the satisfaction and honor of taking many of his sheaves with him. He has been engaged for several days purchasing goods for himself and company, and is now preparing to join his brethren at Atchison, and will there make arrangements to lead them home to Zion.—[St. Louis Luminary, May 26th.

Health of the Camp.—Elder Gregory's Death.

BY letters received from Elder Richard Ballantyne, dated Atchison, May 13th, we learn that general good health prevails in the camp of Zion, and although a few have been taken off by cholera, the health of the camp in general is said to be excellent, for which we feel truly grateful to our Father and our God.

Among those who have fallen in the destroyer's embrace at the camp is Elder Gregory, from Salt Lake City, who was returning from the Eastern States, where he had been to transact some private business, having counsel from the Presidency to preach the gospel by the way. He passed through this city a few weeks ago, spent a few days with us, when we learned that his health had been poor from the time he left his mountain home. He died at Atchison on Sunday, 7 o'clock P. M., 13th May, 1855; about one week previous he had a severe attack of cholera, but was recovering from it, until the day preceding his death, when he grew worse, and was soon taken from us. He felt from the beginning of his illness that he would not recover, and committed the care of his carriage and other property to Elder James McGaw, with a request that his body should be carried to the Valley.

Brother Gregory was a true friend and a faithful Saint; his career was not so dashing and brilliant as that of some of the Elders, but his course was undeviating and his faith unwavering, and he died with a sure and certain hope of a resurrection to eternal life. This will be a severe dispensation of Providence to his family in the mountains, with whose bereavement we sincerely sympathise.—[St. Louis Luminary, May 26th.

THE INDIANS IN KANSAS.—St. Louis, May 26.—We have intelligence from Wolf River, Kansas, to the 17th inst. Plenty of snow is reported on the mountains in that locality. The Sioux tribe of Indians were moving in large numbers towards Fort Laramie, talking of war. Col. Cook left Leavenworth on the 15th with a detachment of Infantry and some Cavalry for Fort Laramie. Several thousand warriors were at Ash Hollow.

Report, Resolutions, &c.,
Of Passengers on Board the Ship Juventa.

PHILADELPHIA, May 21st, 1855.

ELDER JOHN TAYLOR—Dear Sir: From an article announcing the arrival of the ship "Juventa" at Philadelphia, (in your paper of the 12th inst.) I perceive you promise your readers some further information relative to the proceedings of the company who sailed on that noble ship, and being clerk to the company I take up my pen with pleasure, in the hope of setting down a few items which, however unconnected, I trust may be interesting to the readers of your very valuable paper.

As you are already aware, the "Juventa" left Liverpool on the 31st March, carrying five hundred and seventy-four passengers bound Zionward, under the Presidency of Elder William Glover. Our good ship was commanded by Captain Alfred Watts, of whose good feelings and kindness enough cannot be written; his attention to the comfort and safety of the passengers was unbounded; and his name, associated with that of his ship "Juventa," will be remembered with feelings of gratitude by all who formed that company. He was ever ready to grant us any privilege which we asked, and to offer any advice suited to us; and from his table constant supplies were regularly sent to the sick, aged, or infirm. The surgeon (Mr. Edie) constantly manifested the utmost solicitude for the health of the people, proving himself kind, attentive, and obliging; so much so that he has gained the esteem and good will of every passenger on board. Indeed, there could not be a people more blessed than we have been, receiving the kindest of treatment from every officer of the ship; such as we could only expect from men interested in the redemption and gathering of God's people. We must also notice the benefit derived from the experience of (our brother) Captain Stayner, who was always on hand to give a word of counsel when needed.

Having said thus much for those who commanded and were connected with the ship, I shall now notice briefly our organization as a conference or company. On the 1st of April, at 9 A. M., Elder Glover called a council, and organizing the ship's company into a conference, divided the same into twelve wards, presided over by Elders who were returning to the Valley, or who had been Presidents of Conferences or Missions. Finding it essential to the safety of the passengers that the utmost strictness with regard to cleanliness and order should be observed, it was resolved that each ward furnish every morning a sufficient number of men, whose duty would be to cleanse the ward thoroughly, washing and scraping out the same; these cleaners to commence each morning at 4 o'clock, so as to allow the females to get up at 6 o'clock. The cooking operations were attended to in wards, each President seeing that none (except for the sick) came into the galley during the time his ward was cooking, except the members thereof. The same order was attended to in serving out the water and provisions. Thus, under the influence of the Spirit of God, all things passed off well with us. Meetings were held regularly in each ward, both mornings and evenings, and on Sundays we held a fast and had meetings on deck, were discourses were delivered by the various Elders, which were always listened to with the greatest attention and respect by the officers and men of the ship. The sacrament was administered between decks each Sabbath at 1 P. M., after which the Saints repaired to the cooking galley, to prepare their daily meal, and having satisfied themselves with temporal food for the body, compose themselves again for evening preaching.

Thus the time passed on without one dissenting jar, every one feeling thankful for the manner in which they were provided with provisions for the voyage; for it can be truthfully said that their supplies of provisions were of most excellent quality, and the quantity as much at least as was expected; indeed, most of the passengers often said they never expected to have such good provisions served to them on shipboard.

Although we have not had favorable winds, yet we have got on prosperously and safely, not having to encounter anything that by the most timid could be called a storm, with the exception of a few hours on the night of the 21st of April, when we had quite a gale; but while it lasted the Saints were composed, no cries of alarm being heard as among other classes of emigrants, but all was peace, for our people knew in whom they trusted, and that He was able to save us on sea as well as on land. During the gale we lost two close-reefed topsails, one fore-topmast, and one fore-staysail, and while this scene was being enacted aloft, the doctor was busily engaged between decks ushering another stranger to this stage of action; and thus amidst a perfect tornado on the bosom of the deep did young "Juventa Beck" make her first debut on this terraqueous ball.

Good health generally prevailed among the passengers all the way, not one death occurring among a company of five hundred and seventy-four persons. This was in fulfilment of a prediction uttered by President F. D. Richards, as he parted from the vessel's side in the "Mersy," viz: "That inasmuch as we would keep the counsel of those placed over us, not one death would happen on the ship." This we resized and feel to give God the glory. The wise counsels given by President Glover tended much to the safety of the company, and caused every soul (who loved the ways of the Lord) to love Him.

On Friday, May 4th, engaged the steamtug "America," and on the evening of the 5th arrived at the wharf. On Sunday, the 6th, the Health Officers came on board and expressed their satisfaction at the clean and healthy appearance of the passengers and ship. At a meeting held on deck the following resolutions were adopted:

RESOLVED, That this company being deeply sensible of the gentlemanly manner in which Captain Watts comported himself towards us, as passengers, the kind attention bestowed for our comfort, and his obliging behavior towards us, we hereby express our gratitude towards him, tendering him our unfeigned thanks, and praying that the blessing of God may rest upon him and preserve him all the day long, and that his gallant ship "Juventa" may always ride triumphant over the boisterous wave; and we recommend Captain Watts and his ship to the notice of the Latter Day Saints in Britain, the former as a gentleman of merit, and the latter as a most excellent and comfortable ship.

RESOLVED, That we express our gratitude towards the surgeon, Mr. Edie, for his kindness in his constant attendance on the sick and infirm, and for the good feeling continually manifested by him towards us, and his earnest desire to assist us in all things for the safety of the people.

RESOLVED, That while we record our feelings towards the captain and surgeon, we are not insensible of the good feelings manifested towards us by Mr. William Watts, first officer of the ship, and all under his control.

RESOLVED, That we feel deeply sensible of the blessings we have received from the counsels of President William Glover, and that we record our thanks to him for the manner in which he discharged his duty as President of the company.

RESOLVED, That a vote of thanks be given to Elder P. Lynch, Clerk of the company; also to the twelve Presidents of wards, and to Elder Gardner, Captain of the guard.

RESOLVED, That we record our satisfaction at the manner in which we have been supplied with provisions, and that we manifest our gratitude to President F. D. Richards, for the attention paid by him to the safety and comfort of the passengers shipped by him.

On our arrival in Philadelphia the throughgoing emigrants were provided for in comfortable boarding-houses by J. S. Fulmer and Dr. Jeter Clinton, who received the emigrants at this port. Counsel was given by Elder Clinton to all who remain here what course would be best for them to pursue.

Dear sir, these are a few items connected with our journey to Philadelphia, which journey was a safe and pleasant one. Those of the Saints bound westward left on Tuesday, the 8th, for Pittsburgh, all rejoicing in the blessings of God.

With sentiments of respect,
I remain yours, brotherly,
P. LYNCH, Clerk of Company.

Petition for Governor Young's Re-Appointment.

A GREAT deal has been said lately by the press in relation to Utah difficulties, sedition, conspiracy, treason, and every other crime that mortals can commit. Why are we called on, from time to time, to answer to those abominable charges, trumped up by unprincipled men, and published by as unscrupulous editors? Sometimes we think that we will let the poor wretches who possess no more principle than to vend falsehood, wallow in their own effete nests; but as many honest men are likely to be deceived, we take the trouble to answer. We don't give Mormon testimony; the following, principally Gentile, we suppose will pass current:

To His Excellency Franklin Pierce,
President of the United States.

YOUR petitioners would respectfully represent: that

Whereas, Governor Brigham Young possesses the entire confidence of the people of this Territory, without distinction of party or sect; and from personal acquaintance, and social intercourse, we find him to be a firm supporter of the Constitution and laws of the United States, and a tried pillar of Republican Institutions; and having repeatedly listened to his remarks, in private as well as in public assemblies, do know he is the warm friend and able supporter of Constitutional Liberty, the rumors published in the States to the contrary notwithstanding; and having canvassed to our satisfaction his doings as Governor, and Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and also the disposition of the appropriation for public buildings for the Territory;

We do most cordially and cheerfully represent, that the same has been expended to the best interest of the nation; and

Whereas his re-appointment would better subserve the Territorial interest than the appointment of any other man, and would meet with the gratitude of the entire inhabitants of the Territory, and his removal would cause the deepest feelings of sorrow and regret; and it being our unqualified opinion, based upon the personal acquaintance which we have formed with Governor Young, and from our observation of the results of his influence and administration in this Territory, that he possesses in an eminent degree every qualification necessary for the discharge of his official duties, and unquestioned integrity and ability; that he is decidedly the most suitable person that can be selected for that office.

We therefore take great pleasure in recommending him to your favorable consideration, and do earnestly request his re-appointment as Governor, and Superintendent of Indian Affairs for this Territory.

LOSS OF THE STEAMER GLENDY BURK.—Chicago, May 28, 1855.—The steamer Glendy Burk, from St. Louis for New Orleans, struck on a rock, on Thursday, near Cairo, and immediately sunk in twelve feet of water. She had a full cargo of grain, flour, &c. The boat will probably prove a total loss.

LARGE FIRE AT DANVILLE.—Montpelier, Vt., May 22.—At Danville this morning, the hotel, the Caledonia Bank Building, the Methodist church and two barns, were destroyed by fire. Nine valuable horses were also burned. The books and funds of the bank were saved.

A Letter from a Mormon Lady in Great Salt Lake City.

THE following letter was furnished to the New Haven Courier by a gentleman of that city, whose sister, the writer, resides in Great Salt Lake City:

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, March 23, 1855.

I have received your letters dated January, and was glad to hear of your good health and that of your families. The suffering for food does not surprise me, as I have been looking for it, and told you and foretold you that a scene of trouble was ahead; that war, famine and pestilence would lay waste the nations; that they have rejected the Gospel, and are left without excuse. The prophecies of the ancient and modern prophets are beginning to be fulfilled, and the earth will be deluged with blood and fire. Do you not hear the sound from Europe's shores? Do you not hear the groans of dying men by thousands, and the mourning of widows and the tears of orphans? Weep not for the poor saints, but for yourselves. It is true we are exiled, and deprived of many comforts, and the hands of our enemies are still raised against us; but the great Jehovah is on our side, and if they kill us, they can only kill the body, and we shall have a more glorious resurrection. They cannot take away the priesthood, for it is eternal, and it is not to be taken from the earth again.

I am pained when I read the horrid accounts of the war in the East; at the same time I know that these things must be; the earth has to be swept of wickedness, and the wicked will slay the wicked until they accomplish the words of the prophets. I know of no place, except in these chambers of the mountains, that I should be willing to call my home, unless we as a people are commanded to leave. If so, the mustard seed will scatter farther and wider. Every time the tree is shaken the seed is spread that much. How vain it is for man in his pride and haughtiness to fight against God, and seek to overthrow his government! They may as well beat the air, and far better. I have never yet believed that the Lord brought this people out here to destroy them, but to hide them until his indignation has passed over the earth. If the government of the States is afraid of being contaminated by the saints of the Most High God, and the only people whom he acknowledges as his own, it is a pity, certainly. Oh, what a pity that the frontiers should be corrupted by the best and most virtuous people on earth! Has Uncle Sam put away all the vile prostitutes and wicked men out of his midst? Has he washed himself from all the brothels and sinks of iniquity that send forth a horrible stench to heaven? Has he repented of all the fornication and adultery that he has practised for ages and generations gone by? Is not his garment stained with the blood of saints? Verily, it is! Woe, woe, woe, to that nation if they yet again raise their hands against the people of God. Is not their cup of iniquity already full? Verily, it is. There are many honest-hearted ones among them, but look at their leaders—their officers of government, and officers of the navy and army. They are corrupt as the devil—I think that old Satan would be ashamed of some things that they glory in. No sooner did the officers arrive here last fall than they began to inquire after women. And because they were rebuked openly, they took offence. It is all that mothers can do to keep them away from their daughters. They make dancing parties, and use all their influence to decoy the young, simple girls into their places. Instead of rearing up honorable families, and blessing them, they scatter vice and corruption wherever they go.

You speak of Brigham Young squandering the $20,000 sent to build a State House. The same State House has been going up several months, at Fillmore, in a valley south of this. Do not judge again without knowing the circumstances of the case.

Colonel Steptoe is here, and has, with many other military officers, signed and sent a petition to Congress, to get Brigham Young appointed Governor-again. Col. Steptoe appears to be a good man, and is very friendly to this people. So you see that you cannot depend upon newspapers for truth. There are many, no doubt, who would like to come here and take our possessions from us as a booty, and drive us, they care not where, so they get the prey. They would want but a wink from the President to start forthwith. If they do, they will know there is a God in Israel before all is over. The Indians are already coming forth out of their hiding places. They have, like us, been driven from their homes, and when the full time comes they will come out like a lion out of a thicket, go through and tread down. This is no illusion of the fancy. They will one day be a battle-axe in the hand of the Lord. Now, who cares anything about Uncle Sam or his haughty looks? When the stone strikes the image it is bound to fall. You must either renounce the Bible, or acknowledge the hand of the Lord in this, the latter-day work.

Mr. Thomas is one of the Grand Jury, and has heard the judges and officers express themselves freely. They told how they felt before they came here, and how changed were their feelings and views in regard to the Mormons. They had an idea that they were a dangerous people; that their lives would not be safe here; that they must arm themselves well all the time. When they arrived here they found all quiet, all industrious, all attending to their own business; they laid aside their weapons—had no use for anything but an old tobacco knife, which one of them pulled out and showed to the jury. They were all treated with kindness and respect, and felt well. This is their own testimony. If Uncle Sam will cleanse his own face and hands and keep his nose clean, he will have enough to do without interfering with us. From head to foot, he is covered with wounds and bruises and putrefying sores, as they say they are when they pray; and needs sweeping and swabbing one generation, at least, to purify himself. You say that we will fall into other hands—I say that we are in the hands of the great God our Father in heaven, and we cannot fall out of them. If he permits a scourge to come upon us, or uses the wicked as a rod in his hand to chastise us, whose business is that but his own? If we need another sifting, and he makes use of our brethren to do it, it will be right as far as we are concerned; Joseph's brethren sold him for a bond slave, and afterwards bowed down to him, and were saved by him. These things are all right. If we sacrifice all earthly possessions, it is no more than the saints have done before us in all ages when persecutions came against them. It is sacrifice that brings the blessings of heaven; we are getting an experience that is worth more than houses or lands. There are people here who have been dispossessed six times of all their real estate. Do you suppose they will lose anything by it? No, it will be paid fourfold. It was not the plurality system that caused the persecution in the early part of this Church—it was not known to any in the Church till they were driven several times. They were in Illinois when the Revelation was given; that was the last place they settled before leaving the States. The devil knows more about this kingdom than you are aware of—he knows that his time is short; his strongholds are already crumbling, ready to fall. How can a kingdom stand that is divided against itself? If you wish to see what is coming upon this generation, search the old prophets, Jeremiah and Isaiah, see what they say about the last days. I hope and pray that you both may live a little longer, that you may see for yourselves, and not another. I want you to see the winding up of this generation. This is but the commencement of it. I want to see how the Lord will work the machine, and how He will bring forth this strange act, an act which has never yet been brought about since the creation. You look upon the saints as an ignorant people, deluded and led astray, by lo here, and lo there. Time will tell all things. If we are such an immoral people, it is strange that the Lord should choose us to bring forth his glorious purposes, and set up a standard for all nations. I conclude that we were the best material that He could get to work with.

The true Mormon grit is pure stuff. If it is not already so, it is in a way to become purified. It has been in the crucible several times. The Saints are counselled by the authorities of the Church to lay up a store of wheat, enough for several years to come. If we can do it, and supply the increasing emigration to these valleys, and when the soldiers arrive to kill or drive us off, we will do a great work. We have to feed all that come, good and bad, Jew and Gentile. None are left to go hungry. That is right. Indians and enemies all look to us for bread, as well as friends—all right. There is plenty for all; the land is fruitful; the soil is rich; that is the reason our enemies covet it, and think to take it from us. Good farms in cultivation; thousands of acres broke, all ready for them when bread gets scarce in the East. This is no fiction. They are now waiting for the President to wink, and they are on hand. He will not have to crook his finger. Wait a little and see what will grow out of it. I would tell you, but you might think me hard-hearted and cruel. If their cup is not full, let them fill it. Babylon must fall, although she is great, and proud, and very dignified. That will not save her. There is one who is greater, and who "has set his hand the second time to recover the remnant of his people," and you will see it.

Correspondence.

From Our Cincinnati Correspondent.

CINCINNATI, May 14, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

"The Mormons and their Destiny."

THERE must either be no Mormons among us, or we must all be Mormons. There is no way out of the labyrinth but over the corpse of Mormonism or over the corpse of Christianity; sooner or later the conflict must come. We must put them down, or they must put us down. This may seem ridiculous at present when a company of infantry could on a pinch set Deseret to rights.—[N. Y. Herald, Feb. 14.

PASSING strange is such language as the foregoing, coming from one of the most popular editors of the 19th century, and avowing himself to be on the side of Christianity, as appears in the phrase, "put us down." Now Mr. Bennett, a few words for your consideration; You call yourself a Christian in the foregoing article. Well, you, sir, are such a Christian as often straddles the throne of tyrants and despots. Mormonism has risen from poverty and obloquy with countless thousands to one against it, as Sampson rose from the strong cords that bound him. Editors have pounced upon it. Priests have fulminated their unsparing wrath against it. The allies of all Christendom have barked and howled and snapped and bit at it. Still Mormonism triumphs through faith and passive endurance. Such is the grandeur and purity of its doctrines, that it conquers without a particle of Christian armor. Poor Christianity is becoming very sick, like Ammon was, because he couldn't defile his sister Tamar—don't know what to do.—Her long rifles and dreadful shells, don't accomplish anything. "At length," Jezebel says, "I know what to do; I know what will cure this dysentery, gripes, and black vomit that is destroying Christianity—poor creature—What a pity to see her die and become a foul 'corpse' when a company of Infantry could upon a pinch provide an ample remedy by killing off the Mormons in Deseret. Ay, Mr. Bennett, the old adage is true, "that murder will out." The murder that is in your heart has come out, in several articles. On the 14th Feb. last, it was revealed quite plainly in your paper. Quite bold! Quite inventive! "A company of Infantry could upon a pinch set Deseret at rights." But, Mr. Bennett, let me tell you, that you are not the original discoverer and inventor of such a signal remedy against the diseases of Christianity, viz.: Killing the Saints of God. Don't lay any claim to a patent right, yet, till older claimants have filed their plea to priority of invention. Go, now, Mr. Bennett, to the records of Shushan the palace, in the days of one King Ahasuerus, and you will find that a certain ingenious man by the name of Haman, invented the same sort of instrument that you speak of. Read it in the Book of Esther. It was a convenient instrument for committing MURDER, precisely like the one named in your article—not difference enough to authorize you to get a new patent. But you need not go so far back to search records. Stop in Palestine, a bit; look over the inventions of one Herod Agrippa, a very notable Christian king of your own denomination and belief. He, sir, suggested, long before you was born, that the only way to stop the progress of righteousness was, not to use the lame weapons of argument and moral suasion, in order to effect the object—but a much more summary way:—nip the thing in the bud—kill every male child in all Bethlehem under two years old—so that you make sure that the Mormon Jesus is among the number. But these inventions are not confined to your own denomination of Christians. One Nero, an artful and daring king, who did not cloak his black heart and hellish designs in any such garb of Christian profession as you hypocritically wear—he, sir, used the same sort of instrumentality that you recommend, when he set fire to the city of Rome, in order to burn up the same sort of people that your company of Infantry would destroy.

He did, under the garb of a heathen, what you would do under the cloak of Christianity. He did, under the bold front of civil despotism, what you would do, by the same spirit, under the mask of Republicanism. He, indeed, was a despot. And so are you. He acted boldly. But you are both a coward and a hypocrite. He used no mask. But you skulk behind Christianity, and even pretend to piety and Republican toleration, and freedom of conscience, and freedom of worship. You possess the same spirit of murder, which dwelt in the bosom of Herod, Haman and Nero. And your article proves that you would exert it, too, if you were possessed of the power. Your ambition seems to lead you to aspire to a blood-relationship with Pharaoh of Egypt, and to gain notoriety by endeavoring to agg on a war of extermination against an innocent, law-abiding and God-serving people. Peradventure, you may live to see your bloody desire attempted to be carried out, by sending a company of Infantry to destroy the peaceful citizens of Utah. If so, you will make sure of signal notoriety, because your widely-circulated paper will contribute many shares to the murderous stock, raised in order to effect the butchery. You may also find a good yoke-fellow of considerable capital in your line, in the editor of the Charleston Mercury, and a few other distinguished pharisees. But let me tell you, that if you think to destroy the young child Mormonism, it will be soon said of you and your fellow-murderers, that "they are dead which sought the young child's life"; and Ichabod will be written upon your glory, and shame and everlasting contempt will inscribe the frontlet of your habitation. Once put your hand upon Utah, in order to destroy Mormonism, and lo, it has fled into Egypt! When haughty Pharaoh put forth his hand against the Hebrews, to destroy their male issue, lo, the germ of Israel was not there. The ark among the bulrushes secreted the germ of Mormonism. Mormonism, sir, is not confined to Utah. Utah contains but a handful of the precious seed. Many other lands contain fruitful branches of the same great root. One short month's notice, and that great gathering, that now resembles "clouds and doves" may be made to converge to the mountains of the Amazon, or some other equally inviting region where the oppressor's rod has never lacerated a fugitive from oppression. The few that a "company of Infantry" would murder in Utah, would not impede the progress of Mormonism so much as one day; no, not an hour. It would grow with accelerated strength and freshness. Mormonism may possibly commit suicide and destroy itself, but its Gentile enemies alone, can never destroy it. So, Mr. Bennett, do thyself no harm, if the earth does quake, and prison walls totter, and poor culprits like yourself are obliged to see your idol Christianity a doleful "corpse," do thyself no harm. Mormons are all calm and ready to baptize even you unto repentance, if you don't go too far, and shed innocent blood, for which there is no forgiveness in this world, nor in the world to come.

Cease your fillibustering against Mormonism and lay out no expense to hire a "company of Infantry" to kill Saints in Utah; better use your money to buy a mourning weed to wear to the funeral of your Christianity. Its wounds are mortal, and die she must. Don't disturb her dying groans by offering to her the vain hope arising from a company of Infantry. And stand by your own testimony in the same article that she killed herself by her own criminations and recriminations. Any rational jury of inquest would receive your testimony in this case much sooner than they would about a company of Infantry, and render a verdict accordingly: "Christianity found a corpse on the night of the 19th century—came to its end by suicide. J. G. Bennett and other polemic editors and preachers, witnesses.

You say that you must put Mormonism down or it will put you down. You must make a corpse of it, or it will make a corpse of you. And you accidentally say how and what is the only way to put Mormonism down. It is at the point of the bayonet and with powder and ball. So, sir, your blood relations said, when they murdered Joseph and Hiram Smith in Carthage jail. Your Christianity, Mr. Bennett, begins to show its nativism. It was conceived in hell and born in murder. Cain was the first patriarch in the earthly line of your Christianity. From him it made a bloody trail, through every generation of prophets, and spent the acme of its fury upon the Son of God, and the Apostles of Palestine; and from that time to the present, its history is a round of suicidal acts against itself—criminations and massacres between Catholics and Protestants, Jews and barbarians. Now, you propose to unite Herod and Pilate for a specific purpose, and consequently cease all your family feuds and domestic murders in order to make one desperate death-hug against the infant kingdom spoken of by the prophet Daniel. Don't you perceive, sir, that the very spirit of your article, and that of kindred editors and preachers, is the spirit of rank, unblushing murder, and has its parentage in no better men than Cain, Pharaoh, Haman and Herod. If a tree is known by its fruit, we know perfectly well what tree you sprung from, and also all other men, who give the silent nod of approbation to your murderous scheme of sending troops to kill Mormons. If the Mormons had ever violated the first law of the Bible or of the United States, or of the Constitution of the United States, then you would not have been so destitute of a shadow of pretext for your bloody articles. Now, sir, if the public journals of the U. States are not sufficiently blotted with accounts of murders, in order to satisfy your tragic propensities then raise up and organise a band of soldiers for the special purpose of murdering the people of Utah—the most loyal, patriotic, and peaceable citizens that ever trod the soil of Columbia. No doubt your feelings are intense, when you see Mormonism outshining in wisdom, righteousness and unity, all your scabby, marred up Christendom, that is dying like an old pimp from the natural effects of her lewd and abominable conduct, with the blood of Saints on her raiment. No doubt you feel bad. You feel a little of all-ways, and can't help yourself. Your feelings may be summed up in the expression of a certain other person in a very awkward fix, who could only give vent by saying he felt—"damn it." But, sir if the principles of your Christianity necessitates you to commit murder as a matter of habit, or an article of discipline in order to take rank with the leaders of St. Bartholomew and other eminent christians—take a more circuitous aim than to avow openly your murderous designs. First, provoke a quarrel, or kick up a row with the Mormons (nobody can see behind a far-off mountain), and then get every lying editor to swear that the Mormons were the first aggressors; or debauch the women by a needless soldiery in time of peace; or take Brigham Young on the pretext of treason, and while in the officer's charge, let him be murdered. By looking over the annals of Christianity, you will find many better expedients than to murder people openly without some apparent provocation.

36 Islington, Liverpool, }
May 18, 1855. }

Elder John Taylor—Dear Bro.: Being relieved for a time from the pressure of emigration business, I sit down to drop you a line or two from this part of the globe.

The British Saints, during the past emigration season, have strained every nerve to obey the great commandment to gather, and consequently I have been enabled to ship a goodly company. Statistics I need not enter into here, as the Star tells them. Now the work is over for a season, the Churches in these lands are collecting their forces, gathering up their strength, reviewing their own position, reconnoitering that of the enemy, and entering upon an effectual summer's campaign. The Pastors, Presidents, Elders, and Saints seem to be stirring themselves up to renewed life and energy in the good cause. As the warm weather comes along the priesthood seem greatly desirous to spread abroad into new places, breaking up new ground, and sowing the good seed of the Kingdom, which I trust will bring forth a plentiful harvest, yea a hundred fold. I receive from time to time cheering communications from those who are laboring with me in the various districts of this department of the great vineyard. Elder Dan Jones has enlivened up matters at Swansea. Assisted by Elders C. H. Wheelock and J. D. Ross, he has been giving a course of lectures, which have excited considerable interest. A discussion with the Rev. Mr. Short has proved an abortion—proper arrangements could not be agreed upon. In Ireland things look promising, and the Elders are in good spirits and evince much determination and faith. In the French mission the work moves slowly. In France the difficulties are numerous and formidable, as you well know. In the Channel Islands, under the energetic direction of Elder W. C. Dunbar, matters move steadily, and I trust will receive a new impetus. In Scandinavia truth advances powerfully and satisfactorily. The foreign Elders in Switzerland find themselves hedged in pretty closely sometimes, but in the German cantons there exists in the people a great desire for the truth. The Spirit of the Lord rests powerfully on them and on the native Elders, and it seems to me that a fire is there kindled that will not be readily quenched. You will doubtless rejoice to hear that Elder Daniel Tyler purposed publishing the first number of Der Darsteller der Heiligen der Letzen Tage (the Latter-Day Saints' Representer) early in the present month, at Geneva. This periodical is to be the same size as Zions Panier. It is highly cheering to me, and must be to you, and indeed to all Saints, to see so many "Mormon" lights springing up on every hand. I suppose this time two have appeared simultaneously—Elder P. P. Pratt's Herald, in California, and Elder Tyler's Representer, in Switzerland. Success attend them all, and others as they come after them. The world needs light, and not a little either.

Talking of the world wanting light, I do not know where it is needed more than in England, not only in a religious point of view, but in a political one too. For six or nine months past especially, she has betrayed her helplessly benighted condition to all the world. The Palmerstonian government, as you are doubtless well aware, does not give satisfaction. There's something wrong about it, so "everybody" says. The Family Herald says that the great want of England is a "great man." She has got everything else—a splendid fleet and a magnificent army, abundance of food and clothing, and inexhaustible stores of ammunition, but she is minus the one thing needful—a master directing mind, to make her resources available. Lord Palmerston was thought to be that man, but somehow or other he does not prove to be so "great" as was predicted he would be. His "flippancy" and jocularity on momentous questions is a serious offence to those who thought him the "right man" for the place he holds. Furthermore he has not cashiered "General Routine," as many demanded and expected of him. Yet he still continues Premier, and is likely to for a time, for though he and his ministry sustained two defeats on motions in the House of Commons on Wednesday night, yet on Monday night they defeated Lord Ellenborough's motion of "Want of Confidence" in the house of Lords, and in the same place on Tuesday night gained a similar victory, so after all the odds are about even.

Since Lord John Russell's return from his fruitless negociations at Vienna, it is said that he has been in the "sulks." He is reported to be tainted with the air of that place, and is now all for peace, being afraid of the Russians. Dissensions in the cabinet are said to be result, but the "outside pressure" for the present keeps up appearance. All the governments seem to shake over these Conferences, for M. Drouyn de l'Huys, and Count Nesselrode have "resigned," and Count de Buol and M. Bach are reported as about to "retire."

The famous Sebastopol Committee of Inquiry examined the Earl of Aberdeen on Tuesday, and concluded its setting (39 in all) for the taking of evidence. Its remaining business is to digest the heterogeneous mass of information obtained, and present its report, which is to be the test whether it will prove a "mockery, a delusion, and a sham," as its opposers prophesied, or an instrument of reformation in the administration and salvation to the country. I presume that it will not be found such a marvelous panacea as many desire and some expect. But, as if to support the committee, the subject of "administrative reform" is agitating the thoughts of many, and a society has arisen in London, and meetings are held in the country, for the attainment of this object.

As to warlike matters, Sebastopol remains where it was, and to all appearances will do for some time to come, though the siege operations are "advancing," and General Canrobert told his soldiers that he expected, within about a fortnight after April 26, 80,000 soldiers to land in the Crimea, and that, as the Allied powers had demanded the fall of Sebastopol, fall it must. All parties in the Crimea seem in a pitiable fix. The Russians make everlasting "sorties," and the Allies everlastingly "repulse" them. For anything further, all seem unprepared. But stay, it is reported that 8000 French and 5000 English, under General Sir George Brown, embarked at Kamiesch early in the present month, and went towards Kertch, landing at another Kamiesch near the Sea of Azof, for operations in that quarter. But the Times says the expedition returned again to Kamiesch before Sebastopol, and the soldiers debarked. It is said too that Omer Pasha and his Turks have gone back from Kamiesch to Eupatoria. The paper just named says that the greater the force the Allies have in the Crimea, the less they seem to do. It is very probable that the Almighty will there let the nations enact over again the story of the Kilkenny cats—fight till nothing but the tails of each are left. Certainly circumstances appear to favor such an idea. In the Baltic the Russian fleet is reported as about to "come out" this season. Besides her sailing fleet, Prussia is said to have there a 100 gun screw steamer, two 50 gun do., and 20 paddle vessels of 20 guns each.

If you are unaware of the cause of England's embroilment in this war, and of her disasters and disgrace in the conduct thereof. I can enlighten you in the matter, but I do it on the authority of Doctor Hugh McNeill, who, you will probably recollect, was chairman on the Rev. J. B. Lowe delivering his annihilating Anti-Mormon lecture in the Music Hall of this town some three years ago, and to which Elder C. H. Wheelock afterwards attempted to reply in the same place. Well, Dr. McNell, at the Amphitheatre in this town, May 15, said that England was thus humiliated because, in 1845, she passed a law endowing the Roman Catholic College of Maynooth in Ireland! England was warned at that time, but she turned a deaf ear. The famine of 1846, and the pestilence of 1847, 1849, and 1854, came. These produced no repentance. Continued this Liverpool Episcopal prophet—"the Almighty said he would bring other judgments if we would not listen; but England laughed at it; England's statesmen laughed at it; all the governments laughed at it; Lord Aberdeen, Lord Palmerston, Lord John Russell, Lord Derby, all alike laughed at it. * * * * * Well, the next judgment that comes upon us is war. * * * * * We again ask the nation to do away with this grant, and still we are laughed at as bigots. But 'God will not be mocked,' and rely upon it, still more judgments will befall us. I believe that this sin of endowing Maynooth is the national sin of England." At the same meeting the Rev. Hugh Stowell declared—"We have got a cursed thing in our camp, and as God would not go with Joshua while there was a Babylonish garment in his camp, so he will not go with us against the Russians, while the Babylonish garment of the Maynooth endowment is in our camp. When we get rid of that, victory will again sit upon upon our standard." I give the above as a specimen of English Protestant prophecy.

As you may not know that the Millennium commenced last Monday, I will state that such was the case, at least so says the venerable and celebrated Robert Owen, in a "World's Convention" held under his auspices at St. Martin's Hall, London, the day mentioned.

We have a very cold spring here. The season seems fully one month behind. By-the-by, the recent cold weather, rain, and storms are the result of the bombardment of Sebastopol. This information is due to M. Le Maont, a chemist at St. Brieuc, who says that the residue of the combustion of powder ascends into the air, and is by it carried as far as 1000 leagues, causing the temperature to lower, and producing wind, rain, and cold. So, in addition to the telegraph, which now reaches from the Crimea to England, we shall be able to obtain information about the war by the atmospheric telegraph glasses in our houses. Isn't this an age of discovery?

European News.

The Pacific arrived here at 7 o'clock Wednesday morning. She left Liverpool on Saturday, the 10th inst.

There is not much change in the affairs in relation to Sebastopol. The Allies are still talking of taking it; but that is all, with the exception of some inefficient attempts up to the present.

Gen. Canrobert had resigned the chief command to Gen. Pelisier, said by some to be through a hint from the Emperor.

It appears to be the intention of the Allies to extend their operations to various parts of the Crimea. A large force of English, French and Turks were hastily embarked on board of all the available vessels, and took the direction of the Sea of Azoff, but nothing definite was known of their destination by officers or men.

The relations between Austria and Prussia are becoming more intimate, with a mutual determination to preserve a neutrality.

Count Coronini, the Austrian Commander-in-Chief, has proclaimed martial law in the Principalities.

France and England have presented an ultimatum to Sweden, in answer to which the Swedes had immediately organized their militia.

In Turkey, the capitation tax on Christians has been finally abolished, and they are only liable to military service, though in separate corps.

In England, the democratic change appears still to be progressing. The Queen has condescended to publicly bestow medals on private soldiers in the streets of London.

Lord Raglan's dispatch of May 5th has come to hand. It states that nothing of importance had arisen.

The enemy continued to collect troops on the high ground on the opposite side of the Tchernaya. The fire from the city had not been heavy.

Terrible Scene in China.

A writer in the Tribune, from the city of Shanghai, gives the following description of the expulsion of the rebels from that city.

"After a siege of nearly a year and a half the City of Shanghai, by the assistance of the French, fell into the hands of the Imperial party. All supplies had been effectually cut off—some of the common people had starved, and dogs, cats and horses had been eaten. The rebels then concluded it was time to leave, and on the night of the 16th ult., took their departure. Notwithstanding the city was closely besieged, the large majority of the rebels made their escape. Some sixty or seventy found their way to the American Guard House, where they were kept till the next day, when Capt. Pope told them to look out for themselves. The Imperialists caught some three or four hundred, whom they beheaded. It is now generally believed that neither of the chiefs were caught. The first day the city was given up to the pillaging of the soldiery who took what little the former occupants had left. The second day the mandarins endeavored to restore order and freely administered the bamboo to those who were caught stealing. I took a walk through the town and could but feel sad at the desolation everywhere visible; whole streets were in ruins, and the beggars were picking and pilling at the fragments. Here and there was a crisped skeleton, while along the lanes and in the houses were headless bodies ripped up and cut in the most barbarous manner. The sick and wounded were all murdered wherever found. They even opened the coffins and cut the bodies of the dead in order to gratify their cowardly vengeance. As I returned I met seven or eight baskets full of heads, each basket containing ten, and men following with bamboo poles on which to stick them up in different parts of the city as a warning to all future rebels. But I must forbear lest your readers should sicken at the details of heathen cruelty.—Notwithstanding their outward polish and politeness, the Chinese have proved in this war that they have the hearts of savages.

The Bank of France.

The Bank of France has just published an account of its operations for the year 1854. The total operations of the establishment amounted to 3,888,000,000 francs to 3.964,000,000 francs in 1853, and 2,541,000,000 francs in 1852, being a diminution of 76 millions as compared with 1853. The discount accommodation in Paris and the branch banks amounted to 2,842,000,000 francs in 1853, but reached the sum of 2,944,000,000 francs in 1854, being an augumentation of 102 millions in favor of the latter year. The account current of the Treasury, which had fallen to 24 millions on November 6, 1854, had risen to 222 millions on the 17th of January, 1855, and was 184 millions on the 24th January. This augumentation was the natural consequence of the subscription to the late national loan. The metallic reserve of the Bank amounted, on January 1, 1854, to 299,000,000 francs, of which amount 109 millions were in silver, and 190 in gold; on January, 1, 1855, the amount was 364 millions, of which 183,300,000 francs were in silver, and 180,700,000 francs in gold. The reserve in gold has consequently increased during the year by a sum of 71,700,000 francs whilst that in silver has diminished 7,300,000 francs. The operations of the branch banks present a satisfactory result, as they are greater in their aggregate than the amount of business at the main establishment in Paris. The operations of the branch banks amounted in 1852 to 1,305 millions, in 1853 to 2,098 millions, and in 1854 to 2,101 millions.

The Civil and Diplomatic Bill.

Among the appropriations made in this bill passed at the close of the Session of Congress, are the following:

We clip the following from the Pittsburg Gazette:

Know Nothing Harmony.

New Hampshire, and Massachusetts Know Nothings are thoroughly abolitionized. New Jersey elected pro-slavery Delegates, and repudiated the Anti-Slavery principles of their New England brethern. The Illinois brethren are mum, pass by the slavery question altogether. In the South the Order refuses even to sit in Council, or negotiate with any who hold to the doctrine "no more Slave, States or Slave Territory." The Know Nothing Governor of Connecticut claims his election as an "emphatic condemnation of the principles of the Nebraska bill." In Greenville, in the same State. Council No. 58 met on the 1st, and yielding to the centrifugal force which drives the Northern Order from the Southern, resolved to disband. In the debate the Clerk said he had received notice from a large portion of the members, wishing to be dismissed from the Order, which was voted.—The Council voted to give up their charter on the 8th of May, when the General Council of the State of Connecticut meets at Norwich City.—This, it is said, will be the fate of most of the Councils in that State.

The South Carolina Nullifiers on the contrary, look to Know Nothingism to crush Free Soil Politics. The Greenville (S. C) Mountaineer says: "The principles of the party will, if carried out, operate necessarily against Abolitionists. Its effect will be to lessen the weight of the foreign population in the federal councils, which, with a few honorable exceptions, is generally thrown into the scale of Abolition."

Terrible Whirlwind.

Last week a severe storm passed over the country lying to the northwest of Chicago, Ill., accompanied by a whirlwind of such power as to lift houses bodily, carrying off fences and destroying life.

It struck a heavy frame house one mile from the Illinois and Wisconsin railroad, tearing the roof off, and almost immediately afterwards taking up the whole house with all its contents. Nine persons in the house were drawn up and hurled down in different places. Four of them were killed, and others mutilated beyond any prospect of recovery. The whirlwind then passed over a post and rail fence, leaving not the slightest vestige of it.

It next took up a barn and threw it upon the horses and cattle it contained, crushing them at once. The timbers of the house and barn were hurled down to the ground with such violence as to bury them almost out of sight. The house belonged to Mr. Page, whose wife and two grand-children were killed.

Accounts are given of persons being carried up one hundred feet in the air and then hurled down with great violence.

A number of eye-witnesses have testified to the ravages of the tempest, and discribed it as most terrific. The same afternoon a severe hailstorm occurred in the city, after which the sky presented a very singular appearance to the northward, and the weather changed from the most oppressive heat to the most chilling atmosphere.

It is impossible yet to learn the extent of the damage.

Shipwreck and Loss of Life.—The ship John sailed from Plymouth with 387 emigrants for Quebec, and encountered a heavy gale from the north-east to the westward of Eddystone. The vessel got closer in to the land than the Captain was aware of, and in making Black Head headlands he ran the ship on a dangerous reef, called Marades. Her bottom was stove in, and she sunk within two hundred feet of the coast. The bulk of the passengers were swept off by the fearful seas, and one hundred and ninety were lost; ninety-three clung to the rigging. By the great exertions of the coast-guard men they were saved; among them several females and Captain Rawles and crew. The John was a very old vessel, having been built in 1810.

A Coroner's jury returned a verdict of manslaughter against Captain Rawles, who is in custody.

Indictment for Murder.—St. Louis, May 22.—The Grand Jury, in the case of Robert M'Oblinnes, has found a true bill of indictment against him for the murder of Benjamin Brand. The prisoner has entered a plea of not guilty.

Marine Disaster.—Ogdensburgh, May 29, 1855.—The steamer Princess sunk yesterday at a point about six miles from this place. She was loaded with flour, etc., at the time of the occurrence. Further particulars are, as yet, unknown.

Row Boat Regatta.—Boston, May 30.—The city government of Boston have decided to have a regatta on the 4th of July, open to row boats from all parts of the Union. The prizes will be pieces of silver valued at $400.

Crops in Randolph Co., Illinois.—Says the Chester Herald of last week: "From every locality we hear the most flattering accounts of the appearance of the wheat crops. So far, the farmers have a fine prospect for hay and spring crops, and the soil is in fine order for planting corn."

The Cincinnati Gazette of May 9th says; "We have seen, within a few days a number of gentlemen from different parts of this State, and of Indiana, who bear almost unbroken evidence of the fine appearance of the young crop of wheat that is coming."

Mormon Publications.

The Deseret News is a weekly paper, the official organ of the Church in Utah, and is published in Salt Lake City; it is ably edited by Albert Carrington. It is circulated extensively in Utah Territory; how much abroad we are not prepared to say.

Price of subscription, $5 in advance.

The St. Louis Luminary.—A weekly paper lately started at St. Louis. It is a very neat paper, full of useful information, and especially interesting to the Saints, to whom we recommend it. It is ably edited by Elder Erastus Snow, one of the Twelve Apostles, and President of the Stake of St. Louis. We recommend it to all lovers of truth.

Price of subscription, $2 in advance.

Subscriptions can either be sent to The Mormon office, or to the editor of the Luminary, St. Louis, Mo.

The Millenniel Star.—A weekly publication of 16 pages, adapted for binding; of which there are 16 volumes now bound. It is printed on good paper, clear type, and is devoted principally to the progress of the work in Europe. It is very ably edited by F. D. Richards, one of the Twelve Apostles, and President of the European Church.

Price in England, one penny, or two cents. The law of postage between England and the United States is, that two cents on each paper shall be prepaid in each country, and two cents after the arrival.

Price of subscription, including foreign postage, $2.25, in advance, sent to the address of subscribers. Elder Richards has requested us to act as agent, but has not given us the terms. The above is the nearest approximate that we can arrive at without instructions.

The subscriptions can be sent to us, and we will immediately forward the names and address.

Published at 15 Wilton street, Liverpool, and 35 Jewin street, City, London.

Besides the above, there is a paper published in Australia, another in Bombay, one in Switzerland, one commencing on the Sandwich Islands, one in California, and one in Cincinnati; besides a host of minor publications.

An Illinois paper tells us: It is said—and some will go so far as to risk money on it—that the Railroad bridge at Galena will be burnt before the month of May is out. How this may be, time alone can tell. The third night after the cars commence running to Dunleith, is the precise time which some predict. We understand that an old and leading citizen of Galena is prepared to stand on the track, armed with bowie knife, revolver and rifle, to send the engineer of the first locomotive that crosses the bridge, to kingdom come. This latter rumor is freely talked of, the other is only whispered. We give both for what they are worth, and hope for the best. It is notorious that prominent citizens of Galena do not hesitate to say that the cars will not run to Dunleith in six months.

Corrected to June 1st.

To the Saints Scattered Abroad.

As there will shortly be many of our brethren here from Europe who will be in want of employment, in various trades and occupations, you are requested to send to this office, directions whereby we may know where to send those that are in need of employment, on their arrival in this country.

Those of the Saints who have not already reported, are requested to report themselves through their presiding officers or individually to this office by letter or otherwise, as soon as circumstances will admit.

Letters must be post-paid.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

THE MORMON.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions caprieieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui rè gle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèla l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre maison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.
This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.
The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.
The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.
The Engravings (except the Portraits of Joseph Smith, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Jedediah M. Grant, and John Smith; and Joseph Walker and Arapeen, Chief of the Utah Indians) are all taken from sketches made on the spot and from life, expressly for this Work, and will be finished in the first style of art, presenting a detail and an accuracy rarely aimed at in similar productions.
No pains or expense has been spared to render this work one of peculiar interest, usefulness, and beauty; and the Publisher feels confident that it will meet with that extensive patronage which can alone justify its publication.

The Woodman's Song.

SUNG BY PHILIP MARGETTS.

TUNE—"Petit Tambour."

LET soldiers sing of battle fields,
And sailors of the seas,
The miner of his golden stores,
The wealthy—pow'r and ease;
But I will sing of kanyon life,
Of rocks, and valleys deep,
Of mountain trails, and snagy roads
Along the winding steep.

CHORUS.

Tho' kanyon life's with danger rife,
The mountains we'll explore—
The woodman's toil is for his home,
Ere winter shuts the door.

Before the sun o'ertops the hills,
The teamster's on his road,
His oxen slow thro' dust do go,
And creeks, to drag their load.
His merry song from morn to light,
Is gee-hip, and gee-who,
Yet, still his heart beats high with love,
The farther he does go.
Tho' kanyon life's with danger rife, &c.

When heights are pass'd, the forest gain'd,
And cattle out the yoke,
Then ev'ry energy is strain'd
To fell the tow'ring oak.
And when the wood is snaked, and piled,
Clothes torn, and limbs all sore,
His wish is then for morning light,
And home, and friends once more.
Tho' kanyon life's with danger rife, &c.

The sun shines o'er his lonely path,
The air he breathes is pure,
No cares perplex the woodman's mind
Which great men's bliss obscure.
The highest mountains less do share
The calm of sunny days,
O'ercapt with snow, and misty fogs,
They seldom feel its rays.
Tho' kanyon life's with danger rife, &c.

And should death throw his deadly dart,
'Twould give him no surprise,
He's learned this lesson in the woods,
"To live the best is wise;"
And should he come, he cares not when,
No terrors can him seize,
He knows his work's to kill off men,
As woodmen fell the trees.
Tho' kanyon life's with danger rife, &c.

So, here we go, gee-up, gee-who,
And now, and then, who-haw,
The whip's a goad, to ev'ry rogue
Who off the line would draw.
All wise men should know how to drive,
Nor cruelty e'er deem
The only way, o'er rugged roads,
To drive the stubborn team.
Tho' kanyon life's with danger rife, &c.

The gloomy dusk, and cloudy air,
Oft housewives' minds bewray,
They'll out, and in, and anxious stare,
In wonder why we stay.
At length the woodman's voice is heard,
His children shout, "he's come;"
Thus joy does crown his festive board,
Each night when he comes home. LYON.

American Commerce with Russia.

THE actual amount of commercial transactions carried on between this country and Russia, would scarcely warrant such a heading as we have given to this article; but in so entitling it, we desire more to direct the enterprise of our merchants and ship-owners to the advantages which such commerce offers, than to chronicle with any degree of satisfaction the extent or profits of past or existing commerce with the Russian empire.

A gentlemen—Mr. de Tegoborski—who has given attention to the subject in the Merchants' Magazine, justly thinks that in the present complication of European difficulties, a most favorable opportunity opens for the natural activity and go-a-headativeness of our American business men. And when we consider the large profits accruing to England, Germany and other second-hand dealers in American produce with Russia, we more emphatically draw attention to the subject; one almost utterly neglected; and one full of vitality and remuneration; suggesting an increased demand for several of our staple commodities, and offering a ready market for nearly all American products.

It is strange that the genius of American enterprise, "no, if report speaks truly, has as many eyes as Argus, should for so long a period have overlooked the wide field in which it might bask its speculative proportions; nor calmly view John Bull and the Hanseatic Mynheer in turning such cargoes of "honest pennies" by judiciously shaking the great bear's paw and smoking their Dutch pipes with the self-satisfied unction of successful peddlers. However the axiom goes,—it is an ill wind that blows nobody good,—and certainly this "blast of war" which throbs from the Volga to the Thames—ay, even from the heights of Sebastopol to the abysmal depths and mysterious depots of foreign-legion recruiting sergeants in New-York and Boston—without doubt these war echoes which break on our shores from Europe may, in the fact of the distracted state of Europe, suggest to us the means of pushing our mercantile fortunes with Russia. A commercial-basis might now be established between the two countries which would create immediate important advantages, and doubtless fully sustain the most reasonable prognostications for the future.

A few facts will be sufficiently suggestive: Russia takes from Great Britain yearly, more than $17,000,000 worth of goods of the most various descriptions. Of this large quantity, barely two-fifths are the production of the soil or industry of England—consequently, the producers of the remaining three-fifths—America being one of them to a large extent—could command the Russian market, and receive better prices for their commodities.

Out of 3,617 vessels, the average number which visited the Russian ports in the Baltic during the years 1850-'51-'52, 1,316 of the number were English, and only 49 American.

During the same years, the Cotton imported by Russia averaged 54,313,480 lbs., of which four-fifths of the entire quantity (43,051,680 lbs.) was furnished by England, and only 7,685,440 lbs. directly sent from the United States, although we know that the Cotton used in Russian manufactures is chiefly American. The importance of the Cotton trade may be seen at a glance, thus—

	Importation—lbs.
1842-'44	20,980,440
1852	73,398,440

Within the last ten years it has more than trebled, and in Mr. de Tegoborski's opinion even the present amount could be doubled in a few years. These figures ought to open the eyes of progress.

Again, in the matter of tobacco Russia imports on an average some 7,200,000 lbs. or over, a large portion of which is grown here, but only 540,000 lbs. directly exported for Russia.

Of coffee we furnish Russia only 480,000 lbs. of the 9,120,000 lbs. she annually receives. And although one-half of their supply of furs consists of American martens, we export directly to them none of these commodities. They are furnished by German forestallers.

In sugar, the Russians chiefly use Cuban, from its very good quality and none others being thought worth the heavy duty imposed on the sea-imported commodity. The average importations by sea amount to 75,730,000 lbs., of which 2,560,000 lbs. are from the United States. The low price of American sugars, would, if directed by energy; create many facilities for a remunerative competition in this business.

Mr. Thomas Gradgrind could not desire harder "facts" than those embodied in the figures given. They are quite eloquent, and to those who would act on them, encouraging. With all our energy, capacity and business desire, we have but one per cent. of the ships reaching the Baltic; but fourteen per cent. of the cotton; seven per cent. of the tobacco; five per cent. of the coffee; three per cent. of the sugar imported by Russia. The English and Hanseatic merchants almost monopolize the Russian trade; and if it is worth their while to made princely fortunes, re-trading our natural products, we are rather inclined to believe that a direct business is not beneath the attention, as the profits would not be beneath the acceptance, of our own "merchant princes."—[New York Tribune.

MUSHROOMS.—The quickness of growth of some of the species of this plant, especially the Phalli, is truly astonishing, extending themselves in height six inches within an hour; the rapidity of their increase is all but past belief. The puff-ball fungus or mushroom has been computed by Burnett to grow at the rate of many million cells per minute, upwards of a million per second, and to be, when at maturity, so many times larger than when beginning to grow, that our figures are useless for the expression of the sum.

"MOTHER, did you hear sissy swear!"

"No, my dear—what did she say?"

"Why, she said she wasn't going to wear her darned stockings to church."

Future Troubles.

THE New York Tribune, in an article on the Kansas mischief, thus speculates on the probabilities of the future:

"But the mischief that is brewing, is not alone in Kansas. There are deep-laid plots of treason to freedom consummating in Washington. The arch disunionist, Jefferson Davis, who signalized his career in the Senate of the United States by advocating an overthrow of the Government in case all of our California acquisition below 36 deg. 30 min. was not surrendered to Slavery by special stipulation, aspires to the post of Commander-in-Chief of the Army. He is Mr. Pierce's Secretary of War, and a leading man in the Cabinet. Should he achieve his object, all that we know of his antecedents leads us to believe that he would not hesitate to use his influence to spread Slavery into the West and North at the point of the bayonet, and if attempts were made to resist it in any effective manner, he would exert all his power to subvert the Government. The Free States are surrounded by plots and toils and complications, in respect to the subjugation of this Government by the slaveholders, of which the people little dream. Next week Col. Kinney's expedition for Central America will sail, in a steamer procured for the purpose with every arrangement to overrun and subdue the feeble republics of Honduras, Nicaragua and Costa Rica. When conquered, their conversion into Slave States will be soon accomplished. More threatening even than this, the President has ordered a fleet to the Gulf of Mexico, to bring on a war with Spain for the possession of Cuba. We are approaching the crisis which will decide whether Slavery or Freedom is to mould the destinies of America.

The Slave power is determined to control the Union, and to possess a majority of the States. They aim not at the economical or industrial advancement of the nation. They do not even desire the spread of slavery because of the worth of the institution in their own eyes. On the contrary, it is felt and known to be the great blight and curse upon the national prosperity; but their purpose in spreading it is to secure guards and outposts for the main citadel of slavery in the South. The slaveholders are determined to cripple and circumscribe the growth of the Free States. Their action is based upon deliberate views of what they have brought themselves to believe is the necessity of their situation. They are well fortified at present, or have been by Northern doughfaces. They lean upon Pennsylvania and Illinois, and other Free States, as faithful allies. But they do not know how soon the fires of Northern independence may burn out the roots of their power, and they aim to be secure against the time when that shall happen. Their designs are far reaching and their plots deep. Meanwhile the North—the money-making, busy, outraged North—secure in its own tranquility and prosperity, after one spasmodic act of condemnation for the atrocity of the Nebraska Bill, gives symptoms of relapsing into a mere armed neutrality, or what is worse, of expending its zeal, energy and virtuous indignation in disputations and quarrels over the growth of one among fifty religious denominations, and the dangers of an increment, by immigration from foreign States, of our free population.

European News.

THE following we extract from several English papers, which will show in part the position of affairs in Europe, and particularly in the Crimea:

NOTES FROM THE CAMP—NIGHT SKIRMISHING.

APRIL 25.—Beyond the preparations going forward for another bombardment, there is literally nothing doing here; and, contrasted with our recent excitement, the allied camps seem even more dull then when at Varna or Alyden. The only fact we know is that another bombardment is to be tried, and the general opinion of the army is already loud in prognosticating its utter failure. Meanwhile, we still go on as in November last—a little skirmishing in the night, a little firing in the day; not much of either, but just sufficient to show that we are still at war, and have not raised the siege. This is our condition at the present date, and, for all we see to the contrary, may very likely be the same this day six months. Last night the French had a very smart affair on the left, in an attack on the extensive rifle trench. This work enfiladed one of their advanced batteries on the extreme left, near the Mud Fort, and annoyed our allies considerably. But the serious nature of its mischief was not fully appreciated until the French began, like ourselves, to push forward approaches for a still more advanced battery. The working parties engaged in this were incessantly harassed, and at length, as they approached the trench, lost so considerably that its capture at all risks became absolutely necessary to the continuation of the parallel. A strong party of chasseurs and volunteers were last night told off for this purpose. They proceeded to the spot; but, instead of charging the trench and closing instantly, began their operations by trying to dislodge the riflemen with a skirmishing fire. This continued for nearly half an hour, and in such a contest I need hardly say all the advantage was on the side of the enemy, who were almost completely screened, while the assailants were totally exposed. The French suffered rather severely, but at last succeeded in getting on the flanks of the trench, where they maintained such a fire that the Russians were compelled to abandon its useless shelter, and, as they retired to their batteries, nearly all where either killed or wounded on the open ground. The French took possession of the trench, and in spite of a heavy cannonade which the enemy directed on the spot, kept their ground, and prepared to fill it in. They had half succeeded in accomplishing their object, when a numerous force of Russians made their appearance, for the purpose of retaking the post. After a short but severe contest, in which the enemy twice charged with the bayonet, they were totally repulsed, and driven back to the town in complete disorder. The French then continued their work of filling up the pit, in which they were no further molested by the batteries, probably because the Russians were aware that many of their wounded remained upon the spot. The trench was completely filled in and its parapet levelled in the course of an hour, when both French and Russian wounded were removed, without hindrance. Our allies in this affair lost upwards of 100 men and officers killed and wounded. One officer and 47 men, it is said, are among the former. The Russian loss we can only conjecture, but it can be little less than double that of the French. They left about 30 dead, and 10 to 15 wounded upon the ground. The rest they succeeded in carrying off. Captain Christie's trial was to have taken place to day at Kamiesch, but the worry and mental excitement of the last few days have, I am sorry to say, been too much for him, and he is now delirious and dangerously ill. Of course, under such circumstances, the trial is now postponed indefinitely. The Russians to-day appeared in unusual force on the heights along the Woronzow-road.—[Morning Herald.

POSITION OF THE RUSSIANS.

APRIL 27.—If the language addressed to his officers by General Canrobert, on Thursday, is to be taken as the announcement of our future strategical policy before Sebastopol, it is certain that no very decisive blow will be struck against the place and the armies which defend it until the allies shall have reinforced by some 70,000 or 80,000 French troops, of whom we are told there are already 15,000 at Constantinople on their way to the Crimea, as the avant-garde of the second great army that France has poured from her shores to take part in this great contest. When these new French come, where will they be stowed away? The Chersonese is almost as full as it can hold. There is really no room for more men, except on the stony hills between Karanyi and St. George, which are far removed from active operations. To place men in such a position would be to deprive the allies of all advantage from their presence. A French force of the magnitude promised by General Canrobert is amply sufficient to win another Alma, or to immortalise, by new victories, the names of the Katscha or the Belbek. It is one of the misfortunes of our isolated position that we cannot move out to ascertain the exact nature of the fortifications thrown up by the enemy on the north and eastern faces of the place, along the banks of the Katscha and the Belbek. The banks of the latter river are under the command of the guns in the northern fort, but it is known, I think, whether the south banks are fortified higher up the river, so as to enable the generals to decide that an army would be justified in deserting the sea and making a march to the eastward, to force its way through the Russian columns and cut off the communication of Sebastopol with Simpheropol, Bakshi Serai, and the rest of the Crimea. The cavalry cannot reconnoitre in a country which is all like the mountainous parts of Derbyshire, or like the Dargle in the county of Wicklow on a gigantic scale. The Tchernaya is like an Alpine torrent after you ascend its course between the hills which spring up from the plain of Balaklava, and all the heights over it are covered with earthworths, and the approaches to them scarped, and under the fire of redoubts and entrenchments. On a plateau on the north side of the Woronzow road the Russians have thrown up a most scientifically constructed and extensive entrenchment into which they can pour an army from the heights above at the least alarm of any movement. This work was constructed by Liprandi's army, but has been recently enlarged and renewed, and it is now capable of being made into a very formidable entrenched camp, the approaches to it being commanded by redoubts. Tchourgoum lies below this great work to the eastward and southward, and it is near this village that the only safe fords for the passage of troops can be found in the Tchernaya. It is not possible to turn this position. If a force were landed at any point along the coast to the east of Balaklava, and to the west of Yalta, they would find themselves in an Alpine country, with only one road winding along the ravines, and that, in all probability, scarped. This one road would bring them out near Balaklava, south of the Tchernaya, and with the precipices over Tchorgoun and Mackenzie's Farm still before them. It was not in our power, owing to the deficiency of our forces, to prevent the erection of these works during the winter, and the miserable state of our cavalry did not permit the generals to to make even the ordinary reconnoissances and observations, which are considered almost essential for the very existence of an army. In all probability Komara, and the old line of Turkish redoubts, will be occupied by a portion of any additional force which may arrive at the south side of Sebastopol; and we could thence operate against the Russian entrenchments, and prepare to cover the passage of the Tchernaya, in the event of any movement to effect a junction with the allied troops marching from the north, or forcing its way through the centre of the Russians, which must necessarily be very weak. At present, the Russians on the north side of the Tchernaya are safer from us than if the Atlantic were between us. We can see their wigwams, count their horses, watch their men cooking, cutting wood, parading and drilling, across the great gulf which is fixed between us, with feelings very much akin to those with which a hungry lion must watch the fat little boy who is always aggravating hungry lions at the Zoological Gardens.—[London Times.

PROSPECTS.

Every day the difficulties of Russia in feeding her Crimean army, and in supplying the munitions of war to Sebastopol, will increase. The transport of the Crimea has been "used up" some time ago, and at present carts and cattle from Poland have been brought down, and are engaged in conveying provisions and material to the place. Although Russian iron is excllent, it cannot last for ever—guns must wear out, and shot and shell do not grow. With the sea at our command, we find it difficult to keep up the supply of shot and shell for our batteries, and, even when we do land them, although we possess a railway half-way to the trenches, our difficulties seem only to begin. What means Russia would adopt to keep her batteries efficient in winter is, I trust, matter of very profitles speculation, because there is no reason to think that the place will be able to hold out so long against sap and mine, bombardment and cannonade, particularly when General Canrobert "enlarges his circle" of operations. Every day we diminish our distance from the enemy, who does, it must be said, his best to meet us; but although his outworks are advanced, the line of the batteries on the left has been perforce considerably retired. As our advances are made, the parallels behind are strengthened and put into a fit state for mounting guns in them, which will be close to the enemy's works, and produce a corresponding effect, though with increased loss and damage to ourselves from the Russian guns. The process thus goes on, in proportion to our strength and the enemy's weakness, day after day, and bit by bit, the ground is won from them; and though the town itself may be defended by infinitesimal batteries to the water's edge, so long as we keep our works clear of the enemy, and can maintain our fire against them, there can be no doubt of ultimate success, if the external army is unable to force the allies to raise the siege.

WHAT WE ARE DOING.

Our batteries are nearly silent—a few guns and mortars reply to an occasional shot from the Redan and Round Tower, at long intervals, and there seems to be a ship behind the Round Tower, which harasses our right attack by an odd shell now and then. What a contrast to the French on our left, and even on our right! They have never ceased to fire, and the Russians return shot for shot from the mass of ruins and rubbish in which the batteries are enveloped. The day before yesterday the enemy opened a new battery, which is up among the houses of the town, on a ridge near the governor's house, and directed a very heavy fire on the French, with a diversion now and then on the left of our left attack. In the right attack yesterday we had two gunners killed, and the platforms of two guns broken; and although these batteries have all been severely handled, they have reduced the fire of the Mamelon and of the Round Tower with great success. Still we must give to the French every praise for the perseverance of their attack, deprived as they have been of their fair share of support from our fire for some days back. They have certainly atoned for their failure on the 17th of October, which was caused by the melancholy accidents to their magazines. There are mysterious whispers that we shall "open fire again in a few days" with an allowance of 100 rounds a gun per diem. A supply of some useful 56 and a few 68 pounder guns have been brought up from Balaklava to the batteries, and considerable additions have been made to our armament since I last wrote. A moderate supply of 13-inch bomb fuses has been raked together, and, if promises are to be trusted, we really will effect great things on this the third "commencement" of the siege.

THE BALTIC.

The following letter is from the Independance Belge:

"May 4.—You have learnt by telegraph the departure of the entire English fleet from the bay of Kiel. On the 1st instant the admiral had received despatches from London, ordering him to remain there eight days longer, and on the 3d another despatch enjoined him to penetrate immediately into the Baltic. The departure accordingly took place with a certain degree of precipitation. It was believed at Kiel that the fleet would first proceed to the Swedish island of Gothland. According to the last accounts the ice still firmly adhered to the coast of the Gulf of Bothnia, and of Finland, at Abo, Sweaborg, and Helsingfors. Letters from the last town of the 26th ultimo state that the twenty battalions of Finnish troops, the levy of which had been ordered by the Emperor Nicholas, were then nearly organised, having received their equipment and arms in the month of March. These troops were stationed at Wassa, Abo, and in other localities along the Gulf of Bothnia. All the retired officers had re-entered the service, and a number of civil employes had likewise obtained commissions in those battalions. The advance guard of the English fleet has already advanced to a considerable distance into the Baltic. On the 19th ultimo two large steamers arrived at Fohroe Sound, the most northern part of the island of Gothland, where, during the summer of last year, a number of vessels belonging to the fleet of Admiral Napier remained stationed. A Russian vessel, which had wintered there, and was preparing to continue her voyage, was obliged to desist on the appearance of the two steamers, and will, no doubt, remain blockaded in the Sound until the close of the year. The English have already made several prizes."

The following is from the Liverpool Mail:

OUR LOSSES IN BATTLE.

"A parliamentary return moved for by Mr. Locke King, and published to-day, gives some particulars regarding the killed and wounded in the Crimea since the commencement of the campaign. In the cavalry there were killed 11 officers, 14 non-commissioned officers, and 146 men; in the artillery 6 officers, 5 non-commissioned officers, and 35 men; in the sappers and miners (Royal engineers,) 1 officer and 1 man; in the infantry, 64 officers, 62 sergeants and 1000 men, and 9 officers of the staff—making a total of killed of all ranks, 1360. The total number of wounded was 4546—viz.: in the cavalry, 21 officers, 21 sergeants, and 181 men; in the artillery, 9 officers, 10 sergeants, and 149 men; in the engineers, 3 officers, 1 sergeant, and 9 men; in the infantry, 186 officers, 286 sergeants, and 3698 men, together with 22 officers of the staff. Of the 241 officers of all arms of the service thus wounded, 20 died in consequence of the injuries received. The number of horses killed during the campaign was 381, while those who died from other causes amounted to 1466.

WORKING OF THE CRIMEAN RAILWAY.

The following is an extract from a report upon this subject, which has been addressed to Messrs. Peto and Brassey, by their chief-engineer:

"The railway was commenced on the 8th of February by the navvies; it conveyed commissariat stores to Kadikoi on the 23d, and on the 26th of March it conveyed shot and shell to the summit of head-quarters, four and a-half miles from Balaklava; which, with the Diamond-wharf branch, and the double line from Balaklava to Kadikoi, makes upwards of seven miles of rail laid down in less than seven weeks; and now I approach the most important question of the whole—what has the railway done, and what is it calculated to do?

"First, I will give a list of the stores to be sent up to the front daily, as furnished by the commissariat officer, Mr. Bailey. This is exclusive of the Highland Brigade or cavalry, who have long since made use of the line for getting up their stores:

"Mem.—Daily supply of provisions for the front:

	lbs.
Biscuit, 300 bags, 112lb. each	33,600
Salt meat, 100 casks, 450lb. each	45,000
Groceries and extras—say	30,000
Corn—say 500 bags, 150lb. each	75,000
Hay, 120 bales, 150lb. each	18,000
Fuel, wood and charcoal—say	45,000
Total	246,600

"Say, 112 tons daily. "W. BAILEY."

Up to last night (the engineer continues) the railway "Has taken up as nearly as can be 1000 tons of shell and shot, 300 tons of small arms, 3600 tons of commissariat stores, (fuel and forage,) besides upwards of 1000 tons of miscellaneous, viz., guns, platforms, huts, Quartermaster-General's stores, &c."

THE FOREIGN LEGION.

From the debates in parliament on Friday evening it will be seen that it is now the intention of government to exercise the powers for which their half-brothers under Lord Aberdeen deemed it necessary, as in a case of emergency, to assemble parliament so much earlier than usual.

The foreign legion is to be immediately enrolled, and will be organised with the utmost expedition. The men will assemble in Heligoland and at Shorncliffe, near Dover, and it is expected that 5000 so embodied will be ready for active service in about six weeks. This appears an incredible short space of time, but it arises from the fact of there being scarcely a man enlisted who has not already completed three years' service in his own country. They are entirely Germans, and are taken principally from amongst the artistical or mechanical classes of the community—not such as those who in poverty embrace the profession of arms as a last resort, but who from deep indignation at the dishonorable and inglorious part taken by their own governments, and from bitter hatred to Russia, which they consider alike the enemy of their fatherland and of Europe, seek with alacrity the opportunity which is denied them at home of joining the enlightened policy of the Western Powers to strike a blow at the ambitious despot.

The officers, particularly the juniors, are also Germans—gentlemen of standing and substance in their own country; and we understand there are a vast number of applications from the cadets of the first families in the land for permission to join the force as volunteers, which, we believe, it is the intention of the authorities to grant.

It is stated to be the intention of the allied powers to embark an immense force immediately for the Crimea; such a movement is considered necessary by persons well acquainted with military affairs. It is understood that the expedition will comprise about 50,000 men—cavalry, artillery, and infantry—and that its destination will be some place near the isthmus of Perekop, in order to co-operate with the allied army before Sebastopol, by checking the advance, or, in the event of the fortress being carried, by cutting off the retreat of the Russians.

Cavalry and artillery reinforcements are being daily sent off from France to the Crimea, and it is expected that by the end of the month the siege train will have received an addition of 100 guns, and the cavalry and artillery supplied with 10,000 fresh horses.

FOREIGN SUMMARY.

FRANCE.—The resignation of M. Drouyn de Lhuys was tendered on Saturday. The cause of his withdrawal from the cabinet is said to be a serious difference of opinion between him and the Emperor on the propositions of peace lately submitted to England and France by Austria with a view of their being eventually proposed by that power to Russia. The army is about to be augmented. Instead of 80,000 men being called out next month as at first proposed, it is intended to raise 200,000 for active service. A loan of 250,000,000f. to meet the expense is talked of.

SPAIN.—It is whispered at Madrid that overtures have been made by France and England for an offensive and defensive alliance with Spain. The government denies the truth of the rumor. Some, however, are of opinion that it will ere long be realized. The extraordinary tax of 200,000,000 reals on the property of the church, in order to cover the pressing deficit, has been accorded to the government.

AUSTRIA.—Negotiations ended or still in progress continue to form the staple of speculation at Vienna. It is said that Austria has again forwarded to the Western Powers, in a slightly modified shape, the Russian proposal already rejected by the allies. That plan is, according to the Times Vienna correspondent, —"1. That the Russian fleet shall be as powerful as it was before the war began, but that the St. Petersburg cabinet shall engage not to increase the number of vessels. 2. The Bosphorus, in virtue of the treaty of 1841, to remain closed, so that no Russian men-of-war can come through the straits to Constantinople,—but the allies to have the privilege of sending as many vessels of war up the Dardanelles as the Russians have ships in the Black Sea."

ACCIDENT.—Rochester, Tuesday, May 29.—While the hundred guns were being fired in honor of the election of Mr. Wise, this morning, a premature discharge of the cannon dangerously, if not fatally, injured a man named Hutchinson. Both of his arms were broken, and his head and face were dreadfully mangled.

NEW ORLEANS, June 4.—The total number of deaths by cholera in this city last week was 275.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1855.

The Mormons and Their Slanderers.

WE have to apologize to our readers for having so much in our paper lately in relation to the falsehood and misrepresentation of many of our cotemporaries. We are not, nor do we desire to be captious; our creed is to "mind our own business;" part of that business, however, is, as will be seen by our prospectus, to defend the character of Mormonism against the slanderous attacks of a corrupt, venal press. We consider many small attacks and misrepresentations as beneath our notice; but when we see huge bare-faced falsehoods, unblushingly set forth, and fabricated and circulated, by a certain clique, for the most infamous purposes, we consider, as the advocates of the principles of Mormonism, which we verily believe, that it is our bounden duty to step forward in the defence of innocence and truth; to unmask their hypocrisy, lay bare their falsehood, and present them before the world, in their true colors, as mean demagogues and debased trucklers and liars. Cant and hypocrisy we have ever despised, among professors of religion; but if there is any one thing more despicable in our eyes than another, it is a long-faced, sanctimonious, hypocritical politician—a Miss Nancy, simpering, whining, defaming editor—

"Who steals the livery of heaven to serve the devil in;"

And who, under the garb of purity, virtue and patriotism, hides the assassin's dagger, and publishes mean, base and contemptible falsehoods, knowing them to be so.

We are ready to admit that it is not always in the power of an editor to detect falsehood, if he actually wishes to do right; but when the falsehood he may have published is made known, any honest man will be as ready to make restitution, and correct the misrepresentation, as he was to make it. When he neglects or refuses to do this, he stands before the world as a dishonest man and an avowed traducer; and neither a long face, "turned up eyes," nor affected piety will alter the verdict.

Now what are the facts in relation to Utah and the Mormons?

The Mormons are denounced as being disaffected to the Government. Have we had any proof? Not one particle. We defy you to bring it, gentlemen. Read and publish, if you have the honesty, Col. Steptoe's testimony, and that of the officers both of the Territorial government and of the army, as well as storekeepers, and other strangers, who, in a petition to the President of the United States for the re-appointment of Gov. Young, contradict your base assertions. It will be found in THE MORMON of last week, and other papers. Why is not this as extensively published as the slanders you published a few weeks ago? Will you suppress this, and call yourselves honest men?

The Mormons are denounced as being indolent, lawless, and disorderly. We refer our readers to a contradiction of this, by Mr. Fuller, the editor of the Mirror, as published February 20; it will be found in another column of to-day's paper; and as he has lately joined the ranks of our avowed enemies, perhaps his testimony may be considered good. We are accused of plurality and sensuality. We acknowledge the first, and are prepared to defend it before editors, priests, and people, as a Scriptural doctrine, ordained and acknowledged of God; the latter we deny, and are ready to compare notes and call for proof.

If Utah has done any wrong, is it not easily known? Surely, with your military and civil officers there, there is no danger of your being swallowed without knowing it. Don't be alarmed, gentlemen, the thunder is all of your own make. The Mormons are plowing, sowing, planting, and minding their own business. The sound has not reached them yet.

We have lately received a letter from Professor Orson Spencer, Cincinnati, formerly a Baptist minister in the East, on this subject, from which we extract the following:

"My feelings are a little roused, I confess, when not less than six papers of this city, and perhaps more, are publishing the most murderous articles against us. I have already visited two or three editors, and intend to see others soon, and I can assure you that I face them down with their murderous craft, and some of them seem mad, and sit dumb with astonishment, and others bark and snap. I tell them to their teeth that they are seeking to commit murder and shed the blood of innocence. I feel constrained to do this, whether it does good or not, by way of prevention; my blood seems ready to burst through my veins if I do not do it. The anonymous slanders which they publish are regarded by the great mass of people as veritable truth, and these bloodhounds know it. I have with great persuasion brought two editors to consent to publish the petition to President Pierce, signed by Col. Steptoe and others. One of them told me, as a reason for not publishing it, "that their office was committed to publish against us, and that it would show inconsistency and contradiction if they published on both sides." I showed him the consequences of publishing lies and fanning the flames of murder, and then refusing to publish the truth, and thereby stay the effusion of righteous blood. And if I had a paper and press at my command, I would call upon the hireling editors throughout this land to retrace their steps and recall their errors, and no longer dip their murderous pens in the blood of the innocent."

(Our columns are open, Bro. Spencer; pitch into them.)

Now we are not much afraid of the blood referred to; there is more gas than anything else in many of these statements of these Cincinnati editors; they are "committed to publish against," and not the truth—that is not in their vocabulary. Will the Professor forward their names? and we will publish them for him; we like to know such gentlemen, such pure-minded, truthful, virtuous men, who are so zealous for righteousness that they must suppress the truth, for fear it would injure their cause; "it would make them look inconsistent;" that we can believe readily. We are reminded here of a witness who had stated in court, in giving evidence, that a horse was seventeen feet high; upon being interrogated by counsel in relation to it, he replied, "Did I say the horse was seventeen feet high?" "So I understood," said counsel. "Then, by Jove, I'll stick to it. It is seventeen feet high." "He was committed."

Stick to it, gentlemen, and go it; if you can stand it, we can; make your thunder, proclaim your lies, go on with your warfare; proscribe and re-proscribe; it will soon be as heavy on your heads as ours; Truth is our motto; "Truth will prevail;" open your batteries; blow your trumpets; sound your alarum; issue your edicts; exhibit your folly; unite your forces; and blow your blast. If truth won't sustain us, we fall; we despise your platform; it is too narrow, contracted, rotten; we go in for truth, for moral, religious, scientific, philosophical, political, universal truth; we have flung our banner to the breeze, nailed our colors to the mast, and dare the conflict; we court investigation; we dare publish anything we please; we are not fettered, or circumscribed, and won't be; we grasp at all truth; our craft sails in clear waters; we fear no danger; we expect to cleave to truth in this world and the next, in time and throughout eternity. Let others take what they please, we say give us truth! truth! eternal truth!

Emigration.

WE have now a short recess after the cares attendant upon the emigration of the past few weeks, and take time to pause and look about us, and review matters connected with this, the first attempt in carrying into effect the efficient measures of Gov. Young, so important to the health and well-being of our brethren, on their way from Europe to the Valleys of the Mountains; by a transit through our Northern ports, instead of the tedious and unhealthy voyage through the Gulf, and by over-crowded steamers along the sultry "bayous," and the sickly miasma concentrated in the "air currents" of the great Mississippi.

The emigration, already commenced, of 2,300 souls on the five ships to this port and Philadelphia, has been altogether satisfactory; not only in relation to life and health, but to the kindness and gentlemanly bearing of the officers of the several ships to their passengers, during their voyage, and on arrival the prompt and efficient municipal authority and laws in protecting the strangers from the heartless sharpers that invariably infest our sea-board towns; for their good condition much credit is due to President F. D. Richards for the manner in which they are fitted out, and their general police and organization, for the excellent selection of presiding officers over the companies, and the entire willingness of those over whom they presided to listen to their counsel and wholesome instructions. Neither had they much cause to mourn the casualties and loss of life by the way, which are so common on board of emigrant ships, as there were but a few deaths, and they were of the age of infancy: for these blessings the members of each company seemed very grateful.

And we think it can be truly said, as many who visited the ships were heard to remark, that never has New York or Philadelphia witnessed such good order, good feelings, and such a spirit of union and kindness one to another, as was exhibited by the emigration of the Latter Day Saints. And perhaps for the first time the Songs of Zion cheerfully reverberated along the quays and through the streets of these two great ocean marts of our country, as hundreds of the Saints raised their voices in unison and thanksgiving on the ships and steamers; and as the well-freighted cars threaded their way through the streets, conveying them to their far-off mountain homes; and there were but comparatively few from all the ships with whom they were compelled to reach the parting hand, or shed a parting tear: all, or most of those left behind, found immediate employment, through the interest and activity of the few Saints that reside in this vicinity. And in this respect it may be well said of our emigration, that never have our Eastern cities received an equal number of emigrants without some destitute ones, left as paupers upon their hands, until this, the "Mormon emigration." But there is reason for this: ours differs from every other emigration, in that they have a specific object in view in coming to this land; it is not in search of employment; it is not for pecuniary advantage; it is not that they are forced by embarrassments from their homes, or for a lack of regard for friends they leave behind them; but a conscientious desire to serve God and keep His commandments, and a knowledge that the time has come "when they shall come from the North and from the South, from the East and from the West, in the gathering together of the last days." It is that they believe that the "Mountain of the House of the Lord shall be established in the tops of the mountains, and exalted above the hills," and "all nations shall flow unto it." It is a matter of principle with them; it is their religion; therefore the communities of the East need have no fear of their being burdensome to them in the shape of pauperism, for indeed there are but few who leave their homes without a fair prospect of reaching their desired haven in the distant mountain valleys.

And through the indefatiguable energy of Gov. Young and those associated with him, has a permanent mutual fund been raised for the poor and disabled, that none should be left by the way, to become burthersome to strangers, and thereby give occasion of the least complaint, against that people, for the want of that liberal independence so congenial to the feelings of our American community. And beside this, has the conscientious desire to do right, impelled them to observe, the first law of heaven, "Order," and they come not only with a specific object in view, but they come well organized, with proper and efficient presiding officers over each department, men who are competent to advise, and able to lead such large bodies without disorder, on their long and tedious journey, and thus relieves all local organizations and authority from the responsibility and expense attending large unorganized masses of emigration, and leave open a rich harvest for merchants, freight carriers, railroads, steamboats, mechanics, and cattle dealers, along their route through the country. If there is any emigration which this country may with propriety welcome to its shores it is the emigration of the Latter Day Saints, or Mormons.

Look on this Side, and Then on That.

THE more we see of the conduct of editors the more are we astonished at the unblushing effrontery manifested by some of them: do they think their readers are perfect dupes, that they have no memory, no mind, no intelligence, or are they perfectly reckless as to their own character? We certainly must confess our chagrin at not meeting with more honor. We are not acquainted with the writer of the following diatrebe Mr. Fuller, the editor of the Mirror; but after having read an article some time since in his paper which we publish below judge of our astonishment on reading the following:

From the New York Evening Mirror, May 26.

The Mormons have not only become dangerous to religion and morality, in that distant State in which they have chosen their abode, but traitors to the constitution, and avowed violators of the law. The time has arrived when the civilization of the nineteenth century must be vindicated, and the female virtue of the land protected from the contaminating example of these human monsters; and the vindication should be carried out by the strong arm of the executive government. The cannon of the United States should be brought to bear on the Mormon temple, and that Sebastopol of debauchery and open prostitution levelled to the earth. While our public moralists and reformers are making war upon the hotels and taverns and private property of our citizens, a hideous system—an immoral excrescence—is allowed to spring up and overtop the constitution itself. Why are there no public meetings convened in the Tabernacle to denounce Mormonism? The evil has become a notorious fact—its existence cannot be any longer ignored—and it is not, therefore, prudent that the eyes of the public should be closed to its effects.

These remarks are prefaced with a reference we, suppose, to certain professed disclosures, made by a correspondent of the Times which we pronounce, and are prepared to prove false, and are prepared to exhibit some of the most filthy acts that ever disgraced any court, and yet the Mormons must be killed off because of the statements of such brutes. These and a Mormon Exposer are to be the ground work. And yet the editor has forgot all that he has himself seen, all that he knew, all that he testified about. Whether did he speak the truth before, or now? We publish the following and leave the public to judge:

From the New York Evening Mirror, Feb. 20.

THE MORMON.—This is the title of a weekly journal, just started in this city, to advocate the religion of the "Latter Day Saints," to correct the false reports with which the "secular" press is teeming—and, more especially, to watch over the interests of the European Emigration, which Brigham Young has ordered to come by way of Boston, Philadelphia, and New York, instead of New Orleans, as heretofore. The paper has a flaming pictorial vignette, with this inscription, "Mormon Creed—Mind your own business"—to which portion of their belief we subscribe a hearty Amen. It is edited with decided ability by John Taylor, "one of the Twelve," who has edited a Mormon journal in Nauvoo, in Paris, France, and in Hamburg, Germany.

The paper is filled with matter of interest to outsiders as well as "Saints;" from Utah, California, Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, and elsewhere, at all of which points the Mormon elders are laboring "without scrip or purse," and sending thousands, annually, to their fertile valleys in Deseret. The editor takes Polygamy by the horns, admits it as a part of his faith, and defends it with much ingenuity, quoting the Bible for authority, and David, Solomon, and others, for example. He asks the question, "Did people ever think that there might be something socially, morally, religiously, and politically wrong, which leads to the amount of corruption that now exists?"

* * * * * * *

"The paper has a long letter from the lynx-eyed Mormon delegate in Congress, Dr. Bernhisel, complaining, very justly, of the refusal of Congress to grant public lands to actual settlers, and of the disposition of Gov. Young, whom he declares to be loyal to the Government, quoting in proof of this fact Capt. Stansbury, Gen. John Wilson, and other high and disinterested authorities. As polygamy is a "local institution," we do not see how Southerners and Union-savers can consistently interfere with it. For the rest, if Bro. John Taylor values the testimony of a "Gentile," he can have ours, that Brigham Young is a perfect gentleman, kind and courteous to emigrants, even when dressed, as we were, in fustian, and calling upon him, as we did, an entire stranger, without introduction from Mormon or Gentile. During a three weeks' sojourn at the city of the Great Salt Lake, we saw more order, industry, and decorum than we ever observed elsewhere in the world, and the writer of this has seen a little of the spheriod. We venture the assertion, and challenge contradiction, that a more peaceful, orderly, industrious and law-abiding community than the dwellers in Deseret cannot be found, and we wish it distinctly understood that we know not a soul among them, and have not a particle of sympathy with their religion or polygamic institution."

After the above, he gravely inquires, "why are there no public meetings convened in the Tabernacle to denounce Mormonism?" We are ready to meet Mr. Fuller, in the Tabernacle on this question at any time. We court investigation and have nothing to hide. Has the Mirror committed itself?

The Mormons and the Cyprians.

OUR authorities have, very properly, been arresting lewd women in the streets.

If any one so lost to decency dared to advocate the right of such lewdness to hold its orgies in public, and even attempted to go so far as to open a receptacle for prostitutes, the law would catch such a scoundrel by the collar and send him where he would cease "to do evil and learn to do well."

Why then do we countenance a greater evil, and a more abominable wickedness? Here in our midst are Mormon Missionaries every Sunday seeking to corrupt and destroy. Openly they proclaim the sanctity of the promiscuous intercourse of the sexes. Their chief prophet practices it—nay, makes it a boast of his goodness; and we a Christian people hating and abhoring it—nay, turning up our eyes at the frailty of the "weaker sex"—having them taken up for merely walking the streets—we look on, and say nothing against that wholesale debauchment, public scandal, and national disgrace.

THE above we extract from the New-York Ledger, and if it is a fair specimen of their book-keeping, we confess we should not like to have our accounts kept in their Ledger, without at least, having them well checked. We say that the assertion that the Mormons, "openly proclaim the promiscuous intercourse of the sexes," is a palpable falsehood, and we cannot but express our surprise, that gentlemen standing at the head of a journal and professing to act as public censors, should lend themselves to such meanness. The plea of ignorance can afford no protection for such conduct, when men will fabricate falsehoods, and then publish them to the world, we can find no softer terms for them than villifiers, traducers, and slanderers; we are sorry that men should thus degrade themselves and that we are under the necessity of exposing them; but when the citizens of a whole Territory are branded with infamy, by the perversions of the power which the press affords, it is necessary that some one should draw the mask from their foul calumniators. We know well enough what your Cyprians are, and who are their panderers. Why don't you acknowledge your shame like men, and not seek by slandering the Mormons, to cover your own infamy? Keep your own gardens weeded, follow the Mormon Creed—"Mind your own business," you have enough on hand. Why, sir, the Mormons would feel themselves defiled with the beastly touch of the pollution that is daily practised in your midst. And notwithstanding your hypocritical cant about no one daring "to go so far as to open a receptacle for prostitutes," you very well know that there are hundreds of such receptacles in your midst, with their posses of pimps, stool pigeons, procuresses, and all the paraphenalia of your corrupting damning vice. And yet from this reeking debauch, you will wipe your mouth with your coat sleeve, "turn up your" holy "eyes" and talk about the "scandal and national disgrace" of the Mormons.

Who would think that the following was penned by the same man, and was on the same page, on his Ledger? His pious eyes have got regulated now, and he sees things as they are.

The Right and the Wrong!

Some sixty cyprians were arrested in the streets on Monday night, and over half that number were overhauled last night—mostly in the Sixth ward. We agree with the "Sun," that some male street-walkers will bear looking after. There have been numerous complaints by respectable girls against "genteel" loafers, for following and insulting them while crossing the Park.

Yes, and all the good they do will not be worth a farthing. There are numbers of blackguards in this city who live well and dress well, partly from the wages of the unfortunate women of the town, partly by gambling, and, in some instances, by downright, unmistakable theft and robbery. These fellows are just as well known as the sign-boards on our various prominent buildings—the policemen understand them thoroughly—know, perfectly well, that they are villains, and that they daily violate the laws—and yet they go, like the wind, "where they list." It is to these fellows that we are indebted for the frightful displays of vice made upon our sidewalks after nightfall, and kept up until the small hours of the morning. They are the directors and controllers of the poor misguided females who are, very properly, interdicted from pursuing their awful calling on the highways. It is right to arrest them, but it is equally wrong to permit the scoundrels whom they support to go at large. We are for "equal and exact justice" in all things. While these male panders are permitted to go unpunished and unrestrained, abandoned women will attempt to perambulate the streets in all the shamelessness of their deplorable wickedness. They dare not do otherwise!

Is the above a specimen of the christianity which the gentleman refers to when he very piously exclaims "and we a christian people hating and abhorring it?" Gentlemen Christians, if you "as a christian people," would lay aside your hypocricy, and adhere a little closer to the truth, the Mormons would have a little better opinion of your christianity than it is possible for them to possess, under existing circumstances.

The New York News.

WE beg leave to correct an error that by some mischance we overlooked in our last week's issue. In making some remarks intended for the Times, we are made to say the News. We can assure our cotemporary it was a mistake, we have no desire to misrepresent and think it no disgrace when mistakes occur to correct them.

We approve of the following sentiments from the News on this subject, we like to see honor, truth, and fair play, and Mormon as we are, we feel always ready to credit it to others.

THE MORMONS.—We find in the New York Mormon the following:

"The News of last Saturday seems to be very much troubled about the rising magnitude of the corrupt Mormons, and looks about in hopeless despair for a palliative."

We beg leave to contradict. The News is not at all "troubled" about the Mormons. It never participated in any of the religious warfare of its cotemporaries, and does not propose to do so. The Mormons have been in past times a shamefully persecuted and much abused people, and we have always raised our voice in condemnation of the outrages they have suffered at the hands of Christians. These persecutions, however, have caused them to increase as similar ones have invariably added to the numbers of believers from the beginning of the world. We have no disposition to join in a hue and cry against any religion. The "pallistive," if any be needed, will come in good time under the influence of our institutions. Meanwhile, let them live and flourish, and remain citizens of our Union, and worship God in whatever manner their conscience dictates. We beg The Mormon to understand that The News is neither persecutor nor alarmist. There is room for all of us here—Christian, Jew, and Mormon; Trinitarian and Unitarian; Churchman and Dissenter; Catholic and Protestant; Universalist and Partialist; Second Adventist and Spiritualist. Room for all.

Mormon Books.

We have at last received our Books from Philadelphia, and are prepared to supply orders.

Better Late Than Never.

IN our last week's issue among others, we passed some animadversions upon the New York Tribune, for not publishing a piece which they had promised Mr. Carvalho they would do; contradicting the Times and Herald's statement in relation to the murder of Capt. Gunnison and party; after a delay of more than a week, however, we have, and in justice to the Tribune, withdrawn our statement. Although it was not published until Saturday June 2d, which was after our paper was out.

We like justice and straightforward dealings; all we ask of any one is the truth, and to be dealt with as we deal by others.

The following is the article referred to:

The Massacre of Gunnison.

To the Editor of the N. Y. Tribune:

SIR: I have read in one of the journals with regret a statement written from Salt Lake City, charging the Mormons with being accessory to the massacre of the lamented Capt, Gunnison and officers. Let me ask you therefore to publish the following extracts from my journal of a voyage from Great Salt Lake City to California in May and June last year. They will serve to explain more clearly the cause of this sad event:

UTAH TERRITORY, SEVIER RIVER CAMP,
Tuesday, May 9, 1854.

Our party camped about a mile from the Parvain Indian Village, and this afternoon, accompanied by two interpreters and several other gentlemen, we proceeded to their camp to see their celebrated Chieftain, Kanoshe,-whose portrait I was anxious to obtain. I found him well armed with a rifle and pistols and mounted on a noble horse. He has a roman nose, with a fine, intelligent cast of countenance, and his thick black hair brushed off his forehead contrary to the usual custom of his tribe. He immediately consented to my request that he would sit for his portrait; and on the spot, after an hour's labor, I produced a strong likeness of him, which he was very curious to see. I opened my portfolio and displayed the portraits of a number of Chiefs, among which he selected Wa-ka-ra, the celebrated terror of travelers, Anglicised Walker (since dead). He took hold of it and wanted to retain it. It was, he said, "wieno"—a contraction of the Spanish "bueno"—very good. I also learned from him through the interpreters the following facts relating to the Gunnison massacre. Kanoshe says: There were thirty Parvain Indians encamped about six miles North-West of Gunnison's camp. One of these Indians, a son of an old chief who was slain by a party of emigrants under the command of a Mr. Hildreth a few days before, was out shooting rabbits. He heard a firing. He followed the sound and found it proceeded from two men who were shooting ducks near the lake. Cautiously dogging them to their camp and surveying the whole party which consisted of eight persons, he went to his own camp, filled with revengeful feelings and determined to kill the "Mericats" (Americans) who had killed his father. He then made a fictitious scalp of horse-hair, tied it to a long pole and elevating it, uttered inflammatory speeches to his tribe, who all commenced the war-dance and danced until near daylight, when they all armed themselves and silently surrounded Gunnison's camp when these were eating their breakfast, and took deadly aim and raised their warwhoop. Captain Gunnison was not killed by the first discharge; but raised his hands while some of the dragoons endeavored to reach their horses. They were all finally killed with the exception of one dragoon, who made his escape and gave the alarm to the main body of the expedition distant about 30 miles. One of the men killed was named Potter; he was a Mormon and acted as guide. Kanoshe was encamped about 30 miles away. One of the Indians came into his camp with a dragoon's horse and told Kanoshe of the murder. Kanoshe immediately drove the horse into Fillmore and gave him up. He then proceeded to the Indian camp and tried to obtain the papers and instruments belonging to the officers. They refused to give them up, and the leader of the massacre endeavored to incite the tribe against their Chief for interfering, but his indomitable courage saved him and he succeeded in recovering nearly all the effects and took them into Fillmore and delliverld them up to the proper authorities.

JUNE 9.—CATHOLIC MISSION—LOS ANGELES.—To-day I met Mr. Hildreth, one of the brothers who commanded a large emigrant party, and whose unprovoked and fatal attack upon the Parvain Indians, near Fillmore, caused that tribe to murder Capt. Gunnison and officers, a description of which I have already noted. Mr. Hildreth says his brother (the commander) and himself had left camp to hunt, and when they returned they were informed of the unfortunate and premature attack of some of his people on the Indians. It seems that a small number of Parvain Indians came into camp armed with bows and arrows, begging food and clothing, at sundown. They were ordered out of camp; they refused. They were told if they gave up their bows and arrows they might remain, and one of the men used force to obtain the bow from an Indian. In the scuffle the American was wounded, whereupon, without any further provocation, a number of rifles were discharged at the Indians, killing several, among whom was an old Chief. Capt. Hildreth at once raised camp and proceeded on his journey for fear of the consequences. This fatal event would not have occurred if Capt. Hildreth had been in camp, and he lamented the occurrence.

At Salt Lake City I messed with Capt. Morris and Lieut. Beckwith, in command of the remainder of Capt. Gunnison's expedition; and after reading a letter in a Missouri paper charging the Mormons with having been accessory to this sad affair, they both pronounced the letter a base slander and libel upon that people. I think I am correct in saying that they did not entertain a suspicion of such a thing.

I am opposed to Mormonism as well as to their spiritual wife system; but this much I will say, that during a residence of three months among them I found them honorable, hospitable, and friendly. I attended their places of worship, and certainly they preached sound morality. I therefore think it only my duty to offer these facts to the public.

I am respectfully, &c.,
May 24, 1855. S. N. CARVALHO, Artist.

A SAN FRANCISCO paper says the Mormons have secured a good foothold in the Sandwich Islands. One of the chiefs possessing a large amount of property has presented the Missionaries with the free use of a large portion of the island of Laina, for a term of years for a gathering place, or for a spot to drive one of the "Stakes of Zion," as they term it. This Island, though over one hundred miles from Honolulu, is but ten from the important port of Lahina, where a large number of whalers touch to obtain their supplies. This will afford them a good market for the articles they raise, and an eye to the main chance is something the "Saints" never neglect having.

The above remark is certainly true; some people have so much religion, that they become almost spiritual essences, at least in their own imagination. We believe in matter-of-fact principles, we think we have a body as well as a spirit, and that it is necessary to attend to its wants; our faith in God leads us to attend to both spiritual and temporal things; but notwithstanding our sensuality and their spirituality, these spiritual christians who care so little about earthly things, dare not "go to all the world and preach the gospel without purse or scrip." They may have great faith in God about spiritual things, but they dare not trust in Him to provide for the body; the flesh must be provided for in a carnal way. The Mormons have faith in God to provide for their wants, when engaged in His work, and dare all the combined christian ministry to imitate them in this thing; but they are not vizionaries about temporal things; they think it necessary to plow, to sow, to reap, to build, to be diligent in the affairs of life, and "to provide things honest in the sight of all men."

THE KANSAS ELECTION—PRO-SLAVERY TICKET ELECTED IN EVERY DISTRICT.—St. Louis, May 24.—A dispatch from Kansas says: The Leavenworth District pro-slavery ticket is elected by sixty-one majority, and pro-slavery men are elected in every district.

WE have received a letter from George C. Riser, late missionary in Germany, since his return to this country he has been laboring among some of his friends in the East, and also in Cincinnati; his letter is dated St. Louis, May 24, he was about starting for Atchison, thence for the valley. We wish him a pleasant journey to his mountain home and all the endearments and blessings associated with a family who fear God.

WE have received an interesting communication from Elder Elisha Edwards, who was one of our compagnons du voyage from the Valley, last fall. His letter is dated Hiram Portage Co., Ohio, May 26, at which place he has been laboring in company with Bro. Whiting. He states that although there is much hardness of heart and unbelief, yet, the Lord is working powerfully with many in that land. We extract the following:

"BRO. TAYLOR—Your valuable paper—THE MORMON—is working in the hearts of the people. It is like a light that is set on a hill, it shines forth in the dark corners of the hearts of many, and eventually will light the whole body. I am doing all I can to circulate it among the people; if it were not for priestcraft there are hundreds that would take it. There are a great many that dare not read a Mormon paper for fear of their neighbors. I know the work that I am engaged in is the work of the Living God, and I often bear my testimony to it. I bore testimony to a congregation in Portage county that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of the Lord, and many of the people trembled and shook as though they had the ague. It does my soul good to bear this testimony, and that Brigham Young is his legal successor. The most of our preaching at the present time is in visiting and preaching to them in their own houses; in this way I find that we remove much prejudice. * * * * I feel well when I am defending the Gospel of the Son of God, and I know that the work that I am engaged in is the work of God, and it will roll on until it fills the whole earth. Give my love to all the Saints who may inquire after me. Bro. Whiting wishes to be remembered to you.

I am, as ever, your brother in the Gospel,
ELISHA EDWARDS."

Removal of the Omaha Indians.

FROM the following, which we take from the Council Bluffs Bugle of May 22d, it will be seen that the Omaha Indians are removed. We are glad of it, for they were a rascally, thievish set, and as low and debased as any Indians we ever met with. Their removal will be a relief, not only to the Nebraskaites, but also to travelers, who they were always sure to lay under contribution, if they were strong enough. The Otoes, another small tribe, ought also to be provided for:

Removal of the Omaha Indians.

On Wednesday last, the remnant of that once powerful tribe of red men, the Omahas, bid adieu to their old homes, familiar haunts and the sacred graves of their kindred, who have gone to the invisible hunting ground, to go to their new home to the northward. The scene of parting from their village is described by one who witnessed it, as extremely pathetic and interesting. Major Hepner, with Logan Fontanelle, accompanied the tribe, who are to receive a cash payment of some $20,000 upon their arrival at Blackbird Hills, the place they have selected for their future home.

It is a matter of surprise to us why this tribe has not been removed to a more distant point, where the habitations of the pale faces would not in a few years surround them, requiring a new removal.

Howmuchsoever sympathy we have with the Indians, we are convinced that they cannot mingle with the whites without hastening their abusement and final extinction.

Western News.

MR. T. S. Williams, of the firm of Hooper & Williams of Salt Lake City, arrived here last week, since which he has been seriously indisposed, and confined for several days to his room, but is now again able to be about. Mr. Williams has had a most severe journey in crossing the plains, having to travel nights, and but a limited opportunity for rest during the day, and the great distance necessary to travel to reach this city has been almost too much, even for his strong constitution and indomitable perseverance; but we are happy to say he is again up and doing. We are indebted to him for our last news from the Valley, and assured of the good health and prosperity enjoyed by the people. The Indians in the territory are quiet and well-disposed. The crops bid fair to be abundant, and all things moving on as well as could be desired. Mr. Williams has come on, in connection with Capt. Hooper, who was here a few days since, to purchase goods for that market, and we understand they have made a very large and fine selection of goods from this and other eastern cities, and we wish them every success which their highly honorable course, and indefatigable energy since they commenced business in Salt Lake entitle them to.

We were very much gratified to learn from so reliable a source, of the business, activity, and improvements going on through the territory, and he gave us some rich treats in relation to the doings of the "militaire," as well as some of the civil, the most piquant of which, however, consisted of a combination of both civil and military, which, as a friend of ours remarked, looked rather "squaw-ly." And by the way, we earnestly recommend some of the "special correspondents," "embryo lawyers," supplied by the U. S. with paper, etc. not to be over anxious to implicate Mormon juries, &c., for the tables may suddenly turn upon them, and on their return to the States, they bear the evidence upon them, which will confound them, and throw their falsehoods into their own teeth. A word to the wise, &c.

We shall insert in our next a communication from Mr. W.

Atlantic Submarine Telegraph.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made for laying a Submarine Telegraph between St. John's in Newfoundland and Cork, on the southern coast of Ireland, thus connecting the Old and New Worlds. The names of the Companies, there are two engaged in the operation; are the "New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraphic Company," and the "Trans-Atlantic Telegraphic Company." They anticipate completing it on the 22d. of January, 1858. When finished, they purpose to charge $25 for every ten words. The distance between Newfoundland and Ireland, is said to be 1,600 miles, and the cable will consist of six wires, and is to be two inches in diameter, and will be capable of transmitting seventy-two thousand words in twenty-four hours.

Correspondence

NEW YORK, June 6, 1855.

MR. EDITOR: Having not long since embraced the faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. Saints, commonly called Mormons; I have been greatly astonished at the many absurdities uttered against that faith by editors, whom I cannot but presume know better themselves, whatever may be the amount of correct information had by their readers. The general tenor of their remarks in relation to the believers in this faith has been, that they were all dupes or designing characters. Now for myself I protest against such unsustained assertions; if this doctrine is so palpable a delusion, to those who do not profess to be able to answer, when interrogated as to what the doctrines of the Mormons are; why are not these self-evident errors placed before the people, and leave them to judge, and not descend to ridicule and scurrulous language," and even falsehood upon falsehood heaped unsparingly upon a class of people, who, to say the least, risk everything usually held valuable in the world for their religion. But to return to my own case. I conscientiously sought after the truth before embracing this faith, and truly not without the strongest opposition from friends I held most dear around me, and with anything but a brilliant prospect before me of that which is most highly prized by the world in general, wealth and "respectable" standing in society; in the midst of such an array, I sought diligently for the truth, which I would gladly have found to proceed from others than the despised Mormons, but I looked in vain for principles from other sources that even had the shadow of the pure order and system of the Gospel embraced in the views of Mormonism, so called, I say, order and system of the Gospel, because I heard from other teachers of a "plan" of salvation, a way of life and salvation, but other teachers failed to point out a plan, or express a tangible order of progression for man worthy of so great a sacrifice as the Son of God, to establish upon the earth for man to know so little about, but on the other hand I found a system commencing in its simplicity that a fool and a wayfaring man may read, &c. Yet not even the learned doctors could confute it. It was not that this learned theologian, nor that deep-read scriptorian said so, but that repentance, and a godlike sorrow for sin was the first requirement of that Gospel, of which none could pretend to deny, nor that baptism for the remission of those sins was equally demonstrable in the Scriptures, and that that baptism was by water, and immersion, too, as following the pattern laid by our Saviour, and those who taught by authority, and followed Him in their example to us. Here was a ground of contention for some, but not for me, for clearly beyond, was the administration of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, then the order that God set in the church of Apostles, prophets and gifts, tongues, laying on hands and anointing of oil for healing the sick; all of which may be termed visionary by some, yet there they stand in bold relief in the Word of God, and if not true, let it be proved by those who are able and willing to prove God a liar, and besides these initiatory principles, followed in its order the fulfilling of prophesy; the gathering of Israel in the last days; the building of Zion; the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth; the second coming of Christ; the resurrection of the dead; their inheritance upon the earth; the Millennium, and reign of Christ a thousand years on the earth: each and all agreeing perfectly with the words of the holy prophets, and the Saviour of mankind when He should come and drink wine new with them in his kingdom, &c.—I say all this agrees perfectly with the Scriptures of Divine Truth, and if not, why do not the learned opposers come out and make manifest the folly of these deluders? Mormonism is not so attractive, so fascinating in its appearance before the world as to allure the unwary, for none can enter it without being made fully aware of the step he is about to take, and as fully ready to take up with something more propitious to his worldly prospects. If there is not something sound in this doctrine, how is it that with all the engines of the brightest age of science with the concentrated ingenuity of ages to hasten the crisis you have not been more successful in the overthrow of so dark a delusion. Where are your Missionaries to Utah (not your troops) as well as to Africa, China or Hindostan! or where are your stalwart men, ready to do battle here in New York! I am still an inquirer; I am an American; there are thousands of other Americans in the same darkness with myself; why will not the philanthropist have as much compassion upon us poor native-born Americans, as upon the foreign heathen!

They tell us, that they are polygamists. It is a bold stand and honestly spoken; and true, it is very vulgar to mention it in the polite circles of our refined cities, though the "faux pas" of our dearest and most polished friends, may be whispered through our saloons, if only frosted sufficiently with the gossip sweets of the "Upper Ten."

But here is a principle, said to be repulsive to all except the most debased, yet in the same breath is expressed the fear, that it will extend itself over this broad union. But why if so repulsive so unholy, so abominable, is it not fairly repudiated, not only in the present age, but in ages past when God spake to man, and was heard and obeyed! Can your ridicule wipe out this? can your falsehoods, and coarse ribaldry eradicate it from the land, when your learned divines fail to meet the subject with sound argument! Again I say, where are your philanthropists! for there are many, very many of your fellow citizens here, and in Utah, that delight in the truth, that have waded through mobocracy, fire and sword, to obtain it; and gladly will they throw away error when shown them, and grasp eagerly at the truth when presented them; send them true doctrine, send them more light from heaven, and you'll need no troops in Utah, to drive them, for they'll follow light, if it is to the ends of the earth, and I shall wait to see sound arguments in the place of shallow bombast, ridicule and falsehoods, if our opponents have it to spare for

Correspondence of S. A. Wooley,

Late Missionary at Bengal, Hindostan, and Sciend Provinces in the East Indies.

CONTINUED.

Centerville, Del., May 29, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Dear Sir: Owing to business, I was unable to continue our narrative, relative to the natives of Hindostan in your last number; but will try and furnish you one this week to use whenever you wish. The natives of Bengal and Hindostan provinces have a strange idea of marriage, or rather of the age at which they should form that endearing tie or relationship. In many instances marriage is celebrated at the time the parties are about one year of age, and then at the age of six to eight, and again at the age of from eleven to fifteen; at which time they commence to live together as husband and wife. The man is not permitted to see his wife until after the solemnization, that is, among the higher class. If the man, or rather the boy, should die, the girl is not permitted, according to their religion, to marry again. I was acquainted with one circumstance of this kind, where the man, or boy, was gone, and she left at her father's, and not allowed to marry again. She was called a widow. The man had been gone (if my memory serves me correctly) two years, when, I was told she was a widow, and she was then near eleven years of age and quite small, a mere child. She being the daughter of my dhobie (washwoman) at Chinsurah, I became acquainted with the circumstance. While I was in India some of the learned babboos wrote some pieces, and had them published, protesting against keeping a woman widowed all her life time, and advocated the principle of re-marriage, &c. Their style of living is cheap, which must necessarily be so, as a man will work for from two to four annas per day (two annas is about 5 3-4 cts.), and many of them will support a family of a wife and half a dozen children with that amount.

A single man will live on from two to four pice per day (one pice is 5-8 ct.), their living being mostly bhart (boiled rice) and vegetable, or fish curry, in the lower provinces, and in the upper, chepetties and doll. When they are traveling they eat churah—that is rice boiled, mashed flat, and dried. I have eaten it when I could get no better, it is a little like "fried froth." They are a low, degraded people, and are not capable of forming any idea of a man's character only by the amount of pomposities and airs he puts on, and the amount of rupees he possesses. As to any friendship or affection they may have for any one, it will be obtained by pice and rupees. For any one to talk to them about principles of truth, and righteousness, aside from rupees, it would be like the lowing of cows, or the bleating of sheep, to a rational man, filled with the spirit of God. They are not capacitated to understand and discern the things of God! they are too narrow contracted to even understand and realize the glories of the Kingdom of God, while in this frail existence! They will do the meanest act for the least possible sum, of any people I ever saw; yet there is one way for them to come to understanding, but that is not in the power of man to give, but God only, and that would be for Him to make bare his arm in a miraculous manner, and give them a double portion of his holy spirit, &c; but it is not likely He will, until they are willing to receive it. If they can deceive any one, and thereby get a few rupees, they think they are smart men. Cheating, lying and bribery, has become such a universal custom, that the whites cannot do an honest business, or get their own just dues without bribery; that is, they must give them presents to get their own money. As, for instance, the principal tools to work with are picks and badalies; so the Government have to get them made by thousands, they have one white man to one native to inspect them, and see if they are all good, so if they will pass them, they are received; if not, they are rejected. A man may take the best article in the country, and if he don't keep giving those men (the white one about ten rupees and the native about three) money every two or three weeks, they will condemn them by the thousands, and after they have sent them back, all you have to do is to send them the right number of rupees, and then send the same articles back, and they are received and paid for. This I know by experience, as I took the oversight of Bro. Maik's business in Calcutta for about two months while he was at Cattask. It is the same way in law, so I am credibly informed, and all others matters are carried on upon the same principle.

As to the matter of Christianity, it is about the same, the only valuation they put on anything is what it is worth in rupees, that is, by the natives. It is true there are lots of Missionaries among them from this country, and Europe or the British Isles; and thousands upon thousands are expended annually to support those Missionaries, and to convert the heathens to be Christians—as they call it—and to educate their children, &c. But when they are converted, what are they? what are they converted to? is it to Christianity? is it to honesty? is it to an actual belief in Christ and the New Testament; is it to do unto others as they wish others to do to them? to love God and keep his commandments? to deal justly, to love mercy and walk humbly before their God? No! What then? to do as they have done heretofore? No! not exactly; for before, they were measurably honest and sincere in their religion, and now they are sincere in nothing. Why then do they embrace the religion of the so called Christian world? is it to gain an inheritance in the world to come in everlasting bliss? this cannot be, when they are not sincere—(there are a few exceptions to all general rules)—is it then for the gain of this world, for filthy lucre? can this be possible that anybody would be a Christian in name for a few paltry rupees? yes! as strange as it may appear it is the case, for the Padre Sahab (Missionary) that will give them the most rupees will get them to be Christians for them.

All the missionaries who are sent out by the different denominations (the L. D. S. excepted) go with plenty of means, and then have men at home still sending as fast as it is required, What to do? they say to "convert the dark benighted heathens" do they do it? yes! and how? by money! And for how long? Until some one else offers them a greater sum which is seldom done, as they work to each others hand; the usual price is from five to ten rupees per month, just owing to the cast, as the higher the cast the more they must have to leave it, and be a Christian. I have talked with them for hours at a time, and told them over and over again that if they were Mormon Christian (as that is the way they designate, by calling them Baptist Christian, Mormon Christian, &c., and some time "I am a christian for Padre Sahab" so, and so, calling him by name) they must be so for the love of truth, and not for money, and still they would come time after time and try to get some price to be christian, and some have said "how can we be christians for you if you will not pay us anything" and others would come, hearing we were just from America (as the American Missionaries are generally the most flush with money for that purpose) and say we are getting eight rupees a month of Padre Sahab, so, and so, for being a christian, now if you will give me nine I be a christian for you, and so on just one rupee in advance of their present pay let that be five, eight or ten rupees. I mention the eight it being the sum, one was drawing, who came to Bro. Jones, shortly after our arrival, but it was not the only case of the kind. I do not say that every one is so, for we found four out of about 160 which Bro. Willis Baptised before our arrival: as soon as we told them we would not give them any money to be Mormon Christians they all left, but four. They had left before our arrival as Bro. Willis did not give them anything; but came back as soon as they heard that the Mormon Padres had come from America; but their hopes were soon blasted and they went off sorrowing, so I would say there were four honest to every 150 or 160. The rest will be christians in name as long as they get their pay and no longer. The Missionaries of course have done some good in one sense, but in another they have done evil or harm. If they had expended the same money in this country it would have done much more good, that is if they had put it to the educating of children. It is true they have established schools to educate the young heathens and also, pay them from one to three rupees per month to attend besides a free education. But how many are there in our own boasted land of liberty who have no education, neither means to educate their children, yet they will set and hear some learned D. D. portray the deplorable condition of the far off heathen, and how, O! how much, they are to be pitied and that it is the duty of the Americans to send out means to ameliorate their condition, &c. The poor men, and widows will even stint themselves to send a dollar, to alleviate the suffering of the poor heathen, and will console themselves by saying O, well I am not half so bad off as they are, as I know Christ, and they do not. They perhaps, go hungry all the time, and I only a part, &c., &c. In this way they raise the desired amount, what for, to make the heathen better? No! it is to support a set of men, in what? I was going to say in idleness, but not entirely so, but to live at their ease, not only the missionaries, but the natives too. Do they go to school to become christians? No! but to get a little learning and a few rupees as a general thing. Those who are converted by rupees will worship the river, trees, bulls, &c., every chance they get when there is no christian to see them. So you see the man who has got the most money would be the most successful in converting heathens in those parts.

I can conceive of but one plan ever to make any thing of them and that would be to take their children while infants and keep them entirely away from their own people, educate them, then take their children again in the same way, and perhaps their childrens, children, might be of some account, but not if they are allowed to mingle with the old stock. so it would require near a hundred year's, at least. When they become Christians they do not make good servants, as they think themselves just as good as any one, and as the amount they receive for turning christian will support them without service. I was told the missionaries never pretended to use any of them but always hire the unconverted heathens, as house servants.

I might go on and particularize many more things in relation to the missionaries way in those far off clime; but shall not at this time, as what I have already written shows somewhat of the state of things in those parts. But would just say they are, if possible, two fold more the child of the devil then before.

I would advise poor men, and widows, not to send their money to feed those natives in idleness, while their own children have need of it. There is some suffering there; so there is in all countries. I have seen some lamentable cases there as well as else where, but the missionaries do not spend money where the greatest suffering is, as a general thing they do not like to take up their abode where they would be likely to partake of those sufferings. I will write you a short communication on the Burmese and a description of some of the stations I have been in and curiosities therein, when time will permit.

I am, as ever,

Your brother in the Gospel Covenant,

S. A. Woolley.

Philadelphia Correspondence.

Philadelphia, May 30, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Dear Brother Taylor: Knowing the interest you have in the spread of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, I sit down to write a few lines, to let you know how things are in this part of the Lord's vineyard; although I am no writer, and have often wished that I could use my pen as freely as my tongue; yet I am free to confess I can use neither as well as many others.

You are already aware that I have been preaching for the last two or three months, once a week, at a small town called Tacony, about ten miles above the city. It was said at first, by some of the people living there, that if I came there to preach Mormonism I would be mobbed out of the place. But I had heard such things said before, and seen it done, too. But their threat did not intimidate me; so I have kept up the meetings regularly once a week, with the exception of a few Sundays when the school-house was occupied by other denominations to preach; as I did not wish to interfere with these previous arrangements.

The results of my labors has been that I have, a few evenings ago, baptized five members into the Church, who are now rejoicing in the fulness of the everlasting gospel; besides some others who are almost ready to follow their example.

I stay at the house of a very kind gentleman at Tacony, who formerly lived in Philadelphia, who is a partial believer in Mormonism; he has some relatives living at a place called Buckingham, about 27 miles from Philadelphia; they expressed a desire to hear me preach; promising, if I would, there would be a large turnout to hear. So I made an appointment for the last Sunday in May, which I have just fulfilled, and a glorious time we had. I preached in the morning on the Principles of Faith, repentance and baptism in water for the remission of sins, and the laying of hands, and prayer for the reception of the Holy Ghost; showing them from the Scriptures that this is the door to enter into the kingdom of God. In the afternoon we held our meeting in the woods; there was about 250 or 300 people present. I preached on the nature and object of the signs promised to follow faith and obedience to the Gospel, and bore my testimony to the truth of these things, being enjoyed in the Church in these days, as literally as they were in the days of the apostles. I can truly say I never was listened to with better attention for over half an hour in all my life.

In the evening I preached again, in the school-house, which was very full. I read the twelfth chapter of first Corinthians, and spake as the Spirit directed me; showing them the necessity of believing and contending for all the gifts of the Spirit, spoken of in this chapter; it was a new doctrine to them; but they could not deny its being the Gospel, as taught by the apostles.

The people here seem to be intelligent, and free in their feelings, and are not as a general thing bound down by priestcraft, as many are in other places. I feel satisfied there are many honest souls here, that will in a short time embrace the Gospel; they say they are tired of hearing sectarianism, and want something better.

There was twice as many, I am informed, came out to hear me preach, than any other man that has preached here. They wished me to come again in two weeks; so I made an appointment to that effect.

Where I have lately traveled, I hear of many places about the county that never heard the Gospel that wish to hear preaching, although there is much prejudice in the minds of the people concerning us; yet the honest in heart, when they hear our doctrines, alter their opinions concerning us, and when I hear of the many places that want to hear preaching, and know there are but few elders in the field of labor, it reminds me of the saying of our Saviour, that "the harvest is truly great, but the laborers are few."

Brother Taylor, when I think of these things, and realize the necessity of the Gospel being preached to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, I think if I only had my family in Zion, that I might devote my labors to the ministry altogether: how happy I would be! but while I am here or elsewhere, I am willing to go wherever the servants of God may send me.

Yours truly in the kingdom of God,

Saml. Harrison.

The following, from Bro. Milo Andrus, extracted from the St. Louis Luminary of June 2d, will be read with interest:

Mormon Grove, K. T.,
May 22d, 1855.

To the Editor of the Luminary:

Feeling as though any information concerning the progress and health of the camp of Israel would be gladly received by the Saints in general, I feel to employ a few minutes this evening in communicating to you some things in relation to our present prospects.

I arrived at this place on the 12th inst., in charge of five hundred and fifty head of oxen and cows, for the benefit of our spring emigration. On arriving we found the brethren at the Grove enjoying perfect health, and much of the spirit of the Lord. They had put up a small log cabin, and covered it, for the purpose of storing provisions; so we have already at this place, a store-house of the Lord's people. Garden vegetables looking green and fresh, connected with this small house, begins to make the country at the Grove look like a fruitful field.

The next day after our arrival, I started the hands to ditching in the farm, and at the present time there is nearly one mile of the ditch and sod fence completed. We expect in the course of ten days to have the fence completed. We started the plow at the same time, and have planted about five acres of corn, potatoes, and garden vegetables. The beautiful situation at and around the Grove makes many, that have not been used to a prairie country, say that they would be willing to remain at this beautiful place; but those who feel and know the spirit of truth have no attachment to the land whilst under the rule of Gentile influence; but they pant for the water and bread of life in the far western valleys, near the great backbone of the American continent.

At 5 o'clock this evening, I harnessed my horses, and took some of the Saints for the purpose of taking a more extensive view of the country, and all were much delighted while we were driving over the rolling hills of old Father Lehi's farms; and after a ride of about six miles, we came around to Denmark, or rather, to the camp of the Danish Saints, who have just arrived to-day, under the charge of P. O. Hanson, and whilst in their camp we learned by brother Hanson, that they were highly delighted with the country, and that they had just dismissed a public meeting which they had been holding that afternoon. Brother Hanson informed us that they had more of the spirit of the Lord in their meeting, than they had had at any other time since they have been in the upper country. They have suffered much with sickness at Leavenworth, and feel glad to think that there is a prospect of starting soon, on their journey over the plains. We anticipate, if no preventing providence should say otherwise, to start a company in about six days. They as a gener l thing feel desirous to serve God, by obeying those who are placed over them in the Lord, and all things seem to be working for the way to be speedily opened for the starting of the Saints.

I would say to my Councilers in St. Louis —Br. Edwards and Gardiner—also, the High Council, be fathers to the flock which the Holy Ghost has entrusted to your care, and the God of peace will give you the spirit of judgment and of might. To the Saints in general, I would say, be faithful, and you shall have the privilege, ere long, of tasting in real life, the benefits of the encampment of the Latter Day Saints.

I have preached since my arrival here, three times, and find that the Lord pours out abundantly, his holy spirit, and all that love him rejoice while under its influence. We also have had a small encampment of some six wagons and families of Strang's disciples crawl under our banner and ask for the right hand of fellowship, which I proffered to give them when they would come through the waters of baptism to get it, which I think from the spirit already manifest, they will readily do when I designate the time. There are others in our camp who wished to be baptised—we shall attend to all such cases in a day or two.

I shall now close by praying my Father in heaven to bless and preserve His people. May grace be multipied unto them that know the Lord. Amen.

Milo Andrus.

The Latest News from the Crimea.

By the arrival of the Africa at Halifax, which took place on the 26th ult., we learn the following from Europe:

On May the 16th, Count Buol, had an interview with the French and English ministers, during which, he on behalf of Austria suggested another meeting of the Conference in relation to further negotiations, should they agree to meet again, Count Buol it is stated, will again attempt an arrangement of the third point.

The Austrian proposals are that Russia and Turkey shall agree between themselves how many ships they will keep in the Black Sea, and that France and England are each to keep two ships there—Turkey undertaking to enter into no treaty with Russia without first submitting it to England and France.

The Vienna papers say that the Conference is to be reopened on the 26th.

It is reported that Austria has secretly forwarded circulars to each of the German States, insisting upon a distinct specification of the policy to be pursued by them.

The appointment of General Pelissier, in the place of Canrobert, resigned, is very popular, it is thought that he will attempt to cut off Liprandi's army.

The force of the allied troops in the Crimea since the arrival of the late French reinforcements is estimated at about 200,000 viz.: of French 120,000; Turkish 40,000; British 30,000; Sardinian 11,000.

All the troops from the camp of Meslem, have been shipped to the Crimea.

English correspondence up to May the 8th says, that the army is well supplied with luxuries as well as necessaries. Cholera and fever still prevailed.

Maine Law Riot at Portland, Me.

A serious difficulty has lately occurred in Portland, Maine, owing to the Mayor of the city having purchased a quanity of liquor for the purpose of disposing of it under an ordinance, which he anticipated being able to pass at the city council. But as Neal Dow, the Mayor, was, the principle originator of the Maine Law, the indignation of the people was aroused and a mob raised for the purpose of destroying the liquor according to Maine usage. The following which we clip from the New York Herald is the result:

A Bloody Liquor Riot at Portland, Me.

Neal Dow in the Rum Trade—His Stock Seized—Symptoms of Excitement.

Portland, (Me.) June 2, 1855.

The Mayor of our city, Neal Dow, anticipating the action of the City Council, recently purchased sixteen hundred dollars worth of liquor for the city agency; but the liquor remaining on his hands, several citizens entered a complaint, and a warrant was issued for the seizure of the liquor, when the Mayor called a special meeting of the Aldermen this afternoon, and a vote was passed to purchase it for the city. Much interest is felt to see how the matter will terminate.

A Maine Law Mob Assembled—Attempted Destruction of Liquor—The Military Called Out.

Portland, June 3, 1855.

About ten o'clock last night a noisy mob assembled about the building used as the City Liquor Agency, and attempted to break into it and destroy the liquor. The police attempted to preserve the peace, but failing to do so, and the crowd becoming more threatening, two military companies were called out. It is now thought and hoped the matter will end quietly.

Excesses of the Rioters—The Military Fire Upon Them—One Man Shot—Charge Bayonets—The Mob Dispersed.

Portland, June 3—P. M.

At a late hour the mob broke into the building, when the military, drawn up on the opposite side, fired a volley, killing Ephraim Robbins, of Eastport, second mate of the bark Louisa Eaton, of Portland, and wounding several others, some of them severely. A squad of the Rifle Guard then charged the crowd with bayonets, which rapidly dispersed. One old gentleman, who was said to be quietly on his way home, received a severe bayonet wound. A few arrests were made. Another man is reported dead this morning of his wounds.

It would seem from the above that there is a very material difference between a Mayor disposing of liquor and a private citizen; a law that would seize other people's liquor and destroy it, will not answer for the property of the Mayor, and a post facto law must be made to save it from the merciless grasp of the good Maine Law; and not only so, but the military brought into requisition to protect it; of course Mayors are not common flesh and flood, and their property is more sacred than that of the publican and sinner. Where will these things end!

Filibusters Again Active.

Notwithstanding that the Cuban expedition has been formally disbanded, and that of Col. Kinney to Central America killed off by delay, there is yet another raid on foot, having for its object the acquisition of the two frontier States of Mexico lying on the Rio Grande.

Intelligence recently received from Galveston leaves no doubt that a formidable body of men is about being raised in New Orleans, Louisville and Cincinnati, the destiny of which is Brownsville, where they will be joined by a considerable force of Texans, when the two bodies united, being placed under the command of General ——, will march on Matamoros; and that town captured, the independence of the States will be proclaimed, and the flag of the Lone Star be hoisted in place of the Mexican Eagle. Such, we are given to understand, is an outline of the intended operations; and it is added that two Mexican Generals of distinction are not only cognizant of the intended expedition, but are supplying the funds for its equipment.

Should the expedition get off without interference on the part of the Government, there can be little doubt but that, properly managed, it will be successful, Santa Anna having already as much on his hands as he can attend to in the southern part of his dominions. In this case we may ere the next Presidential election have still another element of complication enter into that contest, and the annexation of the new territory be the vexata questio, and Sam again retire into that obscurity from which he was so unwisely brought by his imprudent friends. Nous verrons.—[St. Louis Democrat, May 27.

An Alderman Rawhided.

Alderman Briggs, the chairman of the celebrated Briggs or Police Nativity Committee, was yesterday afternoon a party to a terrible encounter—on the scene of his legal investigations, his romantic inquiries into the early loves of the Chief of Police, and the adventures of the black trunk. On Monday night the facetious Alderman offered a resolution in the Board of Aldermen in reference to the family of the Hon. David O'Keefe, one of the members of Assembly from this city. The paragraph in the resolution, which was most objectionable, was an allusion to Mrs. O'Keefe, suggesting an appointment to the situation of matron of the Thirteenth Ward Police Station House.

Stung by thus dragging a parent before the public as a mark of ridicule and open scoffing, Mr. Francis O'Keefe provided himself with a cowskin and repaired to the office of the Clerk of the Common Council; there he found the Alderman, and approaching, said, "You are the man that insulted my mother," at the same time delivering a blow with the cowhide. Alderman Briggs on this rushed forward, and the parties clenched and rolled over on the floor. At this moment the room was a picture of utter confusion, being filled with a crowd who burst open the doors and gathered around the combatants. Some cried "Separate them," and others "Let them fight it out." Aldermen Drake and Varian were present, and exerted themselves to keep order and stop the row. The men were lifted up, still clenched, and set on their feet. They were then separated. At last peace was restored, O'Keefe was carried out of the room, and Alderman Briggs adjourned to the Keeper's room to wash his face and prepare for the duties of the Board of Aldermen, soon to be called together. The stove was upset and reduced to a perfect wreck of drum, pipes, legs and ash pans—all in pi, as the Typos would say. Thus there is no comedy complete without a fight. Among the crowd interfering to restore order and separate the combatants was Mr. Kayser, son of that well-known and highly respectable citizen, Ernest Kayser, and like him, a butcher. Mr. K. was seized during the fray by the ears, by an attache of the Custom House, and "bucked" in the face, injuring him very seriously. One fellow seized Alderman Drake and attempted to stop his exertions to keep the peace, but was collared, and commanded in a tone of authority to desist, and he obeyed at once, leaving the magistrate alone. Mr. O'Keefe's coat was torn, and his face scratched in the melee, and Alderman Briggs came out with a bruised eye and cut on the cheek, to which court plaster was applied, and in this plight we saw him in his seat in the Board of Aldermen, about an hour after the conflict, which took place at half-past four in the afternoon.—[N. Y. News.

Col. Kinney again in Trouble.—New York, May, 28.—Judgement was rendered in the Supreme Court, Saturday, against Col. Kinney, for $14,500, for merchandise delivered in 1837.

A Genius in the Canadian Parliament, proposed, while the Maine Law was under discussion, to amend by prohibiting the decoction and sale of all "tods" made under the following names, which he said he had tasted while in the States: "Plain fruit julep, fancy mixed julep, mixed fruit julep, peach julep, strawberry julep, claret julep, capped julep, arrack do., race horse do., sherry cobler, rochelle do., arrack, peach do., claret do., ching ching tog, roped, Tip and Ty, fiscal agent, veto, I O U, tippena, peco, vox populi, ne plus ultra, shambre, pig and whistle, citronella, jam, egg nogg, sargent, silver top, poor man's punch, spire punch, speed punch, epicure's do., arrack do., iced do., porteree, split-ticket, tom and Jerry, milk punch, peach do., cherry do., Jewett's fancy, deacon, exchange, stone wall, Virginia fancy, Knickerbocker, smasher, floater, sifter, moral suasion, soda punch, soda, mead, poker, gin rooster tail, brandy rooster tail, brandy smash, gin sling, port wine negus."

To the Saints Scattered Abroad.

As there will shortly be many of our brethren here from Europe who will be in want of employment, in various trades and occupations, you are requested to send to this office, directions whereby we may know where to send those that are in need of employment, on their arrival in this country.

Those of the Saints who have not already reported, are requested to report themselves through their presiding officers or individually to this office by letter or otherwise, as soon as circumstances will admit.

Letters must be post-paid.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévolleront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme?* Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que, votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.
This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.
The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.
The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Working Bee.

TUNE—"Rose May."

I.

O! once I dwelt in Babylon, in darkness and in dread,
For I could see some thick dark clouds were hanging o'er my head,
But soon the Mormon sun burst forth, dispersed those clouds of jet;
And I became a working bee in the hive of Deseret.

II.

When I began the truth to scan, kind friends their warning gave,
They straight condemned the Mormon plan, and tried poor me to save,
They raved, persuaded me to quit the "poor deluded set,"
But I became a working bee in the hive of Deseret.

III.

I read, marked, learned, and did digest the plan which Joseph taught;
For, of all plans, it is the best, and one that Jesus brought;
And, from my heart, I bless the day, I first the Mormons met,
And glad became a working bee in the hive of Deseret.

IV.

Thanks to our King the stone rolls forth, the kingdom lives and grows,
Enlightens part of this dark earth, and onward, upward flows;
To every nation, Saints go forth, and spread the Gospel net,
Returning with fresh working bees for the hive of Deseret.

V.

While discord reigns throughout the earth, proud nations rush to war,
And famine, pestilence, and strife, extend from shore to shore;
All Mormon hearts united are, on peace their minds are set,
No drones nor discord plague the bees in the hive of Deseret.

VI.

When Brigham speaks, the Saints give ear, they work with hand and heart,
And by "hard knocks" the kingdom rear, and cheerfully impart—
Abundantly of earthly goods, and grudge not, nor regret—
They have become the working bees in the hive of Deseret.

VII.

Both old and young, and grave and gay, from every sect have fled,
They've found the straight and narrow way, and follow Christ their head;
By day and night to keep his laws, their hearts are firmly set,
And praise his name, they're working bees in the hive of Deseret.

VIII.

And from my heart I now invite each wanderer on the earth,
To come and prove the joys I sing, and gain celestial birth;
Ere Satan by his wiles beguile, and catch them in his net,
May they become good working bees in the hive of Deseret.

The Marriage Relation.

THE existence of polygamy among the Mormons, the prevalence of the free-love doctrine in and about New York, the practical abnegation of the matrimonial relation in our Slave States, and the able advocacy of the equal rights of women and men in the Free States, give a greater interest to the subject of the social relations of the sexes in various countries than was ever felt before. When we become accustomed to any established usage in society, a departure from it, however right and reasonable, strikes us as a wrong; so prone are we to measure new opinions by our old predjudices, rather than by any rule of truth and justice. To have any clear conceptions of the subject of marriage we must learn the history of the institution as it exists in different countries; and consider it in connection with the various degrees of enlightenment of the different nations.

With the most ancient inhabitants of the East, of which we have any history, the bride was obtained by presents made, or services rendered to her parents. To this day the practice prevails among the Circassians, and the poorer Turks and Chinese. In Assyria the marriageable girls were sold at public auction, and the money thus recieved furnished marriage portions for those whose charms were not sufficient to attract purchasers. In this way, the man who was too poor, or too stingy, to buy a handsome wife, could get an ugly one with a portion.

The ancient Hebrews married when very young. Among the modern Jews, marriage is permitted to males at the age of thirteen and one day; and to the females at the age of twelve years and one day; and they consider it a direct sin against the commandment—"be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth," if they are not married before their nineteenth year. In the morning gift which the suitor makes to the father of the bride, we perceive a remnant of the ancient custom of buying the daughter from the father.

The ancient Greeks had many forms of the marriage ceremony. On the day of the wedding, the couple put on wreaths sacred to Venus. The house was also ornamented with wreathes and flowers. Towards evening, the bridegroom took the bride from her father's house in a chariot; preceded by torch-bearers and music, and by females, who carried symbols of domestic life, as a seive, or a spindle. When the couple arrived at home, fruit was poured over them, as a symbol of plenty, and the axle of the chariot was burned, to show that the bride could not return.

The Lacedemonians stole away the bride from her father's house, and kept the marriage a secret for several days; after which the ceremony was concluded by a solemn procession and sacrifices.

The Romans solemnized their nuptials by many forms and ceremonies, emblematical of the sacred nature of matrimony and the domestic duties of the married pair.

In the ancient Celtic and German tribes, women were always bought of their parents, or guardians.

Among the Germans, the marriage of a slave to a free girl was punished by cutting off his head, and burning her. They married late. Marriage was prohibited before the twentieth year. After marriage, the wife followed her husband to the chase and to war. Divorce was very rare, and infidelity on the part of the wife was punishable by death. Notwithstanding the severity of some of these laws, the ancient German women were more free than women commonly are among uncivilized people.

Mahommedans consider marriage a mere civil contract, and each man may have four wives and as many female slaves as he is able to purchase. These are generally Circassians. Generally they have but one wife; the wealthy have two, and the very rich still more.

With the Turks, the marriage is arranged between the parents, and the parties most interested seldom see each other before they are united. It is a real misfortune for a Turk to marry the daughter of the Sultan. He prescribes the presents to be made to his daughter, and so many are demanded the poor fellow is often ruined, and what would generally be considered worse, he is obliged to follow her will in all things. In Arabia, if a young man is pleased with the appearance of a girl in the street, where the females never appear unveiled, he endeavors to procure a sight of her face by stratagem. If he succeeds and is pleased, he makes a bargain with her father, and signs a contract before a Sheik, or Magistrate. After several ceremonies, baths, and entertainments, the Arab waits his bride in his tent. Matrons conduct her there, where she bows and receives a gold coin pressed upon her forehead. She is then taken by him to the interior of the tent, and women dance around it all night.

In Barbary, the marriage contract is concluded with the father, or some near relation; a price is paid, and a sum assigned for her support in case of a divorce. The bride is conducted to the bridegroom in a dark room, and he sees her face the next day for the first time. He cannot go out of the house for eight days, nor can she for two months.

In India the Hindoos contract marriages for their children when very young—often in the seventh year.

In Peru the women are bought and generally for a specified time.

In Siam, the husband may have, besides his lawful wife, others whose children he sells as slaves. The same custom prevails in the United States which contains seventy thousand white adults, who can neither read nor write, and a great many colored adults equally ignorant.

In China, wives are bought, and poor men sometimes beg wives from foundling hospitals. The young couple do not see each other before the contract is concluded. The bride is carried to her husband locked up in a box. The key is given to him and he lets her out to see her step off for the first time, if she has feet with which she can step. After marriage the wife sees only her husband, or, on particular occasions, her father, unless express provision is made in the contract for greater liberty.

The Parsees, or Fire-Worshipers consider matrimony a holy state, and entirely binding. Weddings among them are celebrated with much public festivity.

Among the Esquimaux there is no marriage ceremony. Children are sometimes betrothed in infancy, and the parties sometimes make their own choice. Divorce depends on the will of the parties, and is very common.

In most other Indian tribes polygamy is common, and the suitor generally makes a present to the bride. The ceremony is very simple, and often there is none at all. Instances of devoted attachment are frequent among them, though it is no uncommon thing for a wife to be divorced five or six times before she is permanently settled. An Indian sometimes gets rid of his old wife by taking a young one, but this experiment does not always succeed; and when it fails, a bad state of domestic affairs is likely to become worse.

Polygamy is more common in the world than monogamy. In almost if not quite all the ancient nations of Asia and Africa, men were allowed to possess two or more wives, and the same usage is common still in many nations of the East.

The ancient Brittons had a kind of marriage that differed from all others. Any number of them, as ten or a dozen, joined together in a society, which was perhaps necessary in those times for mutual defence. In order to link this society the closer, they took an equal number of wives in common. The children were reputed to belong to all of them, and were accordingly provided for by the society.

In barbarous nations, the husband may generally repudiate or set aside his wife at his pleasure. The ancient Hebrews required that he should give her a bill of divorce.

In Turkey, where a man may have several wives, he may also dispose of them at pleasure. He may divorce her without her consent, or, if he be a sultan or grandee, may tie her up in a sack, with a big stone, and throw her into the river.

In England, formerly, a man could not divorce his wife in any way, for no law existed to sanction it; but he might lead her to the market-place, with a halter about her neck, and sell her to the highest bidder. This law still stands on England's statute book, a remnant of her former barbarism.

Several wives have been sold in this way within the last half century. Within a few years, a man from the country took his wife to town, and standing her in the public street, on a market day, with a halter on, sold her to the highest bidder. The purchaser was a sailor, and paid a Newfoundland dog, a jackknife, and a plug of tobacco. All parties appeared satisfied with the transaction, except the dog.

In France the law formerly made many slight causes the ground for a divorce; and some were not married a week before they obtained a divorce, with the same facility they had a few days before obtained a marriage license. But the evidence offered in the courts, and the grounds on which divorces were demanded, disgusted even Frenchmen; and the law was changed, making the simple difference of minds and manners a sufficient reason for divorce.

Some of the States of Greece affixed marks of disgrace and severe penalties upon citizens who deferred marriage beyond a limited time; and at Athens a man could not fill a public office of any trust, unless he was married and a father. How would Americans like such a law?

The Romans, adopting the principle of the Grecian lawgivers, gave the utmost encouragement to early marriages. Those fathers who would not allow their children to marry, or who refused to give their daughters a portion, were obliged by the magistrates to do so. All persons of marriageable age, who led lives of celibacy, were incapable of receiving any legacy, except from near relations; and if they were married, but had no children, they could enjoy only half of any estate that might be left to them. In matters of mere ceremony, married men took precedence of bachelors; and candidates for public offices were frequently chosen in consequence of having more numerous families than their opponents. The senator who had the most children, had his name written first on the list of senators, and was the first to deliver an opinion in the senate. If an inhabitant of Rome had three children, he was exempt from all troublesome offices.

We have seen that in the most barbarous nations the choice of conjugal partners is free, natural, and unrestrained by laws. Repudiation of the wife by the husband, divorces by mutual consent, and plurality of wives are also common. The wife is a slave of so little value as not to command much price.

In the semi-barbarous nations many absurd restrictions are placed by laws and customs upon the social intercourse of the sexes. The father owns his daughter as property, and sells her to a man who never saw her, and who regards her as a mere slave to his lusts and comforts. Polygamy is the rule with those who can afford to purchase and maintain several wives, and infidelity is punished with great severity.

In those countries where a nearer approach has been made to civilization—in countries that have attained to patent medicines and almshouses, the condition of woman has been ameliorated. Instead of the father selling his daughters, he often hoards his wealth for a lifetime, that they may buy husbands. In such cases the man is "sold." The rule is not so far reversed as to allow a plurality of husbands. With greater personal liberty, the wife is happier, and the husband participates in her happiness. Divorces become less necessary and common; the men make the laws, and prescribe their own sphere, and—woman's; the refinement and delicacy of woman, her clear perceptions of truth and beauty, her love and gentleness, play a more important part in society. But while men still assume the right to dictate in what particular sphere of usefulness she may engage, and in what she shall not, our claim to enlightenment is about as absurd as the Chinese self-imposed title of Celestial.—[Woman's Advocate.

The Eruption of Vesuvius.

NAPLES, Saturday, May 5, 1855.

HAVING purchased our torches at Resina, we turned out of the high road into the comparatively narrow and heavy route which begins the ascent. It is formed of loose volcanic dust and pulverized lava; and hard work it is, indeed, for the weary horses to get along. Ours acted most prudently by refusing to advance, so that dismounting, we took to our legs. As we got higher and higher the glare of light reflected on the sky became visible, and by the time we had got to the hermitage the grandeur of the scene began to open upon us. Pushing on from this point through cicerones and donkeys, horses, carriages and christians, as bipeds are styled in Naples, we traversed for some distance the road which leads to the cone, when, turning sharp off to the left, we arrived at a point on the stream of lava where it forms a cascade. This is about a mile or a mile and a half from its source, and here a vast crowd was assembled, as though it afforded the grandest colpo d'occhio. To tell the truth your correspondent labors to write coolly, for such was the magnificence of the scene that were one to trust too much to his feelings he would be hurried into what might appear exaggeration. The lava on which we stood was yesterday a boiling, moving stream; it was still hot to our feet, and taking up the loose pieces of coke the glowing fire was clearly perceptible beneath, we lit our cigars at it, and played all kinds of practical jokes, and, jumping over the fiery fissures, stood by the side of the bed of moving lava. Imagine thousands of tons of coke carted out together, and rolling mass over mass, and some idea may be formed of the noise—not that it was loud, but a wide-spread incessant sh—sh—sh—sh—like water over pebbles.

When a great accumulation of materials had been formed at the edge of the precipice, the outer blackened crust broke up, and, rolling over into the abyss below, bounded from rock to rock down among the chestnut trees, which writhed and flamed up and then fell over. The immense body of the heat and light which then burst forth nearly blinded us, and instinctively we held up our hands to ward it off. The breadth of the stream in this direction is 100 palms, says the Neapolitan journal; from my observation, I should say nearer 200 palms. Of course all calculations must be mere guess work, as who can measure a fiery flood! I never witnessed such mighty results of power apparently so unconnected with any cause. It produced the same impression upon me that the Toledo or Strand might do were either to take it into its head to walk.

There was a solid plain which he might have crossed some eight and forty hours before, now going full drive over a precipice some thirty or forty feet deep, and then stealing onward, as it now is, through chestnut groves and vineyards and villages, and threatening places of some consideration. Above the precipice the stream—or rather two streams, which are united at the cataract—flows through a plain in a serpentine form, and following back its course we arrived at the foot of the cone. Half way up we came upon the first of seven mouths, all of which throw out either lava or stones, or both. Those which threw out lava bubbled and gurgled over, while those which threw out stones, kept up an incessant noise, as that of a distant cannonade. What a foreground was this! Behind these in the distance the back ground was formed of heavy masses of lurid clouds, showing off by a strong contrast the vivid flames in front. The lava flowed down the sides of the mountain in waves of fire, and rolling through the valley we had just passed, precipitated itself into the gulf above which we stood at first. Of course we ladled up some liquid lava and fixed some coppers in it, and then were glad to move off. The wind occasionally shifted, and with it that curtain of lurid clouds. Our guide warned us of sharing the fate of Pliny, a consummation earnestly to be avoided, we thought, however great our respect for the old Roman. Since that evening the seven mouths have all resolved themselves into one. The lava still continues to pour down the mountain in the direction of San Sebastanio, Pollena, and Massa di Somma, being the same direction it took in 1822. It has already occupied the bed of a river, destroyed much plantation, and is threatening still greater injury. The Marchese St. Angelo, who has property in that direction, has been removing his furniture from his villa as a precautionary measure. In short, this eruption though not so effective a spectacle at a distance as the last, is far more imposing when viewed close, and threatens to be much more destructive.

NAPLES, Thursday, May 10, 1855.

The lava has now advanced ten miles from its source and is doing terrible damage. I have before me the report of Cozzolino as to the latest changes which have taken place about the cone. Just at the base of it a lake of fire has been formed which looks like a red sea in an undultory state. In the very centre of this opened another crater, which is throwing out red-hot stones. On the morning of the 7th the crater at the very summit fired, as it were, two heavy cannonades; and after sending forth lightning, flames and stones, broke up altogether. In the middle of the cone ten craters have been formed, and from these the lava pours forth like a river and runs on the side of the Cavallo as far as the Minatore. Here four other craters have been formed, which throw up bitumen in the manner of pyramids, and resemble gigantic exhibitions of fireworks. The whole of the summit of the crater is therefore like a sponge and must inevitably fall in. The thin crust trembles under your feet. You may see the stones dance with the tremulous movement; the part immediately round the crater looks like the sides of a heated copper boiler. Such is a true statement of what is going on in the summit. There are reports of an opening toward Pompeii, which is not unlikely, and of another towards Resina, but I have not been up for some days, as the danger is now very great. Before I write again I shall make the attempt.

Last night I went to the scene of the most stirring interest after an interval of two days. The whole length of this usually quiet road was like a fair, and such was the throng of carriages which were moving on in three lines that it was with difficulty we ever arrived at our destination. As we approached the menaced neighborhood the inhabitants were removing their goods, and on a bridge in the middle of the little township of Cercola (through which in the winter time thunders down from the summit of Vesuvius some of those mountain rivers so well known in Italy) stood a company of Sappers. Creeping under the solid handsome bridge into the bed of the river, we went up in face of the lava which was now coming rapidly down. Here again were Sappers, raising mounds on either side to divert the ruin from some private grounds and keep the lava in one straight course. The smoke which rose over the heads of the multitudes told us we were close on the spot, and climbing up the bank and walking along the top we looked down on this mighty mass of fire. How changed the neighborhood in two days! Where I walked on Sunday night was now a sea of fire. The side road by which I had come down into the main stream from Pollena and Musia di Somme was now full of blackened coke. The houses on the borders of the village had fallen—in one thirty poor people lived; a small chapel was swallowed up, a gentleman's villa, and a sad extent of vineyard and garden ground. On the other side of the great lava bed another stream was branching off to San Sebastine. We had hoped to cross it and ascend to the caskade again, but it was no longer possible; for as one says speaking of a marshy country in the winter, the lava was out. The fire here had begun to enter the burial-ground of the little town, but was diverted from its course by a wall. On the opposite side of the stream were the King and all the Royal family.

The banks on either side were thronged with curious and anxious multitudes, whose faces were lighted up with the blaze of hundreds of torches and with the more resplendent flame of the rapidly-descending lava. Since the morning it had moved a mile. It was like a vast river of glowing coke. As it moved on, the tens of thousands of lumps rolled and tumbled one over the other, crackling and grinding and grating; and when from the very face of it a large lump fell off the appearance was that of an iron-furnace when the iron is being drawn. To make the resemblance more complete, at such times men darted forward with long poles taken from the neighboring vineyards, and pulled out masses of lava in which they imbedded money for sale. What struck me at first, and still strikes me as the most majestic feature in the whole scene, is the slow, silent, irresitable motion of that fiery flood. Active almighty power without an effort! Sweeping everything before it, overcoming every obstacle, growing up against intervening walls or houses, and devouring them bodily, and then marching on in the same silent, unrelenting, irresistable manner as before. There was a spot beneath my feet where a fall of mason work had been built to break the violence of the winter floods; to this spot all eyes were directed. The fiery river would fall over it in an hour; as yet it was distant from it seventy yards perhaps. Gradually it rose in hight and swelled out its vast proportions, and then vast masses fell off and rolled forward; then it swelled again as fresh matter came pressing down behind, and so it broke, and on it rolled again and again till it had arrived at the very edge.

There was a general buzz and murmur of voices. The Royal family stood opposite to me intermingled with the crowd, looking on with intense anxiety. At last it broke, not hurriedly, still with a certain show of majesty. At first a few small lumps fell down; then poured over a pure liquid of metal, like thick treacle, clinging sometimes mass to mass, from its glutinous character, and last of all tumbled over gigantic lumps of scoriæ. Then on it moved once more in its silent regular course, swelling up and spreading over the vineyards on either side; and now there was a rush for the road which traverses this lava bed. Houses and the bridge bordered the road, the carriages had all been ordered off, and the bridge was being broken down—we were cut off completely. The sentinels would not let us pass, and struck us and drove us back; but we forced our way, and then found too surely that it was impossible to get on. The bridge was half demolished, and by the light of the torches we could see the soldiers above working away with the picks and the axe. We had therefore to retrace our steps, and making a long circuit through the open country and over walls, came round to the top of the bridge. "Run," said the sentinels, "or you will be too late." We crossed the narrow parapet which was still remaining, and soon afterward down went the whole fabric. In this way it is hoped that the lava will be diverted from the townships of St. Sebastiano, Massa di Somme and Pollena which stand on either side and have as yet only suffered partially. Cercolo, through which, however, the stream is rolling, will be sacrificed. The expectation is that the lava, should the eruption continue, will flow down to the Ponte Maddaloni and into the sea. So grand and so destructive an erruption has not been known for many years, and even now we cannot tell how or when it will terminate. The mountain is litterally seamed with lava and many fear a violent explosion as the final scene of the tragedy.—[London Daily News.

The Boa and the Monkey.

IN the year 1823, an English officer, who was stationed with his regiment in the neighborhood of Kulladgee, in India—a region in which monkeys abound in numberless quantities, and whose yells, shrieks, and hootings were indescribably wild—was a witness of a most extraordinary scene, which he has thus sketched:

"I was one day, with a native for a companion, climbing one of the slanting ascents of the Runmuddle cliff, when I became aware that an unusual commotion reigned amongst my friends the monkeys, which had by this time got so familiarized with my appearance, that they seldom condescended to honor me with a snarl, or a bough flung towards me in sport. Creeping round a rock, behind which they appeared to congregate, and on which grew a large gumarabic tree, completely golden with the abundance of yellow blossoms which covered it, I at once found myself on the stage of a strange tragedy in Simian life. In the volumnious folds of a boa constrictor was being slowly inwrapped a beautiful brown monkey, whose last cries and struggles denoted that I came too late, even had I been prepared to do battle with the reptile, in the cause of oppressed innocence. The monkeys, in evident alarm, ran hither and thither, mobbing and mewing, and chattering; but not one advanced near the spot, where presently their poor companion became almost quite hidden from view in the embrace of its destroyer.

Determined to watch the process of the affair, I quietly sat down until gradually the monkey had been moulded, as it were, into a proper condition for deglutition, for I could hear the bones crack as they broke beneath the pressure to which they were subjected; and ere long, as the serpent began to untwist its folds, I could admire at leisure the magnificence of its glittering scales, that shone like some richly variegated metalic substance. I shuddered as I beheld its grand and awful head—the prominent orbits of the eyes themselves large, and luminous with a fiery light. The creature was at least twenty feet in length, and was apparently famished by long fasting. Perfectly heedless of the noise made by the monkeys, it unwound its coils till the victim, now an unrecognisable mass, lay before, it lubricated and fit to be received into the destroyer's stomach. When the reptile had fairly commenced its repast, and the before flaccid body began to fill and swell, I retired from the arena of conflict and hall of banquet, desirous of summoning my friend to assist me in capturing the sated giant. I knew that when gorged to repletion, there would be no difficulty in making a prize of the serpent; and he readily entered into my plans.

Accompanied by a stout lascar bearing a strong cudgel and a sharp knife, for slaughter and skinning, we lost no time in reaching the scene, where, however, fresh marvels were being enacted, proving that the passion of revenge is not confined to the human breast. Keeping aloof, we resolved not to mar by any interference the by no means mystifying operations in which the monkeys were engaged. The boa constrictor lay, thoroughly gorged, and like a log of wood, beneath the same projecting mass of cliff where I had left it. On the summit of this rock a troop of monkeys had assembled, and three or four of the largest and strongest were occupied in displacing an immense fragment of the massive stone, already loosened by time and the elements, from the rest of the ledge. This mass almost overshadowe the reptile. By enormous exertions, made in a silence that was rare with them, they at last succeeded in pushing it onwards until it hung over the boa's head, when, uttering a fierce yell, in which every separate voice mingled, by a vigorous movement they shoved it sheer down. The heavy mass fell right on the serpent's head, crushing it as if it were a cocoa-nut; and as the reptile lashed its fearful tail about in the final struggles for life, we could not refrain from joining in the singular chorus of rejoicing with which the monkeys now celebrated their accomplished vengeance.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1855.

Trouble with the Mormons.

WE have seen a long article in the North American and United States Gazette, wherein the editor labors very diligently to show that we are likely to have some trouble with the Mormons; but as it is only the old Gunnison story of square-ology notoriety vamped up again, we think it not worthy of attention. We refer our grave editor to the statement of Thomas S. Williams, Esq., of the firm of Hooper, Williams & Co., in another column. Perhaps that won't suit him. Will he publish that side of the question, or is he committed along with some others who have declared themselves? We shall see.

Now, concerning trouble with the Mormons, we can assure our cotemporary that none exists except in the brains of some of our slab-sided, bigoted, alarmist editors and priests. Speaking of priests, our cotemporary seems to have some very pious feelings about the matter, and as he is probably a pious soul and a good theologian, we would respectfully submit whether it would not be better to evangelize the Mormons before you kill them off. To send them to answer their dread account, unenlightened, unprayed for, and unshriven, would hardly be Christian; better convert them first, and kill them after; you would get the spoils, you know, just the same; it would only be delaying the matter a little; besides, it would be more Christian, and while it would show better to a Christian community, it would be a nice job for the priests—quite a field for missionary enterprise. What is the reason that we heathen out in Utah cannot have the benevolence shown to us that other sinners and Pagans have? We would recommend that the various missionary societies unite; get up a liberal contribution, and send out some missionaries to convert the Mormons; and we will engage they shall have a fair hearing. We would further recommend that the missionary boards appoint a committee to wait upon the various editors who are so terribly afraid about Mormonism—(we can give them a list)—and solicit a subscription from them in behalf of the souls of the poor benighted Mormons. We will give five dollars to aid in the enterprise, and we have no doubt but that these gentlemen who have so much sympathy and fear will contribute very liberally.

No need of sending missionaries to Hindostan, Turkey, Russia, China, and other far off lands, until we have our own heathen at home converted. Only think of these barbarians in Utah, growing, increasing, multiplying, without even one Christian minister among them. Gentlemen, where is your philanthropy? where your bowels of mercy? where your Christianity? Send them missionaries, gentlemen; and then if they won't be converted, let them take the consequences.

We'll kill off the Chinese in California while we are converting their brethren in China. Our religion is so beautiful everybody must admire it, and if they don't we'll kill them all off—the scoundrels, what business have they to think different from us? We'll join in a crusade against all infidels, heathen, Jew, Turk, Catholic, Greek, and Mormon. Kill them all off wholesale, and then we shall have nothing but the pure Christianity that exists in such beautiful harmony at the North and South, with the Methodists and Jumpers, Presbyterians and Shakers, Universalists and Friends, Episcopals and Dunkers, Fatalists, Spiritualists, and the other beautifully united Christian sects that so extensively abound in the United States. The millennium would then of course be come, and we should all be united and happy.

Mormonism.

WHEN murder is all out, and railroad collisions, steamboat disasters, dreadful accidents, fratricides, homicides, suicides, infanticides, poisonings, robbery, theft, duelling, burglary, incendiarisms, forgery, adultery, rape, procuresses, houses of prostitution, cyprians, abductions, fillibustering, Maine, Cuba, Kansas, and Sebastopol, are all exhausted, Mormonism stands as a sort of capital in reserve for most of our disinterested, patriotic, reformation editors, associated with some tenth-rate lawyer politicians, and a few pious clergymen in want of a living, to practice their hands at "purification," and display their wonderous sagacity, supreme abhorence of vice, and unquestionable veracity to the gazing multitude; in the charitable project of reforming the human race, by making a commencement with the Mormons in Utah. Well, gentlemen, may you have all the success of your worthy predecessors, Bogart, Boggs, and Ford, with all the illustrious Mormon reformers. And now is the time; for delays are dangerous, and the disease may be contagious. If the whole system should be disordered, it might be fatal. The prosperity and reputed energy of the people of Utah is only another strong evidence of their abominable wickedness and lascivious course—their perseverance and success in overcoming the difficulties of a new, far off, barren wilderness only show a greater ability in plunging themselves deeper in iniquity, and a greater necessity of reformation or "extermination." We saw an excellent article some time since, in which a worthy correspondent in Philadelphia is anxious to bring the subject of non-intervention and polygamy before Congress. Now this is admirable, and he certainly must be a no party man, and just the one the country needs, and he and the editor of the Era ought to be immortalized as Union-savers, for they descant with the most wonderful discernment upon the future effects of Mormonism upon the country; not quite so complimentary, it is true, to the high toned intelligence of the American people; but no doubt salutary to the diversified institutions of our Union, and perhaps with a view of enlisting them all in unison, under one banner, which he is prepared probably to display to the uninitiated members of the next Congress.

In the meanwhile we shall wait with the deepest interest for the next special correspondence from Utah, and unless President Pierce should be foolish enough to have that petition of Steptoe's, in favor of Brigham Young, published, we may have a rich treat to dish up, for the public, of Mormon monstrosities.

But here comes in more news from the Crimea—several thousands slaughtered; a reward in Indiana, offered for the head of Gov. Wright; the Neal Dow affairs at Portland; and row in Kansas—enough for a week to come. Let the "devils" place Brigham Young, Polygamy, and the Mormons in the drawer until we are out of copy again.

Anti-Slavery and Pro-Slavery.

THE great question of slavery and anti-slavery seems to be spreading wider and wider, and threatens to involve the nation in very serious difficulties; from the East, West, North and South, it seems to be the all-engrossing subject. Almost the whole North is indignant at the late Kansas operations, whilst the South is enraged at Massachusetts for nullifying the Fugitive Slave act. The Louisville Journal proposes to lay a prohibitory duty upon all goods of Massachusetts production imported into any slave State; whilst the Richmond Enquirer advocates the expulsion of the Massachusetts delegation from the next Congress. Georgia and some of the Southern States go in for re-opening the slave trade, whilst others want slavery recognized as a national institution. The Charleston Mercury endorses the proceedings in Kansas, and after speaking plainly about the encroachments of the North, says:

"What is the consequence? Kansas, a region suited in all respects for slavery, is thrown open to the South. The North grows furious at the thought. And now the contest opens. Hireling emigrants are poured in to extinguish this new hope of the South. But, true to their institutions and their homes, the Missourians prepare for the struggle. Away from the old centres of sectional strife, far off in the fair fields of Kansas, the North and the South, fanaticism and slavery, meet face to face. It was a mortal struggle, and slavery conquered."

These men seem to write as though they were sincere and determined, whilst the North are just as resolute, and hold language quite as strong.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing from Leavenworth, says:

"I have only to say in addition, that the people of the Free States know but little of our condition here, and as little of the proper mode of securing the freedom of Kansas, which is to fight. A battle or two must be fought, a regular pitched general battle. Until that is done, more death and misery will be the necessary consequence. If you want to help us who have exposed our lives and fortunes here for the cause of freedom, send us revolvers and other weapons."

The Tribune endorses this, hopes the friends of freedom will take notice of this appeal, and "meet the slaveholders at the threshold, and by an organized armed force in the Territory repel their invasion, and repudiate the proceedings of the official scoundrels who will assemble and call themselves the Legislature of Kansas."

The Western Argus, pro-slavery, on the other hand, after speaking of a plot among the abolitionists to run off all the negroes in Kansas, says:

"If anybody has to be driven out of Kansas, we know of none so deserving of such treatment as the abolitionists themselves.

The fact is, the abolitionists in the West are determined to force a rupture with the pro-slavery party. It begins to be apparent that they desire civil war, and to this end they are shaping their whole course, and since this is their object, the sooner they are stopped in their incendiary designs the better it will be for the interests of Missouri."

Both sides are furious, and it would seem as though the issue is fast approaching. It is true there are some moderate among both parties; but they are few; both parties feel themselves aggrieved, and both are equally determined. The day of compromise seems to be past; the disease is virulent, deep-seated and wide-spread, and it will require a more vigorous panacea than we can discover to close the gaping wounds and heal the insidious disease. There seems to be no chemical affinity between the discordant elements; they will not fuse, or amalgamate. The clouds gather blackness, and loom up, deep, dark and portentous, with fearful rapidity: the rumbling of distant thunder announces a coming storm; whilst the lurid glare of fanaticism, like the forked lightning in the bosom of the rushing, towering clouds, only exhibits more clearly its dark abysmal depths, its fearfully accumulating force, and the certainty of its approach. What the end will be, would be difficult at present for us to determine. One thing, however, is certain, that there will be enough of real thunder soon to satisfy the most vitiated taste, without getting up alarms, publishing detraction and falsehood, and making artificial thunder to injure the Mormons.

The Times vs. Mr. Williams.

IN another column will be found a very interesting communication from Thomas S. Williams, Esq., of the firm of Hooper, Williams & Co., Utah, who was an eye witness to the celebrated Indian trial of Times notoriety. Will their truthful correspondent, Mr. ——, (we'll leave the name for the present,) face the music, or will the Times endorse his statements or deny Mr. Williams's? We had like to have committed a blunder and said, will it have the honesty to publish Mr. Williams's counter statement? We could have published this before; but we wanted to see how many papers were "committed to publish against the Mormons." We like to see men wiggle, particularly when they are fond of it. We are not afraid of backing our correspondent; he is a regular mountaineer and knows the Indians, and knows too some mongrel epauletted lawyers; nor is he ashamed of his name. These very respectable anonymous gentlemen are always questionable; a man that dare not give his name ought not to be credited—is not by us. We need say nothing about the piece; it will speak for itself; it is plain, straightforward, and ungarnished.

We don't know that some of our editors value their reputations much; perhaps it is not considered sacred; but should they not be lost to all sense of propriety, we would give them a word of counsel. The publishing such documents as they have done lately from such questionable sources, under the garb of truth, will necessarily, in time, bring upon them the contempt of all honorable men. We shall look for the publication of Mr. Williams's article, and if not done, we shall know how many are committed. Another day is coming.

Highly Important from the Hostile Indians.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Missouri Republican, writing from Whitehead, Kansas Territory, on the 23d of May, says:

There are daily arrivals from the Plains, and each one brings new and different reports of the Indians. The last in is the train of Mr. Mason, from Salt Lake. He says the Brules, the Cheyennes, the Arrapahoes, the Kiotas, the Minnecottees, and the Camanches, are assembling at the Ash Hollow to the number of 3,000 warriors, and are eager for a fight. They laugh at the idea of being whipped by our regular soldiery, and say they would fear twenty old mountaineers more than a thousand of them; that while our soldiers are playing their music and turning about in column, they will give them a fire and then run out of sight and hide; that the soldiers can never catch them in their valleys and mountains, and that they will have a fine time in taking the scalps of scattered and lost parties and stealing horses and provisions.

They have ordered the traders to leave the mountains. Old Reichard, who has lived there thirty-five years, and old Martain, who has dwelt among them nearly as long, and both of whom have intermarried with them, could not believe that they would be obliged to go; but they were told that the horses of all traders would be impressed for the use of the Indians, and after their horses were all gone that their scalps would then be taken. They are stealing all they can lay their hands on. They had stolen 86 horses from Fort Laramie, and 27 mules from under the guard at Fort Kearney.

A party of Cheyennes chased some Pawnees into Fort Kearney, and shot one of them after they were in. The surgeon took possession of the body; the Cheyennes demanded the scalp; it was refused; the Cheyennes made some hostile demonstrations, when a file of soldiers fired into them; the Cheyennes stood for a moment as if to see if any of their band were wounded. Not a ball, however had taken effect. They then turned and departed slowly, taking off 27 mules.

Those in the fort are said to have been very much alarmed, and congratulated themselves upon having missed their aim, believing if they had killed one, the Indians would have butchered them all. The few who are in charge of Laramie and Kearney are in a state of the keenest apprehension and painful suspense. They fear that the Indians who are gathering about them in such numbers, and with no friendly feelings, may wipe them all out, by way of getting their hands in before the new detatchments reach them. This, however, can hardly be the case; for no considerable body will venture so far east as Kearny, while those concentrating at Ash Hollow will prepare to meet our soldiers in full force at that point. They do not need Fort Laramie, and will exhaust none of their strength in taking it. Their policy is to fight in the mountains, where they can annoy us, and yet escape as long as possible.

Wars and Rumors of Wars—Indian Troubles.

By late arrivals from Fort Pierre and Laramie, we have rather interesting and exciting news, in regard to Indians and their movements. Major Vaughn reports a large number of the North-western tribes, in a state of revolt, ferment and excitement.

Three thousand warriors had banded to withstand the government troops.

Mr. Roubadoux, an old mountaineer, just come in from the plains West, reports nearly all the tribes leagued together, and laughing at the efforts of our Government to subdue them, and boastingly say, "come on, we want to see them." The horses and mules are nearly or quite all stolen from the traders, and a number of posts on the route are broken up and the whites fled for safety. We fear much trouble and bloodshed will attend the emigrants this season.

Our Government is altogether too slow in getting troops on the ground of difficulty.

If greater dispatch is not made than heretofore, the troops will scarcely be in time to pick up and bury the bones of the slain. We can only say as we have often said, if you would cope with the Indians, men from the frontiers, who are acquainted with their ways, manners, customs, and warfare, should be enlisted for the service.

Major Vaughn, reports no snow in the mountains, North, and thinks there will be no rise in the Missouri river for June.

We hope to be able to give particulars at greater length in next number.—[Council Bluffs Bugle.

We give the above for the benefit of our readers, but we have no serious apprehensions of difficulty with our emigration; the government troops will be on the way, and the attention of the Indians will be attracted by them. With the excellent precautionary measures adopted by Erastus Snow, in relation to this matter we apprehend no difficulty. In ordinary cases, our people generally go sufficiently strong to protect themselves against common Indian aggression, of course they could not cope with 3,000 nor will they have to in our opinion. When we passed the plains last September, about thirty in number, just after the massacre at Laramie, we met rumors worse than the above; but we came on and saw traders flying in all directions; we did not lose our scalpes. There is generally a great hue and cry about these things, and in many instances not without reason.

We accord with the editor of the Bugle; government is too slow, neither are their troops of the right kind. We would rather take two hundred and fifty frontier men, accustomed to Indian habits and warfare, than one thousand of the regulars, in an Indian fight. The Indians won't come, and be shot down scientifically, they would never take Sebastopol; but they would cut off their supplies, and massacre their scouting parties. They have got a large country to roam in, with which they are conversant, and mountain fastnesses for protection; they can live by the chase, and 'are not dependant upon military supplies. They want men of the same energy, and habits to cope with them, and they would fear ten such men more than one hundred scientific greenhorns.

Senator Douglas and the Virginia Triumph.

IT would seem from the following, from the Chicago Times, that Senator Douglas has met with a more pleasant reception than he did in Chicago some time ago. Times and circumstances change, and those men who once forsook him, seem to rally again around the "Little Giant." An immense crowd were assembled in Dearborne Park, one hundred guns were fired, and speeches made. Judge Douglas came forward upon the stand and was greeted with the most rapturous applause. The immense throng threw up their hats, and enthusiastic cheers filled the air. When the enthusiasm had partially subsided Mr. Douglas said:

"FELLOW-CITIZENS: I know you did not come here to listen to a speech. That cannon speaks in tones more eloquent, and its language is more grateful to your hearts and to mine than anything which could be said here. [Cheers.] It tells you of a victory won by the friends of our country over her secret enemies. It proclaims the triumph of Democratic principles in the Old Dominion. [Prolonged cheers.] The election which has resulted in this triumph in Virginia is one of the most important State elections which has ever taken place."

Judge Douglas proceeded in most eloquent language to speak of the principles involved, and which have been defeated on the other hand, and triumphed on the other, in the contest. He said that of all the combinations into which men ever entered, that which seeks to proscribe men on account of their birth or religion is the most reprehensible.

"It was the spirit of fanaticism to proscribe where men should be born, or to proscribe them if not born within our own country. Was it to be proscribed on account of their foreign birth that De Kalb, Montgomery, and Steuben crossed the ocean and joined with the revolutionary founders of our Government in their struggle for liberty? Was it for this that La Fayette, to whose disinterested efforts we are in a great measure indebted for the liberty we now enjoy, left his native land to hazard his life and expend his substance in the achievement of American Independence? [Applause.] The Democratic party desire to administer their government in the spirit in which it was founded, without reference to birth or religion. That party stands immovable upon the Constitution given us by our revolutionary sires. We believe that Constitution to be the Supreme law of the land. This is a Government of law. Without law there can be no liberty. [Cheers.]

"He again referred to Virginia, and said it was well that Virginia, the mother, as it were, of the Revolution, should be the great bulwark to stop the further march of fanaticism. Virginia has ever stood firm; and when I pay this tribute to Virginia, I will say that Illinois, from the time she was a distant county of Virginia, has never given a popular majority against the Democratic party. True, our opponents succeeded, by the aid of Know Nothingism, Abolitionism, fanaticism, and all the other isms embraced in Fusionism, in defeating some of the Democratic candidates at the last election; but the election of John Moore showed a Democratic majority of 3,000 votes in the State."

Judge Douglas concluded by referring to the necessity of Democrats standing by principles. If principles are never deserted, he said, we shall always triumph. He spoke about ten minutes only, and retired amid the deafening applause of the multitude.

Sickness and Distress in New Orleans.

THE New Orleans papers give a deplorable account of the situation of things in that city and neighborhood; they are afflicted with yellow fever, cholera, small pox, and drouth. The diseases are raging fearfully, while from the following, from the Delta of May 27, it will be seen that the drouth is very severe:

"There has been rain everywhere, except in this unfortunate section of the Union. Here the drouth is without precedent in our history. The earth has been baked to the hardness of burned clay; vegetation has been at a stand for many weeks; the trees have not vigor to put forth their leaves, and have a dull, faded aspect; the creeks and bayous are all dry; the cisterns have been for weeks forgotten; the cattle have been driven from the interior to the river to find water to assuage their thirst, and many have perished in the boggy swamps and creeks, from which they have not had strength to escape. The cane crop is nearly ruined; the stalks, which ought to be waist high, have barely struggled above the surface of the parched earth, and in many places the planters have turned the cattle into the corn fields. For nine weeks there has not been half an hour's rain."

The Bulletin of the 26th ult. says that there is great suffering for the want of water, the cisterns on which they depend being dry. The only resort was to the impure and offensive water of the river, and even this the poor have to carry home in buckets and jugs, not being able to pay for hauling, such being the demand by those better able to pay.

THE following are the conclusions of the Tribune on Know Nothingism:

"The Know Nothing National Council came to a vote late last night upon the ultimatum of the Northern delegates, and rejected it nearly two to one. They have thus taken their position as a National party, that the Missouri Compromise shall not be restored, and by taking that position have sealed their fate. They will be repudiated throughout the Free States, and an organization truer to the instincts of the people will rise from their ruins."

Now for the opinion of the Herald upon Know Nothingism. A slight difference with the Tribune. Both lights of the nineteenth century; both prophetic in their way; both agreeing that the days of Prophets are long since passed away; yet both claim a certain degree of inspiration, we presume, and with oracular wisdom lay out the future before us poor dumfusticated mortals, and point out each successive sacrifice to the altar of popular prejudice. We shall see by the next Presidential election.

"This result has been generally anticipated. But instead of this split being a disaster to the Know Nothings, we are inclined to think that it will constitute a stronger ground for them to acquire further victory and power over the old parties in the separate States. It was idle to suppose, in the present state of excited feeling between the North and South on slavery, caused by the Pierce administration, that any common ground of agreement could be found for the construction of a national platform other than opposition to that imbecile administration. They were compelled to agree to disagree on slavery. This will give the Know Nothings the vantage ground in future contests, both North and South, each in their own State. They will now fall back, each State on its own passions, principles, prejudices, and humbugs, either on slavery or anti-slavery, and thus have a better chance to carry the elections of this year than they otherwise could have done. In nine or twelve months they will be able to call another National Council or Convention, simply for the nomination of President and Vice President, and we venture to say that on that single plank—involving simply eighty millions of spoils per annum—there will be no split—no division—no flare-up."

A VERY extensive coal mine in Ballard county, Kentucky, is on fire. In November last some trespassers in the Mississippi bottom fired the woods, which extended to the bluffs, and the coal mine took fire—since then it has been steadily burning.

The Mormons.

FROM the best information we can gather, Atchison is settled upon by these people, as the permanent starting point for all future emigration. This has been decided upon, after thoroughly canvassing the various advantages; and experienced travelers have declared, that no point on the Missouri river, from St. Louis to Council Bluffs, offers more inducements to the emigrant than the city of Atchison.

During the stay of the Mormons in our midst, they have conducted themselves in such a manner as to entitle them to credit. We have the first dispute or quarrel to hear of, and no bad feelings between the citizens and these people have taken place. Considering the prejudices of the Missourians and Mormons against each other, this result could have hardly been expected. But the good behavior on the part of the Mormons, and their strict attention to their own business, gave no room for misunderstanding, and we verily believe that a much better feeling exists between them, than when first they landed. The time has now come when they will be compelled to take up the line of march westward. With the fine teams they own, and the excellent water and grass that abound in this vicinity, we predict for them a safe and prosperous trip to the land they claim to be the "promised." Following the Mormon emigration, will be a number of Salt Lake merchants. Their stock is now on our prairies, and their goods between this place and St. Louis. The total number of emigrants starting from Atchison this spring, must be in the neighborhood of five thousand.—[Squatter Sovereign.

Mormonism in the Crimea.

WE clip the following from the Buffalo Democrat. The editor of the Democrat is right, Mormonism, will stand an encounter before Sebastapol, or any other place where anything else will. There is nothing milk and water about it, it is the truth, and fears no opposition, it is ball proof, and shell proof, and lie proof, it is made of the true grit and is fit for any position in life. Saintly hypocrites, and long-faced mealy-mouthed canting professors, don't make good Saints. It requires metal with a sound ring to stand the brunt of Mormonism. "Jordon's a hard road to travel," and requires both certainty, and energy:

MORMONS BEFORE SEBASTOPOL.

The Saints find their religion to be no hindrance in fight. Like Cromwell's men, we think they knock the harder and face the music of the battle field the bolder, for their piety.

We are almost amused to see by our last Salt Lake City papers, that the Saints are actually hammering away at the Russians in the Crimea. The Deseret News publishes a letter from two branches of the Church in "the East"—the "Floating Branch" (for the use of mariners, we presume) and the "Expeditionary Force Branch" (for the rank and file on foreign service we fancy.) We quote.

"From a letter from Elder H. Russell, 22d September, Sebastopol. I learn on the 20th a battle was fought at a place called Alma, (2,000 killed) in which our brethren were engaged, but no one was even wounded. Elder West of the 93rd regiment had baptized one. From other letters, I learn of the baptism of two others, and that many were expected to enter the church when they could get into winter quarters."

That "one" that was batized by him of the 93d, we should like to see. We will bet a year's subscription that he is a Huntingdonshire man, and very awful when placed behind a charged bayonet, with authoritative instructions to go ahead and keep moving. We are afraid however that his baptism was not a solemn scene. The Zouaves must have made fun of it. Those men are not reverent. To resume:

"From Priest S. Ballard, (Rifle brigade) I learn that he was invited by some Methodists to preside over their meetings. This invitation he accepted; but having convinced one of them of the truth of the work, the remainder broke up, and do not even meet among themselves. The one continues to investigate the work with increasing satisfaction, and is expected, together with another, to be baptised shortly. Brother Ballard is creating considerable stir in the Rifle brigade. He and brother Paul of the Royal Sappers, meet nearly every night for prayer, that God will direct them to the honest in heart. If the work takes a start in that division of the army, it may extend from that to another, and so on. At present the baptisms have taken place in one division only."

We would like to see Bro. Ballard. There must be something in the man who can make a religious convert in the midst of the siege of Sebastopol, and at the same time keep his back harmless from the Marshall's rattan for neglect of duty. He and Bro. Paul of the Sappers and Miners are fighting men, that England were well off, if they were numbered to her by entire regiments instead of by units.

"Elder A. Downes, of the Floating Branch, has two persons ready for baptism the first opportunity they can get. He has sent me an order for books, &c. All the brethren of that Branch, and those of E. F. Branch were in good standing.

From the Branch in Malta, I may say we are united and rejoicing in the work. Although cholera has raged on every hand, and taken away many, yet it was only permitted to pay us a hasty visit, the ordinance of anointing proving, with God's blessing, efficacious in one moment, for which we ever feel to praise God every time we think of it."

Friends, is not a faith that flourishes under the cannonade of Sebastopol rather hardy? Wise politicians will not treat it as men do old hats lying in their path. Indeed it can't be booted with any sort of success. The Pauls of the Sappers and Miners are of the Church militant, as they also claim to be of the church of God.—[Buffalo Democrat.

On with the Crusade for Freedom!

Is not Liberty as Well Worth Fighting for Now, as in the Days of the Revolution!

THE prospect of a civil war in Kansas, between the ruffian hordes of Missouri and the citizens of the Territory, is growing more probable every day. The late usurpation of the ballot boxes by the Missouri mob, is awakening the old '76 spirit of the settlers; and they are undoubtedly preparing themselves to defend their rights, to hold their own elections at the "point of the rifle." Now is the time for men of sterling courage and inflexible determination to go to Kansas at once. Have we not hundreds and thousands of unflinching unmarried men, who are willing even to peril their lives, if necessary, to save Kansas from being blackened and polluted by the armed ruffians from the hells and grog shops of St. Louis and other places in Missouri?

Because we have an imbecile President, whose duty it is to protect the settlers of Kansas, but who pays no attention to the outrage committed there, shall the sterling men of our country be as imbecile, and suffer the noble pioneers of freedom in Kansas to be driven from that country by a mob of slavery's minions?

We trust not. On, then, for the defence of freedom and the purity of the ballot box in Kansas. On for a crusade for freedom in Kansas. Show the bloated mob in Missouri that the men of Kansas are no cowards, and will not submit to their insults.—[Michigan Expositor.

Why don't some of those Eastern editors, who are fighting the Missourians "so awfully" at home, come to Kansas themselves, and dare to attempt the committal of acts which they counsel others to do? We think it would look much better in them to practice more and preach less. To read the Eastern journals now, one would naturally suppose that an army of a million of "freemen" was being raised to drive Southern citizens out of Kansas by force of arms. We do not fear their warlike preparations or noisy threats. If there is any truth in the old adage, that "barking dogs never bite," we are comparatively safe. We would like to see the plans of the Northern Press attempted to be carried out in this Territory. It would give us an opportunity of indulging in a luxury we have long desired, of "wading waist deep in the blood of abolitionists!" Come, then, we say, on your hostile mission! and we will give you the reception that the immortal Jackson gave the British at New Orleans. We will make your wives widows and your children fatherless, and enrich our soil with the putrid carcasses of dead abolitionists. We would much like to see the editor of the Michigan Expositor leading his company of rag-tag and bob-tail recruits over the prairies of Kansas. We would like to see him then, after his first encounter with the "armed ruffians from hell," and hear him exclaim in regard to the possibility of making Kansas a free State, "'tis easier said than done!"—[Squatter Sovereign.

Retaliation.

THE following extract from a letter in the St. Louis Republican, dated Iola, Kansas territory, shows that the free State party are disposed to retaliate on the Missourians:

"Mr. Kirby of Jackson county, Missouri, came over and located a claim on Marie de Seine, the south branch of the Osage river, and some twenty or thirty miles from Lawrence. When he had finished his cabin, three men came to him and ordered him off, saying that no Missourians should settle in that neighborhood. As he was alone and had nothing but a rifle, while they had double-barreled guns, he thought "discretion was the better part of valor," and left. He went to Jackson county and got some twenty of his friends to accompany him and returned; but, upon their arrival, they found the cabin filled and surrounded by about fifty armed men. Thinking it not prudent to attack so large a party, they returned to Missouri, and spread the news through the border counties. Meetings were held at Weston, Liberty and Independence, and resolved that Mr. Kirby should be protected in his right, and that a force should be raised to place and defend him in the possession of his claim.

GOV. WRIGHT, of Indiana, has declared Clay county, within that Commonwealth, in a state of insurrection. The "free and enlightened citizens" in return offer a reward fer the Governor's head. The cause of these adverse movements is the attempt of the citizens to amuse themselves and show their sovereign power by destroying a canal, by trampling upon authority, and by other acts of violence outrage, and the determination of the Governor to vindicate the laws. The Indianapolis Journal says that there is very serious danger that the citizens of the neighborhood, injured by these canal outrages, will be excited by renewal of them to such a degree as to take the law into their own hands and punish mob outrages by mob vengeance, as there are enough men interested in the preservation of the canal to crush the whole nest of Clay county outlaws at once. Such are the evil consequences of mob rule.

THE Editor of the New York Daily News says that he fears that opium is very extensively substituted, in many parts for the use of alcoholic drinks, and that the most fatal consequences are feared from the use of this insiduous debilitating and destructive narcotic. That "orders have already gone forward for the shipment of large amounts of opium, as a substitute for the various drinks, thus proscribed. If this is indeed a fact the results to be apprehended will be dreadful. Its deleterious effects are far more enerveting and destructive than the use of alcoholic drinks, and a temperance operation more efficient than the Maine Law will be needed to check the use of this poisonous drug.

Correspondence.

ST. LOUIS, May 24, 1855.

MR. EDITOR: Having just arrived from Salt Lake City on the fifth of this month, in company with the mail from Utah, I have been not a little surprised at seeing an article copied from the New York Daily Times, in relation to the trial of the murderers of Capt. Gunnison and his party who were massacred on the morning of the 26th Oct. 1853. After reading the article carefully, and being there at the trial of the Indians in March last, I feel that it is my duty to the public, and to Utah, to give a true statement of the facts as they existed; for I must say, fearless of contradiction, that the articles that have appeared in the public prints, in relation to this matter, are perfectly absurd, and nine-tenths of them are falsehoods, and I challenge the writers to get Col. Steptoe, or Chief Justice Kinney to endorse their statements; or any one of the officers under Col. Steptoe's command, except the writer himself, who is without conscience, truth or honor; I know not who he is, nor care, either for his office or the position he holds, I again say, he cannot get Col. Steptoe, nor any honorable man under his command, to endorse his statements. It is true that Col. Steptoe was obliged to bribe the Chief of the Indians, for he considered it the only way to get hold of the murderers, and that too at a pretty round sum. This deal for the Indians was between the Chief Kanoshe and the Colonel—the Chief knew that the Colonel require that of him, that he would not do himself that is, to turn traitor to his own flesh and blood, (the people of his own band,) particularly as in that murder the Chief was unquestionably as deep in the mud, as they were in the mire; and as I have been credibly informed, by the Interpreters, the Chief had stated at different times, that he had no objections to receive the Colonel's "blankets and horses," but he did object to surrendering up his people, that were concerned in the murder, to be hung up by the neck like dogs.

And what took place at the trial goes to prove this statement; for the evidence shows that the chief had rather got the Colonel down, on the trade, for the Indians that the chief had given up were not the ones that committed the deed; but were accessory to the crime, by assisting the party on. To substantiate this, I will here state, that two of the Indians given up were very old men, (one of them was blind) another of the party was a squaw. The Colonel ordered the question put to the chief, while in the witness stand, why he gave up this old blind man, when he had no hand in the murder. The chief answered, "that he had agreed to give up so many Indians, and that old man was blind, and of no account, and he did not care if they did kill him:" so it was discovered to be a swindling game on the part of the chief, and the Colonel remarked to me, that he had been deceived by him; for when he made the bargain with the chief, he promised to bring more Indians as witnesses to establish their guilt, and that he himself would be the most important witness. But But when he was put upon his oath, he knew nothing (you will bear in mind that the witness had already obtained the blankets and horses,) notwithstanding all this treachery on the part of the chief, of which the Colonel and the Court were fully aware; the correspondent of the New York Daily Times states that "the witnesses were tampered with by Col. Babbitt, a tool of Brigham Young." He says that, notwithstanding all this, the prisoners' guilt was proven without doubt. Why don't the writer give the evidence so that the public may judge of the matter? When the witness was upon the floor the question was put to him by the court "Has Col. Babbitt or any one else spoken or made presents to you since the trial commenced?" The answer was distinctly "No one excepting Col. Steptoe."

Col. Steptoe then asked the witness why he had misrepresented things to him; that when the first conversation took place, he (the witness,) told him, he knew considerable; but when put on his oath, he knew nothing. The witness said "he did not know why he'd forgotten, unless it was, that when he was talking to the Colonel about the bribe, he then talked for the bribe; but now, he was talking for his people." The question was then put to him: Do you know the nature of an oath? He said he did not. He was then asked if he knew there was a God, or a Supreme Being? He said that all he knew about Him, was what the white man had told him; but he had never seen the person, nor made his acquaintance; but he could not believe the white man for some told him that God lived in the air, and others said he lived under ground: in fact he said, he did not believe that the white men knew any more about Him, than he did.

There was no evidence against the prisoners of any more weight than the Chief's; and yet this is called positive proof by the writer in the Times. I ask what reliance can be placed upon such correspondents? He further states that "Col. Babbitt was the tool of Brigham Young." I think if he had needed a tool he would not have taken an outsider, as to my certain knowledge the Colonel and the Governor are not on the best of terms; and I know that Gov. Young had nothing to do with the case, for Col. Steptoe assured me that he engaged Col. Babbitt himself to defend the Indians; and his instructions to him was to acquit them if possible, since he learned how little the Indian testimony could be relied upon; and further, Col. Steptoe spoke to me in the highest terms of Gov. Young; in my last conversation with him, previous to leaving the Valley.

In regard to Cols. Babbitt and Steptoe, I know that they were on the most intimate terms; and Mr. Babbitt's course in relation to the trial, was highly commendable; much credit is due him for his zeal, and unremitting labors in behalf of humanity, in the case of the two poor old Indians, whose only chance of defence, in their loneliness and ignorance, was through their counsel Col. Babbitt. I regret that I am not able to say as much for the counsel on the part of the people; for I presume he felt somewhat indignant at the repudiation of a certain code of morals, which had been attempted to be introduced among the femenine copper colors, by some of the professions, whose generous philanthrophy towards the benighted heathen led them to condescend to become their preceptors, in some of the arts of civilization; and these practical white teachers after luxuriating in the endearing charms of squaw-ology; having forgotten to redeem their pledges, were called upon publicly in court, by a red cyprian to fulfill their agreements; backed by her brother-in-law, the Chief Arrapene, as counsel; who took upon himself all the usual airs of the profession in imitation of our courts, he with great dignity, but rather unceremoniously, interrupted the speech of the eloquent gentleman in his plea, who was then addressing the court, and insisted upon the immediate payment of red paint, blankets and a looking-glass, the terms agreed upon, and assuming also the office of Judge and executive he threatened instant vengeance by his band of Utes, if not complied with.

This being a new case upon the docket, and the prosecution somewhat peremtory, the case also appearing clear to the court, and the defendents being present, and making no demur; the aforesaid articles were produced to the satisfaction of the plaintiff, whose counsel, Arrapene feeling a little elated in his new profession, said "I can talk as well as the white lawyers" and demanded one dollar for his fee, which being paid, he with his sister-in-law left the court.

The above was unquestionably a serious interruption to the learned gentlemen, just then pathetically addressing the court, in relation to Indian outrages; and must necessarily somewhat ruffle the equanimity of his feelings; and it would not be surprising if some charges in the shape of paint, blankets, looking-glass, &c., should be included in the mileage, or contingent expenses of some of our professional gentlemen, as it cannot possibly be that such luxuries can be enjoyed out of the small salaries, allowed by General Government.

The correspondent of the Times writes that the court charged the jury to the effect, that "they must either bring in a verdict of guilty of murder, in the first degree or clear them," &c. This I deny, in toto. The Court charged the jury, that, "if they were satisfied from the evidence given that the prisoners were guilty, they should bring in a verdict accordingly; if innocent of murder, they should so bring in a verdict; but if satisfied they were accessories to the crime their verdict should be in accordance." I must here say, that much credit is due to Chief Justice Kinney, for the able manner in which he presided in this case. I will admit that such a charge as the correspondent refered to, was asked of the court by the counsel for the prosecution; but no such charge was given; for Chief Justice Kinney is too well versed in law, to be swerved from his duty by such suggestions.

I will now call your attention to that portion of the article in which the correspondent states that he was present at the trial and does know there was a special agent sent there by Gov. Young, to communicate with the jury, "this agent, he says, was one Huntington, what communication said Huntington brought to the jury, he does not say, I was there myself during the trial; but never heard anything of this until I saw it in the Times; but this I can say that this same Huntington, is, and has been for several years employed by the General Government as Indian interpreter, and was at that time, and upon that occasion, employed by Doctor Hurt, the Indian agent for Utah.

The writer also states, as a notorious fact, that Brigham Young commanded Mr. Carrington, the Prosecuting Attorney for Salt Lake county, to wrest the prisoners from the hands of Col. Steptoe. The circumstances connected with this I am also acquainted with, having received the particulars from Col. Babbitt and Mr. Huntington; and from the little regard for truth displayed by the correspondent, I feel compelled to relate it. You will bear in mind, as I stated before, that one of the prisoners was a female; these Indians were all confined in the soldiers' barracks, and a few days after Mr. Huntington and Col. Babbitt were sent for by the husband of this squaw, who stated to them, as they were there chained down as prisoners, that his wife was ravished by the soldiers before his eyes, and wanted to know if this was the way that white men treated their prisoners.

As soon as Col. Steptoe learned of this, he at once removed them, and Col. Babbitt, applied to Judge Shaver for a writ of habeas corpus, which was also the duty of their counsel; as the Indians were held in prison, out of the district in which the crime was committed, for which they were on trial. This writ, however, was denied by the Court upon the grounds that the evidence was not properly before them. This last I had from Judge Shaver himself, and I know that Gov. Young had nothing to do in the matter. But justice demanded that those prisoners should be removed from that den of infamy and corruption.

The writer in the Times may think it all right to subject the poor ignorant Indians to violence and shame in an enlightened civilized country like our own. But this much I can say in his behalf, that for his unprincipled falsehoods in relation to this trial, and of Gov. Young and the people of Utah, he is unworthy to be classed with honorable men, or admitted into decent society. I will not assert, but appearances strongly indicate, that he is one of those men who bear upon their persons the indelible impress of a corrupt association with those very Indians that called forth publicly from Governor Young the just and scathing rebuke, about which the writers in the Times and Herald were led to so unwarrantable an attack upon a people whom these brutes had sought to corrupt and reduce to their degraded standard of morality; and this, no doubt, was the cause of their writing their falsehoods to the above named papers, in the hopes of covering their infamy.

I have more things to communicate; but as I am afraid that I have already trespassed too far upon your columns, I forbear for the present. Yours, &c., THOMAS S. WILLIAMS.

European News.

THE Atlantic arrived about 8 o'clock on Wednesday morning last, bringing news rather more important than we have had lately. We give the following summary from the Eagle:

"The news comprises three distinct successes of the Allies.

Firstly, the French in sanguinary conflicts, lasting whole nights of the 22d and 23d, took and retained an important position of defence, or place d'armes before Sebastopol. Not fewer than 8,000 men were killed or wounded by the bayonet mostly.

Secondly, the Allies made rapid advances and seized and retained the Russian lines on the Tchernaya, without much loss to the former, the Russians retreating to the hills.

Thirdly, the Allied secret expedition has obtained easy possession of Kertsch, and command the Sea of Azoff, in which are now fourteen Allied steamers.

The Russians, on the approach of the Allies, blew up the fort, and burned four steamers, thirty transports, and half a million sacks of breadstuff.

France and England decline further conference at Vienna.

LATEST.—The French have established a camp at Tchorgoun.

It is said that Belgium will furnish 20,000 men.

Hopes of peace prevail.

Baring quotes consols money 92 1-8, 1-2, and 83 to 1-8, but others quote 92 7-8.

Money abundant.

Liverpool cotton excited, advanced half-penny, with sales of 150,000 bales.

Breadstuffs dull.

Provisions better."

THE WAR.

The English and French Governments have received the following brief but accurate accounts:

Lord Raglan writes:

CRIMEA, May 27, 1855.

We are masters of the Sea of Azoff without a casualty. The troops landed at Kertch on her Majesty's birth-day, and the enemy fled, blowing up their fortifications on both sides of the Straits, and destroying their steamers. Some vessels and fifty guns have fallen into the hands of the Allies.

WAR DEPARTMENT, May 28—10:30 A. M.

Lord Panmure presents his compliments to the editor of the Times, and begs to inform him that further intelligence has been received from Lord Raglan, announcing that Lieut. General Sir George Brown had reached Yenikale at 1 P. M. on the 25th inst., and that the day before he destroyed a foundry near Kertch, where shot, shell and Minie balls were manufactured.

In the advance Sir George Brown had placed the French on the right, the English on the left, and the Turks in reserve.

We have also received the following from the Secretary of the Admiralty:

ADMIRALTY, May 31—6:16 P. M.

A telegraph dispatch has just been received at the Admiralty, with the intelligence that on the 27th of May, on the appearance of the Allied squadron before Berdiansk, the Russians burnt four war steamers and considerable stores of corn.

On the 28th the forts of Arabat were bombarded and the powder magazines blown up. One hundred and six merchant vessels have been destroyed, and only one small Russian steamer remains in the Sea of Azoff.

The Paris Moniteur says:

May 27—9 A. M.

The expedition to Kertch and Yenikale has been attended with complete success.

The enemy fled at the approach of the Allies; they blew up their powder magazine, destroyed their batteries, and burnt their steamers.

The Sea of Azoff is occupied by the Allied squadron.

SEA OF AZOFF, May 29, 1855.

The expedition has perfectly succeeded.

The batteries on the coast of Kertch and Yenikale are in our power.

The Russians burned three of their steamers, and some thirty transports and trading vessels. As many were captured.

In the evening we entered the Sea of Azoff.

The Russians burned their magazines at Kertch, which contained 160,000 sacks of oats, 360,000 sacks of corn, and 100,000 sacks of flour.

The Times correspondent says:

PARIS, Friday, June 1—7 A. M.

On the Queen's birth-day the Allied expedition arrived off the Straits of Kertch.

The troops landed and ascended the heights, and the small steamers went to Kertch.

The Russians blew up their fortifications and fled, after destroying several ships, and very large quantities of wheat, flour and oats.

Thirty vessels were burnt, thirty taken, and fifty guns.

Reinforcements were daily arriving at Constantinople.

The occupation of Galatz, and an attack upon Ismail and Reni are confidently spoken of.

The Moniteur has the following:

The Minister of Marine has received the following dispatch from Vice Admiral Brust:

STRAITS OF KERTCH, May 29, 1855.

Commander Lessiges, of the Lucifer, and his colleague, Captain Lyons, of the Miranda, announced that, on the 25th of May, the allied flotilla sent into the Sea of Azoff having appeared before Berdiansk, the enemy set fire to four of their steamers and to large storehouses.

On the following day the Bay of Arabat was visited, but no vessel was seen. The allied flotilla exchanged a brisk cannonade with the forts, and one of its shells blew up a powder magazine. In three days one hundred and three merchantmen have been destroyed by the cruisers of the Allies. The Russians have only one small steamer of thirty horse power left in the Sea of Azoff.

WAR DEPARTMENT, May 31—11:30 A. M.

Lord Panmure presents his compliments to the Editor of The Times, and begs to inform him that intelligence has been received from Lord Raglan, dated the 26th instant, stating that Sir George Brown, reports on the 28th, that the troops continued healthy; that five vessels laden with corn had run into Kertch, ignorant of the place having been taken, and were captured; and that the number of guns taken by the Allies exceeds 100.

Matters continue much the same in the Crimea. Troops healthy.

So much for the bare facts. The consequences resulting therefrom are still to be estimated. The Russian army in the Crimea is thereby cut off from all the supplies derived from the eastward and from Southern Russia.

The Monituer publishes the following dispatches received by the Minister of War from Gen. Pelissier:

CRIMEA, May 25—10 P. M.

To-day we have occupied the line of the Tchernaya. The enemy, who were not in force, offered little resistance in disputing the ground, and retreated rapidly into the hills.

We have definitively established ourselves in the works carried during the nights of the 22d and 23d.

An armistic was agreed upon for burying the dead, and we were enabled to form an estimate of the enemy's losses. They must be about 5,000 or 6,000 men killed and wounded.

MAY 26—10 P. M.

The enemy has not made any demonstration either in front of the place or against our lines on the Tchernaya.

The works of fortification at Kamiesch are progressing.

The sanitary condition of the army continues good.

FRENCH RECONNOISANCE.—A dispatch from Varna, dated May 31, says that on the 24th of May the French made a reconnoisance across the Tchernaya with 35,000 men, and established a camp at Tchorgoun.

Two thousand men of the Turkish contingent had arrived in the Crimea.

The French have taken 1000 oxen at Kertch.

A BELGIAN CONTINGENT.—A dispatch from Paris, dated May 31, says that Belgium is to furnish a contingent of 20,000 men, the consent of the Chambers being first obtained.

THE BALTIC.—BERLIN, June 1.—The Princess Alice arrived yesterday at Dantzic with the mails.

The fleet is to anchor sixteen miles below Cronstadt. The health of the fleet is very satisfactory.

VIENNA, May 31.—The "Oesterreichische Zeitung," under date of Constantinople, May 24, has the following dispatch: "100,000 allied troops are about to attack the Russians at Inkermann. 18 steamers are cruising in the Sea of Azoff."

DISPATCH FROM GEN. PELISSIER.—The Monituer, of this morning, contains the following dispatch from the Crimea, dated May 30: "I have news from Kertch to the 29th. All goes on well. The flotilla of the allies had returned from the Sea of Azoff. It destroyed 106 merchantmen at Berdiansk. A strong garrison left Yenikale assures us the possession of the Straits. The expedition has captured 90 guns of different calibre.

CAPTURE OF KERTCH.—VARNA, May 28.—On the Queen's birthday the Allied expedition arrived off the Straits of Kertch. The troops landed and ascended the heights, and the small steamers went up to Kertch. The Russians blew up their fortifications and fled, after destroying several ships and very large quantities of wheat, flour and oats. 30 vessels were burnt, 20 taken, and 50 guns. Reinforcements were daily arriving at Constantinople. The occupation of Galatz, and an attack upon Ismail and Reni, are confidently spoken of.

Intelligence has been received from Raglan, announcing that Lieutenant General Sir George Brown had reached Yenikale at one P. M., on the 25th instant, and that the day before he destroyed a foundry near Kertch, where shot, shells and Minie balls were manufactured. In the advance, Sir George Brown had placed the French on the right, the English on the left and the Turks in reserve.

SEA OF AZOFF, May 25.—The expedition has perfectly succeeded. The batteries on the coast at Kertch and Yenikale are in our power. The Russians burned three of their steamers, and some thirty transports and trading vessels. As many more were captured. In the evening we entered the Sea of Azoff. The Russians burnt their magazines at Kertch, which contained 160,000 sacks of oats, 360,000 sacks of corn, and 100,000 sacks of flour.

OCCUPATION OF THE TCHENAYA.—The following dispatches have been received by the French Minister of War, from Gen. Pelissier:

CRIMEA, May 25, 10 P. M.—To-day we have occupied the line of the Tchernaya. The enemy, who were not in force, offered little resistance in disputing the ground, and retreated rapidly into the hills. We have definitely established ourselves in the works carried during the nights of the 22d and 23d. An armistice was agreed upon for burying the dead, and we were enabled to form an estimate of the enemy's losses. There must be about 5000 or 6000 killed and wounded.

RUSSIA.—Prince Menschikoff, whose death has been so often reported, arrived at St. Petersburg about a fortnight ago, and was received with the utmost kindness by the Emperor, who presented him to the Empress as one of the most devoted servants of the State.

Letters from Southern Russia state that all the Russian reinforcements, now on their way to the Crimea, have received counter orders to rendezvous at a camp near Odessa. Fears are felt that the city will soon be attacked by the Allies, and that success would be infinitely easier than against Sevastopol; defensive works were in course of construction. The emigration from Odessa into the interior was augmenting, and the authorities were not so opposed to it as formerly. The blockade was strictly maintained.

The Emperor of Russia has been visiting in detail all the works of defence both old and new at Cronstadt. His Majesty, it seems, was quite satisfied with all he saw, and having warmly embraced his brother, the Grand Duke, and addressing the officers round him, said that "the eyes of the whole world were again directed towards Cronstadt, that impregnable key to St. Petersburg, that advanced post of the fortress of Peter and Paul, that other Sevastopol, which would in its turn know how to brave all the attacks of the enemy," His Majesty presented each soldier with a ruble (about $1.)

Advices from St. Petersburgh to the 29th state that there is now a strong party in favor of the conclusion of peace. It is stated that the troops now in Sevastopol number about 50,000 and that the place is provisioned for eight months.

Respecting strategetic movements, it was said that the Russian government had given orders to retire slowly before the Allies, not risking a general engagement.

A strong diplomatic assault was reported to be in preparation upon the German Courts, especially Austria.

The Russian government has issued a supplementary ukase, which commands all the peasants in the State dominions, from 30 to 35 years of age, to be included in the levy lately ordered in the 17 Western Governments. The Emperor Alexander, in a speech to a deputation of the inhabitants of Cronstadt, said: Pray the Almighty to grant us peace and trade will flourish again.

CANROBERT'S FAREWELL.—The following is General Canrobert's address to the army on giving up the command to General Pelissier:

Soldiers—General Pelissier, Commander of the First Corps, assumes from this day's date the chief command of the army in the East.

The Emperor, by placing at your head a General accustomed to great commands, grown old in war and in the camp, has wished to give you an additional proof of his solicitude, and to prepare still more the successes, which, believe me, shortly await your energetic perseverance.

In leaving the exalted position where circumstances and the will of the sovereign had placed me, and where you maintained me in the midst of severe trirls by your warlike virtues and that confiding devotion with which you never ceased to honor me, I do not separate myself from you; the happiness of taking a closer share in your glorious fatigues and your noble labors has been granted to me, and it is altogether, under the skilful and firm guidance of the new Commander-in-chief, that we will continue to fight for France and for the Emperor. CANROBERT.

Headquarters before Sebastopol, May 19.

DEFEAT OF THE RUSSIANS.—The Moniteur publishes two despatches from General Pelissier, dated the 23d and 24th ult. In the first the General thus expresses himself: "The enemy had formed between the Central Bastion and the sea a large place d'armes, where they proposed assembling considerable forces to make important sorties against us. In the night between the 22d and 23d we attacked those works, which were defended by nearly the whole of the garrison. The combat was fierce, and lasted nearly the whole of the night. We carried and occupied half of the works. I hope to be able to announce to you to-morrow that the remainder have been carried the following night."

In the other despatch General Pelissier says—"We last night very successfully carried the remainder of the works we had attacked on the previous evening. The enemy, whose losses were enormous the night before, did not make so stout a resistance. Our loss, though considerable, was much less. The allied armies to-day cordially celebrated together the birth-day of her Majesty."

Prince Gortschakoff writing on the 23d says—"Last night we were attacked in a thick fog by seventeen battalions of the Allies. The battle lasted all night. Our loss is 2500 men—they fell mostly by the bayonet."

SWEDEN.—We hear from Stockholm, under date of May 13th, that great preparations are making for war, and that fresh recruits are being enlisted and exercised as fast as they can be procured. Troops of men are to be seen marching through the streets, in the highest possible spirits, singing their national songs. The construction of cannon boats is also carried on with a most extraordinary activity, and from the earliest dawn until late at night the dock-yards ring with the sound of hammers.

HOLLAND.—The States General have it in contemplation to abolish the duty on flour, meat, butter and coals, and to levy a tax on expenditure instead of income, as had been previously intended.

The duty on spirituous liquors is to be increased 100 per cent.

SPAIN.—Advices from Madrid of the 30th of May state that the insurgents at Caspi and Alcanitz were defeated on the 28th, at Valonquiza. The two leaders and a cure were shot. The other provinces are tranquil. The debate in the Cortes relative to the extraordinary powers demanded by the Ministers, continues.

FRANCE.—The strikes amongst workmen in many parts of the country are assuming a rather serious aspect. The connexion between the strikes and the dearness of living is the ugliest feature in the business. People remember that 1830 and 1847 were also years of great scarcity.

The Moniteur on Saturday contained a circular dispatch of the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, in reply to Count Nesselrode's recent dispatch.

On Saturday 105,000 persons visited the Paris exhibition.

Marshal Harispe died on the 26th ult., at Bayonne, at a very advanced age.

All the officers of the French Emperor's household who went to Constantinople to make preparations for the Emperor's intended journey to the East have returned to France in the Simois. The Emperor has abandoned his project.

CHINA.—From Shanghai we have dates to tho 9th ult. All was quiet there, and the troops having been withdrawn to Nankin, the country around was resuming its former tranquility, and the city was being fast rebuilt. The Nankin rebels had commenced the season's operations by an inroad into the green tea districts, and the capital, Kwei-chow-foo, had fallen into their hands.

Since the defeat sustained by the rebels at Whampoa a considerable portion of them spread themselves about the coast, committing all kinds of depredations, and even attacking foreign flags.

In consequence of this an expedition, consisting of her Majesty's steamer Hornet and the brig Bittern, accompanied by the boats from her Majesty's ships Winchester, Sybille and Spartan, was sent against them, and succeeded in doing considerable execution. About 20 junks were taken or destroyed, few of their crews escaping. The most inveterate hostility was shown to them by the people on shore, who killed all who fell into their hands.

Another enemy has now to be contended with by the people of Canton in the shape of famine. Very great distress is felt by the poorer classes, and food riots are anticipated.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

BY TELEGRAPH FROM LONDON TO LIVERPOOL.

LONDON, Saturday morning, June 5.

THE BALTIC.—MEMEL, May 26.—When the war steamer Driver was sent into the Baltic ports to serve the vessels lying there with the official notice of the blockade, she found amongst others the American ship Samuel Appleton, of Boston, which she also served with a warning to clear out within six days. A day or two afterwards, being out cruising, she fell in with the Appleton, and an officer was sent on board to examine her papers. They were found perfectly in order, whereupon the officer demanded to see the bills of lading. The American captain objected to this, and began to make difficulties which excited the suspicion of the British officer, as he insisted on their production, which was at length complied with, when it turned out that the Appleton had just landed at Baltish Port 50,000 rifles and 10,000 revolvers, besides 800 bales of cotton as the ostensible part of the cargo. The ship was carefully overhauled, but nothing contraband of war was found on board. The Appleton entered the Sound on the 15th of March, and arrived at Baltish Port on the 12th of April.

THE CRIMEA.—At an Assembly of General Officers, summoned for the purpose, Canrobert communicated to them with a noble simplicity, the change in the command which was about to take place, and transferred his powers to General Pelissier. Canrobert immediately after assumed the command of his division.

The Vienna papers publish a Consular dispatch from Varna, according to which, the number of allied troops landed at Kertsch, under Gen. Brown, was 20,000. The advance on the Tchernaya, effected on the same day, was made by 35,000 men.

A French private dispatch, also from Varna, states that the Allies are in possession of Tcherguna, on the right bank of the river, and that two Russian batteries and several battalions, detached from the north of Sebastopol, were advancing to support the retiring force.

The Chimborazo and S. Curling's Passengers.

LATE on Saturday night, the 3rd inst., from five hundred to six hundred souls of Saints arrived here by the excellant and commodious steamboat Amazon, under the Presidency of Elder Edward Stevenson. This company was composed of the passengers by the ships Chimborazo and S. Curling, about an equal number of each company. About one hundred arrived on Thursday the 7th inst., by the steamboat Gibson, in charge of Elder Thurston. The balance of the companies are remaining in New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, and other places between this city and New York; the most of whom will doubtless make their way to the Western country as soon as circumstances will permit.

We shipped on Monday, the 4th inst., about one hundred and forty passengers on the Ben Bolt, for Atchison, including about eighty P. E. Fund passengers, who left about 10 o'clock P. M., in charge of Elder Stevenson in company with Elder Jeremy, late of the Presidency of the Welsh Mission.

On Friday, the 8th inst., we shipped on the Amazon, for Atchison, about three hundred passengers including about two hundred in charge of the P. E. Fund company. The whole company is placed under the Presidency of Elder Israel Barlow; Elder Willis, Secretary, late Missionary in India.

About three hundred of the ships' company above named, are in this city awaiting orders from the P. E. Fund Company's agents. About two hundred are encamped a short distance from the city, on a fine open country, and in a healthy location, where they are permitted to enjoy the luxury of living in tents in the real Oriental and Patriarchal style. This company is under the Presidency of Elder Andrew L. Lamoreaux, late President of the French Mission, who has brought with him from that Mission upwards of seventy Saints, who are now mostly in the St. Louis camp of Israel.

Elder John S. Fulmer arrived here on Monday evening, having received and forwarded the several ship's companies—Siddons, Juventa Chimborazo, and S. Curling. He has satisfactorily arranged the P. E. Fund company's business, and is now preparing to ascend the river and to lay hold of the P. E. Fund Emigration at Atchison, and superintend its movements from that point to Salt Lake city.

SLACKED lime at the rate of one bushel to the acre, sowed on the wheat immediately after a shower, or while the dew is on, about the time the wheat is heading out, is said to be an effective preventive against the depredations of the weevil.

Price of subscription, $5 in advance.

THE ST. LOUIS LUMINARY.—A weekly paper lately started at St. Louis. It is a very neat paper, full of useful information, and especially interesting to the Saints, to whom we recommend it. It is ably edited by Elder Erastus Snow, one of the Twelve Apostles, and President of the Stake of St. Louis. We recommend it to all lovers of truth.

Price of subscription, $2 in advance.

Subscriptions can either be sent to THE MORMON office, or to the editor of the Luminary, St. Louis, Mo.

Richards, one of the Twelve Apostles, and President of the European Church.

Price in England, one penny, or two cents. The law of postage between England and the United States is, that two cents on each paper shall be prepaid in each country, and two cents after the arrival.

Price of subscription, including foreign postage, $2.25, in advance, sent to the address of subscribers. Elder Richards has requested us to act as agent, but has not given us the terms. The above is the nearest approximate that we can arrive at without instructions.

The subscriptions can be sent to us, and we will immediately forward the names and address.

Published at 36 Islington, Liverpool, and 35 Jewin street, City, London.

Besides the above, there is a paper published in Australia, another in Bombay, one in Switzerland, one commencing on the Sandwich Islands, one in California, and one in Cincinnati; besides a host of minor publications.

COL. KINNEY.—This gentleman's case came up before the United States District Court last week, but when called for he was not there. It is supposed that he has gone on another vessel and left his bail to take care of itself. From the California papers we learn that the Fillibuster Walker, who made so signal a failure in California sometime ago, has left California with an expectation to meet Col. Kinney, and that another party was to leave New Orleans to unite their forces in Nicaragua.

HIGHLY SPICED.—The New York Herald recently contained an article on "Flogging Criminals," whereupon the Tribune observes, that for once that paper treats of a subject it fully understands—its editor having been nine times publicly horsewhipped.

Mormon Books.

WE have at last received our Books from Philadelphia, and are prepared to supply orders.

To the Saints Scattered Abroad.

As there will shortly be many of our brethren here from Europe who will be in want of employment, in various trades and occupations, you are requested to send to this office, directions whereby we may know where to send those that are in need of employment, on their arrival in this country.

Those of the Saints who have not already reported, are requested to report themselves through their presiding officers or individually to this office by letter or otherwise, as soon as circumstances will admit.

Letters must be post-paid.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World. J. T.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; 'without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions á son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier á notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire á l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systémes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaitre que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.

The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Suggested on Reading the First of "Spencer's Letters."

BY MISS E. R. SNOW.

"My heart is fixed"—I know in whom I trust.
'Twas not for wealth—'twas not to gather heaps
Of perishable things—'twas not to twine
Around my brow a transitory wreath,
A garland deck'd with gems of mortal praise,
That I forsook the home of childhood; that
I left the lap of ease—the halo rife
With smiling friendship's soft and mellow tones—
Affection's fond caresses, and the cup
O'erflowing with the sweets of social life,
Where high refinement's richest pearls were strew'd.

Ah no! a holier purpose fir'd my soul—
A nobler object prompted my pursuit:
Eternal prospects open'd to my view,
And hope's celestial torch within me burn'd.
God, who commanded Abraham to leave
His native country, and to offer up
On the lone altar, where no eye beheld
But His who never sleeps, an only son,
Is still the same; and thousands who have made
A covenant with him by sacrifice,
Are bearing witness to the sacred truth.
Jehovah speaking? Yes, as heretofore.

The proclamation sounded in my ear—
It touch'd my heart—I harken'd to the sound,
Counted the cost, and laid my earthly all
Upon the altar; and with purpose fix'd
Unalterably, while the spirit of
Elijah's God within my bosom reigns,
Embrac'd the "Everlasting Covenant;"
To be a Saint among the faithful ones
Whose race is measur'd by their life—whose prize
Is everlasting, and whose happiness
Is God's approval, and to whom 'tis more
Than meat and drink to do his righteous will.

It is no trifling thing to be a Saint
In very deed. To stand upright, nor bow
Nor bend beneath the weighty burthen of Oppressiveness. To stand unscath'd amid
The bellowing thunders and the raging storm
Of persecution, when the hostile pow'rs
Of darkness stimulate the hearts of men
To warfare: to besiege, assault, and, with
The heavy thunderbolts of Satan, aim
To overthrow the kingdom God has rear'd.
To stand unmov'd beneath the with'ring rock
Of vile apostacy, when men depart
From the pure principles of righteousness—
Those principles requiring man to live
By ev'ry word proceeding from the mouth
Of God. To stand unwav'ring, undismay'd,
And unseduc'd, when the base hypocrite
Whose deeds take hold on hell, whose face is garb'd
With saintly looks, drawn out by sacrilege
From a profession, but assum'd and thrown
Around him for a mantle to enclose
The black corruption of a putrid heart.
To stand on virtue's lofty pinnacle
Clad in the heav'nly robes of innocence,
Amid that worse than every other blast—
The blast that strikes at moral character,
With floods of falsehood foaming with abuse.
To stand, with nerve and sinew firmly steel'd,
When in the trying scale of rapid change,
Thrown side by side and face to face with that Foul hearted spirit, blacker than the soul
Of midnight's darkest shade, the traitor,
The vile wretch that feeds his sordid selfishness
Upon the peace and blood of innocence—
The faithless, rotten-hearted wretch, whose tongue
Speaks words of trust and fond fidelity,
While treach'ry, like a viper, coils behind
The smile that dances in his evil eye.
To pass the fiery ordeal, and to have
The heart laid open—all its contents prov'd
Before the bar of strictest scrutiny.
To have the finest heart-strings stretch'd unto Their utmost length to try their texture. To Abide, with principle unchang'd, the wreck
Of cruel tott'ring circumstances, which
Ride forth on revolution's blust'ring gale.

But yet, altho' to be a Saint, requires
A noble sacrifice—an arduous toil—
A persevering aim; the great reward
Awaiting the grand consummation, will Repay the price however costly; and
The pathway of the saint, the safest path
Will prove, tho' perilous: for 'tis foretold,
All things that can be shaken, God will shake:
Kingdoms, and Institutes, and Governments,
Both civil and religious must be tried—
Tried to the core and sounded to the depth.

Then let me be a Saint, and be prepar'd
For the approaching day, which like a snare
Will soon surprise the hypocrite—expose
The rottenness of human schemes—shake off
Oppressive fetters—break the gorgeous reins
Usurpers hold, and lay the pride of man,
And glory of the nations low in dust!

The Vienna Conferences.

THE RUSSIAN VERSION.

Under date of St. Petersburgh, April 28, Count Nesselrode has issued the following circular note to Russian diplomatists abroad:

"St. Petersburgh, April 28.

"Sir: The deliberations of the Conference of Vienna, without being finally broken off, remain suspended, the plenipotentiaries of France and of Great Britain having declared their instructions exhausted.

"To enable the imperial legations to form a correct judgment of the actual state of the negotiation, I make it a duty to draw a sketch of the whole, to state the results obtained, so as to point out the circumstances which, in arresting its progress, have been an obstacle to its success.

"My dispatch of the 25th of February made you acquainted with the spirit in which the instructions were conceived which the late Emperor Nicholas, of glorious memory, gave to his representatives when the Vienna conferences were about to be opened. Confirmed by our august master on his advent to the throne, those directions were faithfully acted upon by the plenipotentiaries selected by his Majesty to take part in that important negotiation. It comprised four questions:

"1. Immunities in the Principalities.

"2. Navigation of the Danube.

"3. Revision of the treaty of 1841.

"4. Guarantee of the religious and civil liberties of the Christian population subject to the domination of the Ottoman empire.

"Before entering into a discussion of these articles, the Russian plenipotentiaries made a formal declaration, as inserted in protocol 1. It is as follows:

"Prince Gortchakoff says—'It is only by entering into the details of each question that it can be ascertained whether we can come to an agreement or not. We have all the same starting point; I also hope we have the same object in view—namely, a general peace—a peace which can only be solid and of practical value if honorable to both parties. If from any quarter whatever it should be attempted to impose conditions upon Russia for that peace incompatible with her honor, Russia would never consent to them, however serious might be the consequences.'

"Such was the point of departure which the Russian plenipotentiaries, conformably to the orders of their court, clearly established at the very outset of the negotiation. No member of the conference contested the validity of that declaration of principle. Far from it; they each of them attested that it was far from the intention of their cabinets to make propositions hurtful to the dignity of Russia. On the strength of those assurances, the deliberations opened on the 15th of March.

"The sittings of the 17th and 18th of March were devoted to the question of the Principalities. It was settled honorably, loyally and disinterestedly, as the late Emperor wished it. In his august thoughts he had essentially at heart to maintain the populations of Moldavia, Wallachia and of Servia in the peaceful enjoyment of the religious and civil immunities which Russia had assured to them as the price of her blood shed for a century in the cause of her co-religionists.

"Their immunities remain intact. The protocols or Vienna 2 and 3 have served to consolidate their maintenance, under the collective guarantee of all the high contracting parties. By this guarantee the privileged regime of the Principalities enters the domain of the law of public right in Europe. Hitherto the care of watching over the execution of the engagements taken by the Porte in her quality of sovereign power fell upon Russia alone. Henceforth she will share that obligation with the other guaranteeing powers. This community of duties will put an end to that feeling of rivalry which the exclusive surveillance exercised by Russia gave rise to.

"For too long a time public opinion had denounced that state of things to the hatred of the stranger under the name of the Russian protectorate. This is the proper place to remind you that you will not find that expression used in any of our treaties—either in that of Kamardjii, or in that of Bucharest, or in the convention of Akerman, or in the treaty of Adrianople. There could be no question, therefore, of erasing from our acts a protectorate which never existed. Russia, in the past, had contracted a promise to gurantee the prosperity of the Principalities. The treaty of Adrianople confirmed that promise. The imperial cabinet has fulfilled it again to-day, and will fulfill it in the future, when, in common accord with all the powers, it places the immunities of the Principalities under the formal sanction of the law of public right in Europe.

"In this point of view the Vienna protocols deserve appreciation as a permanent pledge of security added to the bases upon which the political and national existence of the Danubian provinces reposes. The imperial cabinet has the satisfactory conviction of having loyally accomplished that result with the double object of assuring on the one hand the welfare of those countries, and on the other, of putting aside new causes of misunderstanding, rivalry and perturbation from politics in general.

"It was in the same spirit that the Russian plenipotentiaries discussed and solved the second question—that of the navigation of the Danube. It was the object of the sittings of the 21st and 23d of March.

"By protocols 4 and 5 it was agreed to apply to the navigation of the Danube the principles generally established concerning river communications by the acts of the Congress of Vienna. In virtue of that legislation a mixed commission will henceforth have the task of removing the material obstacles which have impeded the navigation, and on more than one occasion have given rise to the complaints of commerce.

"Having happily overcome the difficulties presented by the first two articles, the plenipotentiaries passed to the examination of the third, comprised under the denomination of revision of the treaty of the 13th of July, 1841.

"The Imperial Cabinet calmly awaited the explanation of the views the Western Powers held on this point. Hitherto their intentions, variously commented upon either by the press or in Parliament, had not been clearly defined in the preliminary meetings held at Vienna on the 28th of December and the 7th of January. At that period the representatives of France and England had limited themselves to a statement that, in the eyes of their cabinets, the revision of the treaty of 1841 ought to have the object of connecting in a more complete manner the existence of the Ottoman empire to the equilibrium of Europe and to put an end to the preponderance of Russia, to the Black Sea.

"As regards the arrangements for carrying out that object, the plenipotentiaries had declared that they depended too much upon the events of the war to allow the bases to be settled at once. Public manifestations in France and England, however, sufficiently betrayed the idea which lurked behind those words. It aimed at the destruction of Sebastopol. Doubtless, according to the calculations of the Cabinets of London and Paris, the military operations in the Crimea, going hand-in-hand with diplomatic deliberations, were to influence the issue of the Vienna Conferences.

"When they opened, the anticipation was not justified by events; and, therefore, the name of Sebastopol was never uttered. Russia is indebted for this silence to the heroic resistance of her brave generals, officers, sailors and soldiers. Their noble devotion has been the most victorious means of negotiation. The imperial cabinet deems itself happy in being able to say so. In its presence the combinations of our adversaries took another shape and assumed another tone. In the conference of the 26th of March the plenipotentiaries of France and England advanced the idea that it was for the two powers possessing coast territory on the Black Sea to concert together the means of equalizing their naval forces.

"Abstaining, however, from making a clear and precise proposal on the subject, they left it to the Russian plenipotentiaries to take the initiative of the measures which the Imperial Cabinet might deem it advisable to indicate spontaneously, with a view to establish a just equilibrium between the relative forces.

"Prince Gortchakoff and M. Titoff, without prejudging the intentions of their Court, thought it advisable to ascertain the Emperor's decision as to the new aspect given to the third point under discussion.

"Thus, on the 26th of March, the deliberations were adjourned until a reply could be received from St. Petersburgh. During the interval the plenipotentiaries of Austria and Russia agreed that it would be advisable to pass to the examination of the fourth article, relative to the immunities of the Christian populations in the East.

"As you are aware, the national feelings of Russia attaches so high and so serious an importance to this question, that the late Emperor had ordered his representatives to give it the first place in the text of the treaty about to be concluded. Doubtless all the powers, like Russia, recognised the grandeur of that interest, common to the whole of Christianity, in the unanimously avowed object of watching over, by a European act, the future welfare of the Christian populations of the East without distinction of form of worship.

"We regret to say that the plenipotentiaries of France and England, after receiving the instructions of their courts, refused to pass on to the examination of this question as long as the discussion on the third point was in a state of suspense. The formalities required to state and explain that refusal occupied the seventh and eighth sitting of the 20th of March and 2d of April.

"The ninth sitting, that of the 9th of April, was devoted to the verification of the full powers of M. Drouyn de L'huys and of Ali Pasha. The presence of the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, in giving an additional degree of importance to the labors of the conference, seemed to strengthen the hope entertained that they would lead to a pacific solution. That hope diminished in the subsequent meetings, which I have to describe.

"On the 16th of April, the Russian plenipotentiaries received the instructions they had demanded. They were based upon a simple and truer principle; the idea of submitting to a revison the treaty of 1841 did not apertain to the cabinet of St. Petersburgh. For its part, it would have been ready to renew the engagements in virtue of which the former legislation of the Ottoman empire, concerning the closing of the straits had obtained the sanction of a European act. The desire of modifying that state of things was evinced by the western powers. It was therefore for them to take the initiative in making the propositions for a revision, which, at the very onset, they made one of the preliminary bases of the negotiations for peace.

"The late Emperor, in authorizing his representative to take part therein, had deigned to provide him with precise instructions, approved by his Majesty at the end of last year, in the expectation of the opening of the Vienna conferences. For the sake of more clearness I will briefly state the exact tenor of those instructions. They start from the principle that the Sultan, as sovereign of the territory touching the two straits of the Dardanelles and of the Bosphorus, has a right to open or shut the passage. They are not opposed to throwing open the Black Sea to foreign flags, if the Porte itself admits the principle.

"In that case they deduced the natural consequence of a perfect reciprocity, so that the Russian vessels might be free to pass the straits, to enter the Mediterranean in the same manner that foreign ships of war might navigate the Black Sea. They, moreover, admitted the perfect liberty of the Sultan to exercise his sovereign rights to assign Turkish ports as harbors of refuge and provisioning for foreign vessels. On these conditions the late Emperor had authorized, eventually, his plenpotentiaries to give their assent to the abrogation of the principle of closing the Straits.

"Faithful to the idea of his august father, the Emperor Alexander II. prescribed to his plenpotentiaries to adhere strictly to the instructions with which they were already provided. In making that decision known to them on the 11th of April, His Majesty deigned to authorize them to continue the deliberation commenced in the sitting of the 26th of March, and to discuss the matter thoroughly, leaving to our adversaries the obligation of taking the initiative of a revision provoked by the Western Powers, and not by the Russian Cabinet. On the day after they received the instructions of their Court, Prince Gortschakoff and M. Titoff, in the 10th sitting, that of the 17th of April, put it to the plenipotentiaries of France and England to explain themselves as to the modifications their cabinets desired to have made in the treaty of 1841.

"Those modifications occupied the 11th and 12th sittings, of the 19th and 21st of April.

"In the first the plenpotentiaries of the western powers explained the plan concerted between their courts. In the second the plenipotentiaries of Russia presented a counter-project, based upon the instructions of the Imperial Cabinet.

"We will briefly analyze both.

"The first project read in the sitting of the 19th of April consists of ten articles. (Here follows the ten articles, already published in the papers presented to Parliament, Annex A to Protocol XI.) After this project was read the Russian plenipotentiaries, without entering into a discussion of the articles from 3 to 10, reserved to themselves to give a reply in the next conference as to the mode of solution proposed.

"The rapidity of telegraphic communications established between Vienna and St. Petersburgh enabled Prince Gortchakoff to bring the proposals made on the 19th of April immediately to the knowledge of the Imperial Cabinet. They differed essentially prima facie, from the very remarkable definition which Lord John Russell established on the 26th of March to serve as a rule for the solution of the problem which formed the object of the actual deliberation. Let us quote the words of the English plenipotentiary inserted in the text of Protocol 6:

"Lord John Russell, recalling the declaration made at the opening of the negotiation by Prince Gortchakoff, that he would consent to no condition incompatible with the honor of Russia, maintained that in the eyes of England and of her allies the best and only admissible conditions of peace would be those which, being the most in harmony with the honor of Russia, should at the same time be sufficient for the security of Europe and for preventing a return of complications such as that the settlement of which is now in question.'

"After this declaration, made formally in the conference of the 26th of March, Lord John Russell cannot be surprised that the propositions made on the 19th of April were not judged by the Imperial Cabinet as 'the best and only admissible ones,' to quote the words of the English plenipotentiary.

"In sooth, to limit the number of vessels in the Black Sea while the naval forces in the Mediterranean remained without control; to open the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus to France and England while closed to the Russian flag; finally, to stipulate the nomination of foreign consuls in our ports without the Imperial government having it in its power to refuse them the exequatur—a right enjoyed equally by France and England in the territories submitted to their rule—surely these were not conditions of a nature to assure the blessings of a solid and durable peace to Europe; for a transaction to be a permanent one between states must be mutually honorable, otherwise it is not peace, but an armistice.

"These considerations, appreciated in their exact truth, will complete the proof that in reality the combinations suggested by the plenipotentiaries of France and England would have offered fewer and less solid pledges for the peace of Europe than the plan drawn up by the late Emperor. He threw open the Black Sea freely to the flags of all nations; thereby he put an end to the isolation of the Ottoman empire, and to the apprehension caused in foreign states by the disproportion of the naval forces of the two powers who have territory in the Black Sea. By ceasing to be closed, it was made accessible to the surveillance and observation of all other powers. This did away also with the fear of the presumed danger to which the capital of the Ottoman empire might be exposed by the vicinity of our naval establishments.

"In a word, that plan, conceived by a policy at the same time provident and disinterested, would, on the one hand, have afforded a permanent guarantee of security to Europe, while on the other, the dignity of Russia would not have suffered in the slightest degree. On her side she would have obtained equal rights for her flag by the opening of the Dardanelles and of the Bosphorus. On both sides there would have been in the adoption of this plan the merit of a perfect reciprocity, which forms the basis of international relations, the immutable principle of justice which the sentiment of honor of every nation approves and respects.

"Penetrated with this conviction, our august master reiterated to his representatives the order of adhering to the execution of that plan as given in their instructions under the late Emperor.

"The telegraphic communications gave incredible celerity to the transmission of that order. Thus the plan presented at Vienna on the 19th of April, examined at St. Petersburgh on the 20th was declined by the Russian plenipotentiaries in the conference of the 21st.

"Having obeyed the orders of their court, they presented in the same sitting a counter-project, based upon their instructions, on the principle of throwing open the Straits and the free navigation of the Black Sea.

"In support of that plan they read—1, a memorandum drawn up with a view to develop the advantages of the combination proposed by the imperial Cabinet in the general interest of the balance of power in Europe; and 2d, an exposition containing the series of articles destined to convert the said project into a treaty. On the demand of the Russian plenipotentiaries, these two documents were annexed to Protocol 12. As they attest to all friendly powers the sincerity and the perseverance of the efforts of the Imperial Cabinet towards the accomplishment of the work of peace by every means compatible with the dignity of Russia, we have thought fit to annex these documents to the present despatch, so as to complete the relation of facts.

[Annexes A and B, as published in the papers presented to Parliament.]

"We regret to add that all the attempts of our plenipotentiaries failed to procure the adoption of the plan, and that they could not overcome the obstacles to its execution. The first obstacle was raised by the Ottoman plenipotentiary. He declared that his instructions prescribed the maintenance of the principle of the closing of the straits; that the Sublime Porte had ever considered that principle a guarantee of its independence; and that it wished it to be respected, with some exceptions, that might be stipulated.

"The plenipotentiaries of France and England declined to discuss to Russian counter-project, as being founded upon a basis entirely contrary to their instructions. Consequently, they declared that they were not authorized to discuss the details of the plan. In conclusion, they declared that their powers were exhausted. The Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs, declaring that his court had nothing more at heart than to contribute to the establishment of peace, expressed his regret that Russia should propose the principle of throwing open the Black Sea, while the other powers unanimously maintaied a contrary principle as necessary to the tranquillity of Europe.

"However, he did not regard the different modes of solution as exhausted, and he regarded it especially the task of Austria to endeavor to find means for a rapprochement. He hoped the conference would meet again as soon as one of the members had new propositions to make.

"The day after the sitting of the 21st, Lord John Russel left Vienna for London. His departure did not put an end to the conferences. The deliberations were resumed on the 26th of April, at the request of the plenipotentiaries of Russia.

"Their instructions, in authorizing them to give the assent of the imperial cabinet to the opening of the straits as a means of arriving at a general pacification emanated from the idea that a combination conceived in that spirit, to be carried out, ought first to have the adhesion of the Porte in its quality of sovereign of the territories on the straits. The declaration made by the Ottoman plenipotentiary in the sitting of the 21st put an end to that eventuality. It then remained for the Russian plenipotentiaries to use the latitude of their powers to arrive at a new solution, in accordance with the direct interests of Russia.

"From the very first, as we have said, the Imperial Cabinet, without provoking the revision of the treaty of 1841, was willing to renew its stipulations. It was only to exhaust the means of negotiation in its power that it thought fit to respond to the intentions of the Cabinets of Paris and London by proposing to throw open the Black Sea to the flags of every nation. Their refusal to enter into that means of conciliation completely dispensed the Imperial Cabinet from dwelling upon it. On the contrary, there were many reasons in favor of the principle of the closing of the Straits, which we had given up, not with a view to an exclusive policy, but out of serious considerations for the general welfare.

"After the rejection of the plan for the opening of the Black Sea, our plenipotentiaries were free to propose a new plan.

[The note here gives a summary of what passed at the Conference of the 26th of April. Protocol No. XIII.]

"On the 28th of April, M. Drouyn de L'huys left Vienna.

"Such is a resume of the negotiations up to the 28th of April. To preserve to this statement the character of simplicity and calmness which is suitable to an historical narrative, we have carefully avoided recrimination. It sufficed to establish the facts in their proper order, to make you acquainted with the intentions which the Imperial Cabinet made preside over each of the points under discussion. We will recapitulate them briefly:

"The first was one of political rivalry. The Emperor took the most exalted view of it; he resolved it in the interest of the welfare of the Principalities, the prosperity of which Russia had promised to guarantee. She has kept and will keep her promise.

"The second was connected with general interests of commerce. The Emperor has decided in favor of the free trade of all nations.

"The third concerned not only the general balance of power, but touched nearly the dignity and honor of Russia. It was thus that our august master judged it. The national sentiment of the whole country will respond to his decision.

"The fourth point was one of religious liberty, of civilization, and social order for all Christendom. In the eyes of the Imperial Cabinet it is that which ought one day to be placed at the head of a treaty of general peace worthy of being invested with the sanction of all the sovereigns of Europe. The plenipotentiaries of France and England refused to touch even this question of religious interest before that concerning the navigation of the Black Sea had been settled.

"After this reflection there remains nothing for us to add to the recital we have made.

"You are authorized to communicate this recital to the cabinet to which you have the honor of being accredited. It will judge which side was the most loyal in endeavoring to procure the re-establishment of peace; it will decide on which side the obstacles arose which have prevented that desirable work. If it finally fails by the rupture of the conferences, the impartial opinion of friendly powers will at least render the justice to Rusaia to acknowledge that she spared no efforts to assure the success of a negotiation destined to realize the deeply-expressed desire for a general pacification.

"Europe may count upon the constant and firm solicitude which the Emperor will always devote to that great interest, when the hour shall have come when Divine Providence will have enlightened the conscience of the cabinets whose implacable hostility, in presence of the mourning which covers an august tomb, calls upon His Majesty to defend with his drawn sword the safety and the honor of his country.

"Nesselrode."

The Cost of Government.

We issue, to-day, in a supplemental sheet accompanying this paper, and filling some twenty-four of our large columns, a list of the appropriations made at the late Session of Congress, and prepared and published agreeably to law. This document ought to possess interest for every reader, and ought to be examined by every one, as exhibiting in the main the objects on which the public revenue is expended. The aggregate of the classified heads of expenditure are as follows:

Civil, diplomatic and miscellaneous	$17,265,929
Army, fortification, military academy, &c.	15,571,496
Indian department, naval, revolutionary and other pensions	4,453,536
Naval service	15,612,091
Post office department	10,946,844
Ocean steam mail service	3,574,458
Texas debt	7,750,000
Total	$71,674,857

This vast sum of $71,674,357 is only the amount of specified appropriations. The great mass of contingent objects of expenditure, of which the sums were unascertained and could not be specified, may swell the grand total of the expenses of the year to perhaps seventy-five millions of dollars. Although the Government expenses must necessarily increase with the growth of the country and the corresponding necessities of the public service, one can hardly imagine the necessity of so vast an augmentation of the necessary expenses of the Government as seventy-five millions of dollars; and the immensity of the sum must arrest the attention of every intelligent reader.

The plain and frugal John Quincy Adams was assailed by his fierce opponents and defamers on the score of extravagance, because his prodigal administration required twelve millions a year; and committees of inquiry and retrenchment, and almost of impeachment, were raised in Congress to search out the corruption of so lavish a disbursement of the public money; and all sorts of reform and economy and "good times" were promised the dear people if they would only turn out the extravagant, aristocratic Puritan and put the reformers in. Well, they did so; but a yearly expenditure of seventy-five millions tells the rest of the story. This comparison is not, however, adverted to for the purpose of proving extravagance in one party more than another, but only to revive a signal instance of the unsparing injustice of party.—[National Intelligencer, May 12th.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1855.

What Do the Mormons Believe?

We often meet with persons who express surprise at seeing any one of intelligence and gentlemanly bearing professing a belief and actually a member of what is termed a Mormon community, or, more properly, a firm believer in the doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This surprise arises, not so much from a knowledge of what that belief or doctrine is, as from the general report and newspaper accounts of a people deluded and led away by designing men; in fact, an entire corrupt, wretched, and debased community. Therefore, when repeatedly meeting with bright and intelligent looking persons, who they cannot doubt have investigated thoroughly the principles before embracing them, they are perhaps led for the first time to doubt some of the charges brought against that people, and to question the veracity of gentlemanly editors, and even the correctness of some of the learned professions; and while meditating upon the possibility of some mistake among these gentlemen, he is led perhaps to review some of the reminiscences of the past upon which his opinion of this strange people has been founded, and to his astonishment, that notwithstanding the great weight of so much respectable testimony against them for years, he recollects that, although they have been despised, repudiated, disgraced, driven, murdered, and obliged to seek shelter in the wilderness among savages, and abused and slandered even there, they still live, exist, and thrive; a subject which a short time since only elicited ridicule, merriment, scorn, or most supreme contempt, is now actually raising up these very wise dispensers of intelligence to expressions approaching a doubt, that they had perhaps misrepresented this singular people, at least in one respect; that is, in their having sense enough to live through their misrepresentations, slanders, and falsehoods. And now they proclaim that Mormonism is endangering the Government; so much so as to require their Nestorian voices raised in tones of alarm to this wide-spread nation. Now these contradictory statements in relation to that people, connected with their evident energy, enterprise, and intelligence, which has been manifest in all their movements, naturally cause people to pause and inquire, Where is truth to be found in relation to them? Not certainly with those whose testimony has for years past proved false. Where then can evidence be found in which confidence may be safely placed? It scarce ever can be placed in man, but it assuredly can in principles, of which we ourselves are left to judge.

The Mormons believe in God and Jesus Christ his Son, and the Holy Ghost; they believe in the Bible as the Word of God through inspired men, given to man for his benefit and use, and (2d Epistle, Peter, 1 chap., 20 v.) "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation." They believe the Scripture—the whole Scripture is given to be understood; not changed and modified to suit individual convenience or tradition; but literally in its primitive sense; and no man has the right to alter what God has said. The Mormons believe in the Bible as the revealed will of God to man, and they obey all its precepts which the different denominations of christendom do not do; more than this, while the several sects assume to hold the Bible as their rule of faith, they not only widely disagree in its meaning, but actually repudiate, and, in some instances, ridicule many of its precepts. And although Jesus says (Math., chap. 28, 20 v.) "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever, I have commanded you;" yet professed modern teachers say you need not observe all things, for some things, they say, are non-essential. The last sounds much like the serpent's revelation in the Garden of Eden, "The day thou eatest thereof thou shalt not surely die." As conscientious believers in the Divine Writ, we earnestly protest against diluting the Word of God with the precepts of men. But more clearly to illustrate the discrepancies between the doctrines taught for the Gospel in the modern times, and the pure Gospel taught by Jesus and his Apostles, we will quote from the Scriptures some of its doctrines, and contrast it with the present opinion of men, prefacing it with the words of John, 2d Epistle, 9th v.: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God: he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and Son."

THE DOCTRINE OF CHRIST.	THE DOCTRINES OF MEN.
16th Mark, 17th v. "And these signs shall follow them that believe."	And these signs shall not follow them that believe, for they are done away and no longer needed.
14 John 12. He that believeth on me, the works that I do, shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go to the Father.	He that believeth on Christ shall not do any of the miracles and mighty works that he did for such things have ceased from the earth.
Math. 24th chap., 31 v. And He shall send His angels, and they shall gather His elect from the four winds, &c.	And there is to be no more ministering of angels, for such things are done away.
14th Rev. 6. And I saw an angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the Everlasting Gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, &c.	There is no need of an angel to bring the Gospel to them on the earth, for we have the Gospel already, and our missionaries preaching it; therefore what need of it being brought again?
John 5th, 39th. Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me.	Search the Scriptures, but let some able commentators explain them for you, for God is not able to make it clear to you.
12 1st Cor. 28 v. "And God hath set some in the Church; first, Apostles; secondarily, Prophets; thirdly, Teachers; after that, miracles, then gifts of healing helps, governments, diversities of tongues."	Though he has said, "If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God who giveth liberally and upbraideth not" Now we say that this wisdom is to be gained from men—not expected from God by asking; and though a man should say he has obtained wisdom from God, by prayer and supplication, unless it agrees with our creed, we count him an impostor and a believer in modern revelation; for this would be like the Mormons.

Apostles and Prophets are considered to be done away and no more needed; although it is said in Ephesians 4th, 11th, 12th, "For the perfecting of the Saints for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come into the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Thus the order and system of the Church and its doctrines are almost entirely thrown aside and considered useless. Though it was once thought to be necessary "that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive;" now it is not thought to be important, but every one take care of himself; and thus is the order of God repudiated by those that profess to be his servants, and many of the most glorious of the promises of God to man, are lost sight of, covered up by tradition and false teachers. And that which was declared by the Prophets of old should take place in the last days is made useless by spiritualizing, and many are only left to fear and tremble because of that which is coming upon the earth.

The Eastern War.

It seems as though the affairs of the Allies had received a sudden impetus, and that which has for some time past had much the appearance of sluggishness and apathy, has at once with renewed energy started into life and animation. We find important changes in rapid succession following each other, showing the presence in the Crimea of some leading, powerful mind displayed in the rapid and extended operations of the Allies, which has long been needed, and of so decisive a character as to give the highest satisfaction to all parties at home, and leave a deep impression upon the Russian Cabinet. This may be in part the result of conclusions upon the fallacy of all expections based upon any beneficial effects resulting from the Vienna Conference; but no doubt much is due to the bold and daring character of Pellissier, in giving additional force and vigor to plans, and promptness and energy to all the expeditionary movements of the Allied forces.

Lord Raglan has seemed to catch the inspiration, and after all is not the dolt he has been represented to be; for to him is attributed the signal success of the decisive move upon the Sea of Azoff, which may be considered the great master move of the Crimean War, cutting off the Russian supplies, and affecting the Russian hords in the most sensitive parts, as she is much better supplied with men than means.

The change in the prospects at the Crimea has made a visible change in politics in England. There is not now so loud a clamor for reform as formerly. Aristocracy, prosperous and conquering, is not aristocracy on the decline. Adversity makes men ill-natured, whilst prosperity covers a multitude of national sins. Men do not fight so much with principle as circumstances.

Elder Andrew L. Lamoreaux.

We are sorry to learn, by the St. Louis Luminary, of the death of our old and much esteemed friend Bro. Lamoreaux. We have known him for the last twenty years, and have always found him on the side of right, battleing for the truth.

He has lately been to our old stamping ground in France, where his labors we learn have been indefatigable in the cause of truth. He was on his way to the Valley after a mission of several years, to the bosom of his family and friends. The Luminary says:

"Elder Lamoreaux arrived in this city on Saturday evening June 2d, with several hundred passengers of the ships Chimborazo and S. Curling, including a company from the French Mission numbering seventy-four souls of Saints, who were brought mostly through the faith, perseverence and indefatigable energy of our deceased brother, whose whole heart was devoted to the interests of the Kingdom of God."

While in St. Louis, he stayed at the house of Elder James Hart, his former councillor in France, where every attention was paid him by hosts of friends anxious to manifest their respect; but earthly aid availed nothing and he departed on Tuesday the 12th ult., to act in another sphere, and associate with some of his old friends.

We sincerely sympathise with his family in his loss. A letter with a black seal will be a dreary messenger, in the place of an affectionate husband and an endeared and esteemed father. If there is any consolation however, in such events, it will be found in this. That it is much better to die in the faith with the harness on, than to forsake God and die as a fool.

Germany.

It is confessed by the most far seeing statesmen that the present complication of European interests cannot be fully resolved, until Germany, as a party concerned in the results of the present war, shall have entered actively into the contest. Russian supremacy in Europe may be regarded as a fact already accomplished. The few days Sir Stratford Canning was absent in the Crimea, sufficed for Russian intrigue to change the complexion of the Turkish cabinet. It is no temporary arrangement that will now suffice. England herself needs enlightenment before she will fully realize the question in all its bearings, accept the elements of which it is composed, and acknowledge that the ambition that would force inland nations to the sea, is but the national development of their energies and their resources. England has vowed, "to avenge the ambition her disapprobation could not restrain; and we have but to refer to the late debate in the House of Commons, to provide evidence how the first objects of the war have been realized, and the effects of diplomatists and statesmen made immeasureably to transcend these. Fear and revenge are the two primal motives. England is prepared for any alliance, any engagement that will aid these. She promises herself, what to cooler and more disinterested men, appears but a doubtful triumph. England and France are fighting against the principle of the historical development of the last three centuries, which they will be powerless to countervail without the assistance that Russia seeks to withhold from them, in the distracted aims and diverse counsels, and separate interests of the German cabinets. They must, however, unless peace shall very shortly be made at Vienna, be swallowed up. Principles long in action, and representing the East and West, have come into antagonism; we are not to look at the issue as the destruction either of the one or the other, but in the exhibit of some mediatorial power growing out of them, which shall again extend, as the branch out of its dual leaves, to some other opposing development, each succeeding development riper than the former, and reaching nearer to the fruits of civilization. Every great movement, we may be assured, is an attempt to achieve a higher state of national culture. Progress is only gained by conflict. On the one side, it is the principle represented in the Teutonic race; individual freedom and responsibility, founded on a noble idea of man, and not existing merely by external and compulsory laws; a free individuality which is the basis of what is called civilization and liberty, which does not seek, like Russia, to appropriate what it cannot reproduce; and the Sclavonic principle, which is the principle of centralization, or the negation by the absorption of individuality, being what we call despotism and barbarism. The Romans in uniting different nations fulfilled the spirit of their age; union was the first condition to civilization. In this union mutual hostility was lost, man and mankind became the prominent idea, that in itself fast militated against pantheism. Thus the way was prepared for the Christian religion which, becoming mixed with national ideas of centralization and conquest brought forth Popery. From the center of Europe, united only by the principle of a common consciousness of individual freedom, came forth the fresh Teutonic race to dispute Roman dominion, and for 600 years the contest was waged till the followers of Teut prevailed. They triumphed not by cultivation, but by the higher principle of civilization, free individuality. They expressed the chief principle of Christianity. Yet the conquest was not ended. There commenced the contest between the Roman principle of civilization, and conquest expressed in the Roman Church, and the Teutonic principle of free individuality. The history of the middle ages is the conflict of these antagonistic elements. Hence the battles between Emperors and Popes. Popery could not grant any reform; any free individuality. Free and honest conviction of the individual man—sincerity of conscience became the prevailing test.

Where the Teutonic race prevailed, in Germany, in England, in Scandinavia, Protestantism was triumphant; where the Romanic, Celtic, and Sclavonic races ruled, as in Italy, Spain, Austria, Catholics withstood Protestantism. We must regard, however, in this question, the political organization of Germany. Germany before the Reformation was not a centralized union like the Roman empire, but a confederation of different tribes; it had an Emperor, elected by Electoral Princes. It was the interest of the Pope to produce disunion amid these electors, each of whom struggled for ascendancy. To retain their influence, they were treasonably disposed, placing their nation first into the hands of the Pope, then into the French kings, and lastly into the hands of Russia. In 1806, hitherto unknown kingdoms appeared. This confederation afforded convenient scope for the designs of the Emperor of Russia. Yet when Germany was sinking into a stage of dissolution through the perfidy of princes, there arose among the people a strong feeling in favor of the unity of the empire, and for new, free, and political investigations, scientific advances—theories of human culture, centres, religious movement, free religious communities, general assemblies, confederations of religious societies, followed one on the other, opposed by priest and people. Then revolution afterwards attempted to reconcile the self-government of the nation with the domination of thirty-four absolutistic princes, giving the central power to a Hapsburg and Catholic prince. The people were not sufficiently prepared. The Democratic party, in leaning to the French school, made compromise with the hierarchy. Suffering has brought reflection, and conviction that the two cannot be reconciled.

The people are convinced, but not prepared. The historical principle of the Teutonic race, the secret of its glory, is also its weakness, because offering the greatest obstacle to unity. It is difficult to bring Germans into cordial co-operation, by reason of their theocratic scruples, their mental and social extravagances. Germany's noblest patriots—men willing to shed their blood and devote their genius, talents and energies to its salvation, are bound by these idiosyncracies.

Though the Papal antagonism is overpowered, the European countries formerly subject to Roman sway, having accepted the results of Protestant civilization, there has yet ensued a sort of Russo-Sclavonic despotism, repressing the native energy of the Teutonic nations, and compelling numbers to emigrate—to avoid all that is hateful in despotism. Men imbued with the principle of individual liberty, will always prefer to lose their nationality, than sacrifice their liberty. England, the leading nation of the Teutonic race, is, consequently, when disevering from consideration her commercial interests, the first against Russia. Despotism can only be effectually opposed by giving full play to superior principles of individual action than those it can combine. Therefore it is that the resurrection of Poland would be the guarantee for the peace of Europe, and therefore it is that fresh acquisitions of France, under her present regime, can never partake of a principle of permanency, or ever effectually oppose the force she would subdue.

These are simply reflections that may be deduced from cause and effect; the natural progression of nations, and the present social and political position of the Eastern world, changes may transpire, and providence control so as to change events contrary to human prescience or calculations; but that the Russians will be the great controlling Northern power ultimately we think there can be little question; however it may fare with Italy, Hungary, Poland, and other countries. Scripture too seems to favor this idea; and as the Lord generally works by natural means, he may make use of this natural Russo-principle, which has been gradually developing itself, to accomplish his designs in relation to the Asiatic and European nations. The Scripture itself indicates, by word of prophecy of unmistakable clearness, that the powers that now control the Eastern world shall resolve themselves into two grand opposing branches, the King of the North, in whom is found the hereditary heir of the Greek Empire, receiving the subjection of the Kings of the East, who shall by force, or fraud, or policy, range themselves under his banners; a prophecy, the accomplishment of which needs but that ascendancy of the Greeks in Turkey, which they already possess in numbers over the ruling race, and the union of the Greek Church under one common head, involving the transfer of the authority of the Patriarch of Constantinople to that of the Czar of all the Russias.

Europe in Mist.

The events now transpiring in Europe are pregnant with instruction. France is realising for itself the beau ideal of its national existence—the love of glory, from feasting on which it has been so long debarred. England, accustomed to class legislation and aristocratic sway, finds both political and social bonds loosening, though without any external demonstration. Whilst France is recalling her traditions of the Empire, England is losing her confidence in the past. Meanwhile Russia achieves the grandest triumphs of her policy in Europe and in Asia, in the accession of Mongolian territory and in the neutralization of the Teutonic race of Germany, which nature has opposed to the Sclavonic. Turkey, aiding christians against christians, waits but the hour of partition. Austria pursues her prudential policy, a policy not to be sacrificed to intangible objects. In viewing the elements of the present alliance, one cannot well avoid being struck with the discordant character of its ingredients. No sooner is a first grand success obtained, than the French, if official rumors are true, manifest a disposition to act independently. The plans of the French Emperor, so far as these lie beyond the present, do not consort with British interests. And were it otherwise, he will yet go where Great Britain will not follow him. The French are not likely properly to consider the little permanent hold they have ever been able to retain of acquired possession in a popular and civilzed country. There is that in the French nation which forbids amalgamation. There pertains to them a national individuality, which holds no comparison in him either with the people beyond the Elbe, or whom they come in contact with in Algeria. There exists no principle of assimilation. The conquests of Napoleon were conquests of force; and indeed France has never estimated moral power as influencing sufficiently the destiny of nations to be taken into account. The social revolution going on in England is something more complex than even the effervescences produced by alliances, or the sparks flying upward from the collision of hostile races, as the representatives of hostile principles. England does not know what she wants. She is like her grand army in the Crimea, in its connection with the Lords of the Admirality and the Ordnance and Commissariat Departments, possessed of an entensive and complex organization, any new movement is productive of universal derangement. National self-sufficiency, and the ignoring of the elements of the power possessed by other nations, has received the same castigations as befel Germany in the last series of her revolutions through too great individual self-sufficiency. England, clouded by her own greatness, will not be brought to consider properly the elements of greatness in other nations, or count on those in her policy; having more regard to kings and Cabinets than to people. And she is right in all this as respects the present, but she is fatally incapacitated for those large and comprehensive schemes which regard the future. Else had Hungary been saved, and Poland been reconstituted. Russia assumes the task of centuries, and is not beaten off when compelled to a temporary withdrawment of her advance. And so long as the Allies are moved by no other than their own selfish interests, caring not for the good of other races of men, will their views be contracted, and their best laid designs eventually thwarted.

Vienna Conference.

We have given the Russian version of the Vienna Conference in full on the first page; it is rather lengthy, but we thought, as it was a fair representation of Russian sentiment in relation to the all absorbing topic, the Eastern war, we would give it entire and let them speak officially for themselves, and our readers be their own judge in the matter. The other side, of course, have another version.

Capt. Gunnison and the Indians' Trial Again.

A STATEMENT was made by the correspondent of the Times to this effect, that Judge Kinney dismissed the Court, immediately after the finding of the jury; thinking it of no use to proceed under such circumstances as justice could not be obtained with such a jury.

We extract the following from a private letter of a United States Officer that will make the case a little different, that will show perhaps that Mormon injustice was not so much dreaded as 'Mormon justice. "The United States —— gave up to licentiousness, among the Indian women, and would have been indicted by the Grand Jury then in session, had not the Court suddenly adjourned." Although we know them, we don't give the names.

The respectable correspondents of the Times and Herald, and the spouting and noise they have made on this subject, remind us of the story of the Irishman who was going to be tried before the Court. "Arrah," he exclaimed "its myself that's in throuble, my poor mither, God save her sowl, she'll breake her hart entirely whin she hears of my fate, och, hone! och, hone! och maccre, Its myself that's in a poor fix.

The Sheriff hearing his cry said my dear fellow don't be afraid, don't take on so, you'll get justice in this Court.

"Justice, is it yer honor! faikes and that's the very thing I'm afraid of."

The following, which is issued as an Extra of the St. Louis Luminary, will be read with interest by numbers of our subscribers, who have friends in the Camps. It confirms our views already written on that subject, that there is more rumor than reality, and as it is written by President Snow, who is directly from the Camps, it may be relied upon. We are glad to learn that the military are on duty. If our companies are vigilant, we predict for them a safe journey across the mountains:

SAINT LOUIS LUMINARY—EXTRA.

SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 16, 1855.

Visit of the Editor to the Camps at Atchison.

Health of the Emigrants—Organization of Companies—Starting upon the Plains—Salt Lake Mails—Indian Depredations.

We have just returned from a three weeks' tour in the upper country, and too late to furnish our readers this week with more than a bird's-eye glance at the position of affairs on the frontiers, and the events of our tour.

The fine steamer F. X. Aubry landed us on the levee at Atchison, at two o'clock on the morning of the 29th ult., where we found Elder Glover, with part of his company, still on the levee, who had landed from the Equinox the previous day. After taking a morning nap, and breakfasting with Elder McGaw, we surveyed the town, and the few tents and detachments of companies still remaining on the old camp ground just back of town, and later in the day visited the general encampment at Mormon Grove—four miles west—which presented the appearance of a city of tents and wagons beautifully arranged in the open woodland, and covering several undulations. Our visit was emphatically one of business; but it proved equally one of pleasure.

The lowing of cattle—the din and bustle of camp—and the joyful greetings, were to us what martial music is to the soldier. Although we had allotted ourselves only three or four days in camp, the great amount of business relating to the P. E. Fund emigration, as well as the Danish and other independent companies, which required our personal attention, detained us until the 10th inst., and then it was with reluctance that we bid them adieu, to return to our duties in the city.

During our stay we organized four companies for the Plains, consisting of about fifty wagons each.

The first, under Captain Kinley, consisted chiefly of the emigrants from St. Louis, and other parts of the States. The second, under Captain Jacob Siechrist, embraced the Danish and part of the British independent company. The third, under Captain S. M. Blair, embraced the Texas Camp, and portions of the Saints from other parts of the States and adjacent Provinces. And the fourth, under Captain Richard Ballantyne, embraced a part only of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund emigration.

The first drew out and formed a separate encampment on the 1st inst., and soon were on their march for the mountains. The 2d were also moved out, and the 3d was moving out when we left, and 4th were preparing to follow soon as their outfits could be completed.

The general health of the camps was good, although several deaths have occurred in the Danish camp and among the passengers of the ship "Juventa," who had almost entirely escaped until they reached Atchison. Among the lamented dead of this company, we have to mention Elder Simpson long and favorably known among the British Saints, and Elder Bell, late President of the Malta Mission, and his wife.

The Saints who remain in camp are busily engaged plowing and planting, and thus laying a foundation for the sustenance of the poor that may be left. The merchant train of Messrs. Livingston, Kinkead & Co., of Salt Lake, passed near Mormon Grove, on the 2d inst., being the first of the season, and one month later than previous years. Several other merchant trains were being fitted out at Atchison and Leavenworth City. Our business called us by the way of Weston, Kansas and Independence, where on the 12th, we took passage on the "Polar Star," the universal favorite in the Missouri trade.

Up to the time of our leaving Independence no tidings had been heard from the Salt Lake Mail, due on the 30th ult. It was reported that the party with the April mail, outward bound, had been robbed of every animal at Devil's Gate, and fearful apprehensions were entertained for the safety of the party. Some early trains of California Emigrants are also reported to be stripped of all their animals.

Capt. Heath of the U. S. Army, direct from Fort Kearney, who was a fellow passenger down the river, informed us that the May mail, outward bound, with which was Hon. J. M. Bernheisel, had been safely escorted by a part of his command as far as Ash Hollow, and safely delivered to a like escort from Laramie. Dragoons have started from Fort Leavenworth to patrol the line, and keep Indians off the road.

The Ben Bolt, with a company of Saints, was just landing at Atchison, as the Polar Star left there, on the 14th.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, June 8, 1855.

On Saturday, a Mr. Gallineau, a Frenchman, arrived here from Seargeant's Bluffs, and states that "Four Bears," the Chief of the Kittle Band of Sioux, had just come in, bringing with him thirty lodges. That they left the main body of the Sioux at Bear Creek, coming, 300 miles west of Fort Laramie, twenty-five days since, and that at that time, the Sioux had 100 wagons, plenty of flour and meat, twenty women and children, and among them two negro women. From this we think they must have taken a Mormon train, bound from Salt Lake to Bear Creek, where we know they intended making a settlement this spring. Nothing was said of seeing white men among them, and we have no doubt they were all killed. Four Bears is in favor of peace, has been to Washington, and knows the power of the whites, and finding his nation determined on war, has come in with his small band.

Gallineau has for a wife, a daughter of Four Bears, and says he does not think his father-in-law would deceive him. Beside, Mr. Vaviteat, and all the French here, believe the report, and they have the best means of information.

The emigrants who passed here from three to four weeks since, have hardly had time to get beyond Fort Laramie, and we do not know of any trains leaving Independence or St. Joseph.

We very much doubt the above, as it would be very unlikely that the Sioux would be in the interior of the Snake or Black feet country, and it is not very probable that either of these tribes would be likely to admit the Sioux to so large a share of booty within their Territory, as both tribes are large and powerful and not generally inclined to be disinterested in sharing the spoils. In addition to the above it is not probable that a new settlement would be commenced as early, at such a distance from the main settlements of the Mormons, as the time requisite to bring news to Council Bluffs, the distance of 800 miles by Indians traveling and hunting with their familes, and moreover it is not stated whether the women and children are Indian or whites. After due consideration, we conclude this story to be much after the usual exagerations of border reminiscences.

Important.

We have heard a rumor, proceeding, it seems, from good authority, that at the last moment of the Conference at Vienna, the French Emperor sent in word, that if Austria did not bring in her decision within twenty-four hours, he would march 150,000 men into her territory.

News from Europe in Six Days.

The New York, Newfoundland and London Telegraph Company have made a contract with Messrs. Husted and Kroehl, submarine engineers, to remove the "Merlin Rock," lying in the centre of the entrance to the harbor of St. Johns, Newfoundland, which is the only obstruction to the entrance of the Collins and other large steamers into that port. There are now eighteen feet of water upon the rock at low tide; but as the Collins steamers draw twenty-three feet when loaded, the Telegraph Company have contracted to reduce the "Merlin Rock" to twenty-seven feet below mean low water.

When this obstacle is removed, it is probable that most of the European steamers will make St. Johns a stopping place, as it lies directly on their route, and about one-third of the distance from New York to Liverpool, so that a steamer from Europe at St. John's, Newfoundland, may have her news telegraphed to New York within six days from the date of her departure from Liverpool.

The contract with Messrs. Husted & Kroehl calls for the completion of the work by the first of September next.—N. Y. Sun.

RAILROAD CARS OFF THE TRACK, &c.—Cincinnati, June 12.—The passenger cars on the Cincinnati and Indianapolis railroad ran off the track to-day near Laurenceburgh. The locomotive and baggage car were badly smashed, but fortunately nobody was seriously injured.

It is understood that the Grand Jury will find a new bill of indictment against Arrison.

The river continues to rise at this point.

The weather is cool and showery, and the prospects of the crops continue fine.

THE Harrisburg, Pa., papers say that the late rains have wonderfully improved the prospect of a plentiful harvest. Never in the history of the oldest inhabitant, has there been a more flattering prospect; and if nothing further occurs, all kinds of fruit and grain will be as plenty in season as it is scarce now.

OFFICIAL accounts state the total number of lives lost in the earthquake at Broussa, February 26th, was 640,—namely; 445 in the first shock and 204 in the second. Besides this loss of life, one fifth of the city was destroyed by fire.

THE KINNEY EXPEDITION.—Baltimore, June 13.—The bark seized and taken into Mobile, on suspicion of being connected with the Kinney expedition, was the Magnolia. Her consort, the Amelia, escaped.

Indian Troubles—More Rumors.

THE Missouri Republican, of the 16th inst., published a letter, dated "Whitehead, Kansas, June 9th," stating that "an express rider had reached Great Nemeha Mission, on the 8th, with news, that Fort Laramie was in the hands of the Indians.

No particulars of the capture are given. The Indians were assembled at the Fort in great numbers.

Messrs. Nave and McCord, of Ash Hollow, had been robbed by the Indians of four hundred and twenty head of cattle, sixteen horses, wagons, mules, &c., leaving them entirely destitute."

This may be, or may not be; it is difficult for us, of course, to determine; we should rather be inclined to disbelieve than believe it, unless the parties having charge of the fort have deserted it, dispairing of reinforcements arriving. By the by, what has become of our army for the plains? Are they going to be a protection to the emigration, or will they need protecting themselves? Last year, soon after the massacre of the thirty soldiers by the Sioux Indians, Captain Cairns, who was going through with a company of fifty wagons, was called upon by the officer in command at the fort to assist in protecting the fort. Mr. Cairns said he would do so providing the United States would become responsible for his stock and other property in charge in case of accident. They declined; so he proceeded on his journey. He stated that he could protect himself and travel, and he thought they ought to be able to protect themselves in the fort; that with the near approach of winter he should not feel himself justified in having the property of the whole camp exposed without an indemnity. We don't think there is any need for the fort to be taken.

Mr. Frost, a gentleman from Missouri, and who holds the mail contract, and runs stages between St. Josephs, Mo., and Bluffs City, Iowa, called upon us the other day, and as he was recently from that district, we inquired of him as to his opinion concerning these rumors. He said that he believed these rumors were got up and circulated by interested parties, and were of doubtful origin.

We hope this is the case; but again we say, What are our military doing?

We have heard so many such rumors before that we must confess we are a little incredulous. If we mistake not, the military have started; if so, we should have something official in relation to this matter. On our way out here, last fall, we were again and again met by runners, who told us to return, and who stated that Fort Laramie was in the hands of the Indians. We passed it and visited it; but there were no Indians there. We met a detachment of three companies at Fort Carney, on their way to Fort Laramie. With those reinforcements, we think the Indians could not take it. The rumor may be true, and the Indians may have possession; but we cannot believe it without more evidence.

Since the above was written it will be seen that we were correct in our views. The military are acting as escorts for the mail, &c.

Ought Brigham Young to be Re-appointed Governor of Utah?

We have no hesitancy in answering this question, nor have we had any doubt how it ought to have been answered at any time since it arose. We think Governor Young ought to have been, and ought now to be, re-appointed. He has the capacity for the discharge of the office; nobody has successfully impeached his integrity in the discharge of it; he has the entire and implicit confidence of the whole body of the citizens of Utah; all those citizens, with perhaps not one exception, certainly without one exception among ninety-nine one-hundreths of the Utah population, are exceedingly desirous that he should be re-appointed. And, beside all this, residents in the Territory—men, the most of whom must be supposed to be free from improper bias—join cordially in recommending him as by far the most suitable man for Governor in the whole Territory. In proof of this last statement, take the following memorial:

To His Excellency Franklin Pierce,
President of the United States:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent that, Whereas, Gov. Brigham Young possesses the entire confidence of the people of this Territory, without distinction of party or sect; and from personal acquaintance and social intercourse, we find him to be a firm supporter of the Constitution and laws of the United States, and a tried pillar of republican institutions; and, having repeatedly listened to his remarks, in private as well as in public assemblies, do know he is the warm friend and able supporter of constitutional liberty—the rumors published in the States to the contrary notwithstanding—and having canvassed, to our satisfaction his doings as Governor and Superintended of Indian Affairs, and also the disposition of the appropriation for public buildings for the Territory; we do most cordially and cheerfully represent that the same has been expended to the best interests of the nation; and,

Whereas, His re-appointment would better subserve the Territorial interest than the appointment of any other man, and would meet with the gratitude of the entire inhabitants of the Territory, and his removal would cause the deepest feeling of sorrow and regret, and it being our unqualified opinion, based upon our personal acquaintance, which we have formed with Governor Young, and from our observation of the results of his influence and administration in this Territory, that he possesses, in an eminent degree, every qualification necessary for the discharge of his official duties; and unquestioned integrity and ability; that he is decidedly the most suitable person that can be selected for that office.

We therefore, take great pleasure in recommending him to your favorable consideration, and do earnestly request his re-appointment as Governor and Superintendent of Indian Affairs for this Territory.

Signed: J. F. KINNEY, Chief Justice U. S. Supreme Court Utah Territory.
E. J. STEPTOE, Lieutenant Colonel U. S. Army.
GEO. P. STILES, Associate Justice S. C. of U. S. for Utah Ter'y.
LEO. SHAVER, Assistant Justice for Territory of Utah.
HORACE. R. WIRTZ, Med. Staff Staff U. S. Army.
A. W. BABBIT, Sec'ry of Utah Territory.
STEPHEN B. ROSE, Sub, Ind. Agt. for Utah Territory.

GREAT S. L. CITY, U. T., Dec. 30, '54.

This petition was supported by the names of all the chief officers in the Territory, both civil and military, as also by the principal merchants and residents, whose names we omit for the sake of brevity.

Now, we regard this certificate as, upon the whole, an extraordinary testimonial. It is signed by all three of the Justices of Utah, by the Indian Sub-Agent, and by two officers of the United States army, one of whom is a physician, and the other is a Colonel, in command of a large body of troops now in the Territory. Can it be that corrupt and sinister motives or fear is operating on the minds of these gentlemen. Are these judges bribed, or this commander, with a little army at his back, intimidated? Are they not all likely to be men of discernment and men of honor? Would they put their hands to testimony which they disbelieved, or to be made tools of by others? What has induced gentlemen of their position and character to present themselves before the President as the warm defenders, supporters and advocates of Brigham Young? We scarcely believe of them that they are such fools as to have done this without knowing what they were about; or such knaves as to have done it, knowing that they were imposing a falsehood on the President and abusing the trust that was reposed in them, when they were elevated to the offices they hold. Any such supposition is nonsensical. The body of testimony in favor of Brigham Young's fitness for the Governorship of the Territory, and the suitableness of his appointment to it, which is furnished by the document signed by these gentlemen, is, we think, a higher recommendation for office than most men usually have, and all that any man ever need have.

But, it may be argued, the objection to Gov. Young is not a personal one. The objection is to the appointment of any Mormon. If a Mormon must be appointed, Young may be as fit as any other Mormon, and perhaps fitter. In this way, it may be attempted to sustain President Pierce in his refusal to appoint Gov. Young. But this argument, like all of the sort, proves too much. It assumes that Mormonism itself is obnoxious; and ought to be put under the ban of our government and its institutions. It is clear enough to us, however clear its contrary may be to others, that a community of 50,000 Mormons, with scarce a dissenter in their midst, ought, under our institutions, to be governed by a Mormon, if there is an undeniably fit man among them for Governor. It would be so, if we had in the Union a State peopled almost exclusively by Mormons—even if there were not a man in it with quite timber enough to be the Chief Magistrate. And it ought to be so in the territories. That is, as far as possible, the real popular will of the inhabitants, voters or citizens (call them what you may) of the Territory ought to be deferred to in the Territory just as it certainly would be enforced in the State. But, if it is proposed to lay down another rule in respect to Utah, that very attempt shows that something besides and very different from laying down such a rule is required to be done. It shows the existence of reasons—either good or bad—for denouncing the whole territorial organization, and for proceeding to demolise the entire structure, from top to bottom. If a large community, which enjoys a territorial organization, and is a unit in its opinions and will as regards the person to be appointed its Governor, is not to be in the least degree respected or heard in the matter of such appointment, then it is clear that such a community ought not (at least politically) to be suffered to exist. Their organization should be suppressed and terminated. But, so long as Utah is a Territory, and is inhabited just as it is now, such recommendations as Brigham Young's friends have brought to the eye of the President, with the President's own knowledge, if he is not the most ignorant man in the Republic, of what the real sentiment of Utah is ought, it appears to us, to be conclusive with that functionary. If the Mormons are to have a Territory to themselves, they ought to have a Governor from themselves. And, from testimony of very high character and great trustworthiness, we are satisfied that the Mormons offer a man for Governor who will do his duty faithfully—not disobeying the laws of the Union, but executing them.

We write all this, not caring a bawbee about the success of Mormonism, and, as we have always thought, still thinking, not at all favorably of either its character or prospects in the great future, But, nevertheless, we do feel that the way in which the administration is acting toward Utah, in the matter of this Governorship, is trifling. Let President Pierce give Utah for its Governor the man who, besides being endorsed by unprejudiced and disinterested testimony as perfectly well qualified, is by the President well known to be wanted for its Governor by nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand of its citizens. This will be a compliance with his duty under the Organic Law. After that, if he sees fit, he can urge on Congress the repeal of that law, the abolishment of the Territory, or any other political measure, of a lawful kind, which he may think efficacious for rooting out Mormonism. But, as the matter now stands, it is perfectly clear that the office of Governor ought to be filled, and that no other man has a hundreth part of the pretensions that Brigham Young has to it.—[St. Louis Morning Herald.

Letters from Southern Russia state that all the Russian reinforcements, now on their route to the Crimea, have received counter orders to rendezvous at a camp near Odessa. Fears were felt that the city would be soon attacked by the Allies, and that success would be infinitely easier than against Sebastopol; defensive works were in course of construction. The emigration from Odessa into the interior was augmenting, and the authorities were not so opposed to it as formerly. The blockade was strictly maintained.

Statement of Mayor Dow, &c.—Boston, June 12.—Neal Dow has made a long official statement to the City Council of Portland, giving a detailed history of the late riot. He asserts that but for the action of the military the liquor agency would have been set on fire and the City Hall destroyed. The Board of Aldermen endorses the Mayor's statement.

Correspondence.

From our Delaware Correspondent.

Centerville, Del., June 16, 1855.

Dear Bro. Taylor—We have received The Mormon regularly since its commcement, and have been much edified from time, to time, by the persual of its contents; we now regard it as indispensibly necessary for the promotion of the good work, in this country, and for the defence of the Saints, and the principles of truth and righteousness, against those wholesale calumniators, who are now making an effort worthy of the old adversary to excite the spirit of persecution against us, as a people.

What do these things mean? what have the poor Mormons done to merit such treatment as Bennett of the Herald, Fuller of the Mirrior, the Times and some other of their cotemporaries of the press have suggested, and wish to have inflicted upon us; occupying as these men do prominent positions in society, it is revolting to every feeling of humanity, in the mind of Mormon, or Gentile to witness the manifestations of their blood thirstiness, pandering to the fercest passions of the human mind and using their position and influence to propagate in the minds of those capable of receiving such sentiments, the spirits that seeks for a brothers blood, invoking the General Government to send her forces in all the "pomp and circumstance of war," to murder the Mormons, and crimson the national escutchion in innocent blood; perhaps in such an event some would expect these worthies to turn soldier and help to guide the engines of death and carnage; but this is not their bent they are they who cry aloud and bluster and excite their dupes, to deeds of daring, while they hide their heads in places of safety.

Do these men know while they cry aloud Mormon treason that the Mormons are the most truly loyal of any subjects this government has? that while Senator Sumner and his friends North would repeal a certain law on the ground of its unconstitutionality, being asked what they would do if it were not unconstitution, he replied "then we would repeal the constitution," at the same time the South upholds the constitution just as long as it is held to protect their peculiar institutions, and no longer; while we as a people hold to it, and will support it in its purity, under all circumstances, as the charter of our political rights, as given by inspiration of God.

It was hoped by some after the Saints had suffered in loss of houses and lands, spoiling of goods, &c., their beloved Prophet and Patriarch slain; their women and childen, aged fathers and mothers, driven by mobbers and assassins to perish from want and exposure in inhospitable wildernesses, and barren deserts; there as their persecutors thought to perish, and often before the eyes of those who dearly loved them, and who were often unable to procure that shelter and nourishment so needful to preserving life; whose last sad duty it was to consign them in many cases without coffins, to the earth; there to await a glorious resurection; but the God of Jacob was with them, and led them even as the children of Isreal were led in the days of Moses, in due time to the place appointed; and it has been hoped by some, that for a time this would have been enough; vain hope! the black fiend persecution begins again to lift her hydra head and show her gory hands, still reeking with the blood of slaughtered Saints; and now she cries aloud, through her fiendish crimson organs, More blood! More blood!! MORE BLOOD!!!

We call upon all people, every where, silence is no longer a virtue, to give vent to your feelings and declare your abhorrence to such enormous, such preposterous principles; that the spirit of murder may be rebuked; that your hands may be clear of the blood of Saints, that you may not be accomplices with those who persecute and seek to destroy a law-abiding, God-serving, innocent people. It is a grevious sin, to shed thy brother's blood, and grievously to be repented of.

Yours, truly in the E. C.,

J. Foreman.

Valedictory of E. K. Fuller.

New York City, June 20, 1855.

President Taylor—Dear Sir: As I am about to leave for my home in the valleys of the mountains, I thought I would address you a few words previous to my departure.

As this is my first mission, and my first attempt at preaching the gospel, no doubt but I should seem a little awkward in my attempts in public; but satisfied of the truths that I have espoused, and of the glorious principles involved in the gospel that we have embraced, I have felt a desire to communicate the same principles unto others, and through the blessings of God my labors have not been entirely unsuccessful. I have baptized eight since my arrival here, and trust that my labors have not been inefficient in strengthening and building up many of the Saints in this Eastern country. Among those baptized are several of my own relations, whilst others are believing. In relation to things generally, my experience among the people is, that they are cold-hearted and regardless of truth; the world seems to be the all absorbing topic, and they fear not God nor his laws. I am surprised when I reflect upon their impudent calumny and abuse. A short time ago and they murdered the Prophets, killed the Elders, and imbrued their hands in the blood of the Saints, who had to flee from their fiendish hate and seek among the savages of the wilderness an asylum denied them by Christianity, republicanism, and civilization; and now, far off in these distant valleys, would they traduce their victims, re-open their bleeding wounds, and stigmatize a virtue which it is out of their power to copy. Those may admire this place that can; but give me the society of the Saints in the valleys of the mountains.

I wish to communicate my best respects to the Saints and brethren among whom I have sojourned, and in bidding them adieu pray that the best of Heaven's blessings may rest upon them, and especially upon all of my co-laborers in the East.

The Lord has been gracious to me during my sojourn here, and supplied all my wants; but as I have now the privilege of returning home, I embrace it with alacrity, accounting it one of the greatest privileges to be associated with the Saints in Zion.

Respectfully, yours in the E. C.,

E. K. Fuller.

European News.

The steamship Asia from Liverpool arrived at Halifax early on the morning of the 20th, bringing news three days later than the St. Louis. She left Liverpool on the afternoon of Saturday of the 9th inst.

The news from the Crimea is highly interesting. The bombardment of Sebastopol was recommenced on the 6th inst., on the day the steamer sailed a despatch was received from Lord Raglan, dated June 8th, 6 P. M. stating that after a fierce bombardment, the French attacked and carried the Mamelon and the White Tower, great gallantry was displayed on both sides, and the loss to the Russians and French was very great.

The particulars relating to this assault show the importance of success, as the work would have been very dangerous in outflanking the French.

But which they have now transformed into a French position although at an immense loss.

The Royal Mail steamship Asia arrived at Liverpool on the 2d inst., and the U. S. Mail steamship Hermann reached Cowes en route to Bremen, on the following day.

Scarcely had the Atlantic left Liverpool with the news of the great successes which had taken place on the part of the allies against the Russians, than further intelligence in reference to their position in the sea of Azoff had reached England. From a despatch which had been received at the Admiralty from Sir E. Lyons at Kertch, dated 31st of May, it appears that the squadron in the sea of Azoff had appeared before Genitchi, landed a body of seamen and marines, and after driving the Russian force form the place, had destroyed all the depots and vessels laden with corn and supplies for the Russian army. Only one man was wounded. Since entering the sea off Azoff, four steamers of war and 240 vessels employed in conveying supplies to the Russian army in the Crimea, have been destroyed.

The Moniteur of the 4th inst., publishes the following despatch from Gen. Pelissier to the Minister of War:

"Crimea, June 6.—We have sprung two mines in front of the Flagstaff bastion. The second explosion did considerable damage to the enemy. In the ravine of Careening Bay, in advance of our works, our engineers discovered a transverse line of 24 cubic cases, filled with gunpowder, each 40 centimetres thick on the inside, placed at equal distances, and buried just beneath the sod, each case containing one-fiftieth of a kilogramme of powder, is covered with a fulminating apparatus, which would explode by the simple pressure of the foot. These cases have been taken up by our engineers."

Still later advices from the Sea of Azoff, state that the steam flotilla of the allies has destroyed about 200 vessels, and 6,000,000 of rations of corn and flour, destined for the Russian army of Sebastopol.

The Conferences at Vienna were formally closed at a late sitting held on the 4th instant.

The Morning Herald, in a telegraphic despatch, dated June 2d, states that the allies had taken the town of Strangchi, at the mouth of the Putrid sea, burnt a month's rations of the whole Russian army, and destroyed the shipping. There is little doubt but this account is the French version of the affair at Genitchi.

A despatch from Prince Gortschakoff, dated the 29th ult., states that the allies have occupied Kertch, but have not pushed inwards. He reports that in consequence of the measures he has taken, the allies will not be able to cut off the communications of the Russian army.

The Post Gazette, of Frankfort, publishes a despatch from Odessa to the effect that the Russians are raising batteries to command the channel near Gohikhi, which connects the Putrid Lake with the Sea of Azoff. Another despatch says that Onshakoff had arrived at Perekop with his division—4 infantry regiments, each 3,600 strong. Gen. Grosenheilm has also arrived at Perekop with his light cavalry division, the third, consisting of four regiments, each 960 strong. These figures would give Prince Gortschakoff a reinforcement of 18,000 men—a number which more exact information would probably reduce.

Letters from Berlin of the 1st inst., state that the successes of the Allies in the Sea of Azoff have made a deep impression there. It is observed that the large proportion of calvalry in the Russian army will cause the stoppage of supplies from the countries of the Don to be felt with peculiar pressure by the enemy.

On the 23d instant there were 190 cases of cholera at St. Petursburg.

News from Kertch to the 3d inst., states that every thing was going on satisfactorialy. Soujak Kali was evacuated by the Russians on the 28th of May. They burnt the principal buildings, and abandoned 60 guns and 6 mortars, having first rendered them unserviceable.

The Times received the following dispatch from their Vienna Correspondent, dated Galatz, June 1: "There was a great fire last night in the Artillery and Cavalry stables, close to the ammunition depot. The Austrian Garrison succeeded in extinguishing the fire, but 103 horses were burnt. The cholera is said to have appeared in the Austrian army at Galicia."

A telegraphic dispatch from Cagliari announces the death of the Bay of Tunis, on the night of the 1st June. His successor and cousin, Sidi Mahommed Bey, ascended the throne without obstacle.

Miscellaneous.

The Amazon Exploring Expedition.

The Para correspondent of the New York Herald gives an interesting account of the fate of the expedition generally known as the "Amazon Exploring Expedition," which sailed from New York in 1853 for a voyage up the Amazon. It consisted of two small steamers, which, however, were not, as was generally supposed, intended for the exploration of the river, but which had been built at New York under the auspices of the Peruvian government, and were intended by the builders to be sold to that government for the purpose of plying upon the upper branches of the Amazon, in Eastern Peru. The steamers reached Para in safety, and after a delay of several months at that port, for repairs &c., commenced the ascent of the river. The voyage to Loreto, on the Peruvian frontier, three thousand miles from Para, occupied fifty-nine days, including thirty-five days of running time. Much delay and difficulty was occasioned on the route by a want of proper fuel, and the steamers were often compelled to wait near the banks until trees could be cut down and chopped up into food for their furnaces.

Arriving at Loreto, the Peruvian officers who had been appointed to the command of the steamers, together with other dignitaries of rank, made strong exceptions to the vessels, alleging that though of greater dimensions and power than was specified in the contract, they were not constructed in a proper manner, or of proper material. Under these circumstances the Governor did not feel at liberty to receive them, and referred the subject to the General Government at Lima, stipulating, in the mean time, to defray all the expenses of the boats, and if they were not ultimately accepted to return them in as good condition as when they arrived, natural decay excepted. This was all very fair; but on account of the revolution which was then progressing, the government paid no attention to the matter, and the steamers have ever since remained motionless at Nanta, about two hundred miles above Loreto, and having received no paint and no repairs, are rapidly decaying before the assaults of the sun and the rain.

Ten Americans belonging to the steamers were taken into the service of the Governor General with the assurance that they should receive as good and liberal fare as the country could afford. In the course of eight months, however, eight of them were fairly obliged by hunger and want to return to Para, where four of their number died of yellow fever. The other two, both engineers, remained on board the steamers at last accounts, awaiting passively the consummation of events.—[Boston Journal.

History of the Melon.

The history of the watermelon, so much esteemed for its delicious and cooling juice, as well as that of the muskmelon or cantalupe, which is equally prized for its rich aromatic pulp, may be traced back to remote antiquity. The former, which is generally considered as the melon of the Jews, mentioned in various places in the Bible, is believed to have originated in Egypt, or Southern India, where it has been cultivated from time immemorial. It would appear that it was unknown to the ancient Greeks and Romans, as no definite information respecting it can be gleaned from their authors. The muskmelon, which is represented to have been a native of Asia, was known to the Greek and Roman physicians, and its properties and uses described by them at length.

The kind of melon most esteemed among amateurs in various parts of Europe, and described, is the "Cantalupe," so called from a place about fourteen miles from Rome, the country seat of the Pope, where this fruit has long been cultivated. This variety is stated to have been brought hither from that part of Armenia which borders on Persia, where it grows in the greatest perfection and abundance. The flesh of this melon when fully matured, is delicious, and may be eaten with safety without injury to the dyspeptic or those of the weakest stomachs. The form of cantalupes is generally roundish, with a rough, water, or netted outer rind or skin. The size of the plant is rather small, and the flesh, for the most part, of a yellowish color, though with some it is green.—[Patent Office Report.

Geology at a Discount.

The geologist, if he be fairly in earnest, is far too tired, after his day's work, to trouble himself about the aristocratic air of his quarters, and besides, generally manages to put his outer man in so uncleanly a condition, that a grand hotel would have some scruples in taking him. Professor Sedgwick, after a hard day's work, betook himself to a village inn for a lunch of bread and cheese. When he asked what he had to pay, he was told "fourpence!" He could not avoid remarking on the smallness of the charge. "Ah, sir," said the landlady, "I should ask eighteen pence of any one else, but I only sak fourpence of you, for I see you have seen better days." At another time a lady stopped by the roadside, where he was working, made some inquiries, and gave him a shilling, because his answers were so intelligent for his station. He met the same lady at dinner the next day, to her great astonishment. A well known geologist, long secretary of the Geological Society, was once taken up while at his vocation, and dragged to the Bristol Asylum for an escaped lunatic. On another occasion, tired, and with his pockets full of the day's treasures, he mounted a stage-coach, and fell fast asleep. Waking at his journey's end, he was horrified to find his pocket's as empty as when he set out. An old woman, who sat beside him, feeling his pockets full of stones, took him for a madman, who had loaded himself more effectually to secure drowning; so she slily picked out the fossils, one by one, from the drowsy philosopher, and tossed them on the roadside.

Sale of the Emperor Napoleon's Snuff-box. Who was the Owner!

On Wednesday the 13th, at noon, quite an audience assembled in the vestibule of the City Hall to witness the sale of the magnificent present sent by Louis Napoleon to an old friend of his in this city, and no little interest was manifested to know who the person was on whom the imperial favor was bestowed. But the curiosity of those present was not destined to be gratified, for Assistant Sheriff Frederic L. Vultee, who made the seizure, would not give even a hint who the unfortunate debtor was, nor did the most adroit cross-questioning give the slightest clue to the mystery. Of course, in the absence of any tangible data from which to judge, all sorts of guesses were made. One gentleman was certain that it belonged to a well known sporting character, one who was known for his magnificent turn-outs on Broadway and on the avenue, while others supposed it was sent to a lady, but the fact of its being a snuff-box discredited this report. We learn, however, the late owner was a merchant, a Frenchman, and one who was intimate with and befriended the present Emperor when in poverty in this country. He has lately become embarrassed in his circumstances, and the box was seized before he ever saw it. He refused to look at the lost present after the seizure, nor was he present at the sale. The snuff-box is about five inches in length, by three in breadth, and nearly an inch in depth. It is magnificently chased, and enameled in gold. The cypher N, which is placed in the centre, contains nearly fifty diamonds, and above the letter is an imperial crown, brilliant with costly gems. The case is of red velvet, and has the imperial cypher on the outside. Baptiste, of the Rue de Rempart, Paris, is said to be the manufacturer. Assistant Sheriff Vultee acted as auctioneer. The first bid was $250, which was eventually run up to $800, at which price it was knocked down to John F Bell. & Co., of No. 62 Wall-street. The box was appraised at the Custom House for $480, and good judges of jewelry estimate its real value at from $500 to $600.

A Confounding Witness.

An extract from Graham's Magazine:

Alderman.—What is your business, sir?—What do you do for a living?

Witness.—Nothing in particular.

A.—You appear to be poor—where do you get your bread?

W.—Sometimes of Mr. Moxey, the baker, sir, and sometimes—

A.—Stop, sir; I mean, how do you support yourself?

W.—On a bench in the daytime, on a bed by night.

A.—I do not wish any trifling, sir. Are you a mechanic?

W.—No, sir,

A.—What are you, then?

W.—A free-will Baptist, sir.

A.—My dear sir, I do not mean that. You must be civil, sir, or I will commit you and have you taken care of.

W.—Well, that would be kind. I want somebody to take care of me. I can't take care of myself, no how I can fix it.

A.—You work around the wharves, don't you?

W.—No, sir. I haint got no boat.

A.—I believe you are an idle vagabond.

W.—Well, I guess you've hit it now, if you never did 'afore.

A.—What do you know about this case?

W.—What case?

A.—Why, this Irishman.

W.—He's a hard case.

A.—Is that all?

W.—I guess it is—if you've no objection. May I go?

A.—Certainly—and I can't see what brought you here.

W.—Then your eyes don't observe as good a pair of legs as man ever had.

Mormon Publications.

The Deseret News is a weekly paper, the official organ of the Church in Utah, and is published in Salt Lake City; it is ably edited by Albert Carrington. It is circulated extensively in Utah Territory; how much abroad we are not prepared to say.

Price of subscription, $5 in advance.

The St. Louis Luminary.—A weekly paper lately started at St. Louis. It is a very neat paper, full of useful information, and especially interesting to the Saints, to whom we recommend it. It is ably edited by Elder Erastus Snow, one of the Twelve Apostles, and President of the Stake of St. Louis. We recommend it to all lovers of truth.

Price of subscription, $2 in advance.

Subscriptions can either be sent to The Mormon office, or to the editor of the Luminary, St. Louis, Mo.

The Millenniel Star.—A weekly publication of 16 pages, adapted for binding; of which there are 16 volumes now bound. It is printed on good paper, clear type, and is devoted principally to the progress of the work in Europe. It is very ably edited by F. D. Richards, one of the Twelve Apostles, and President of the European Church.

Price in England, one penny, or two cents. The law of postage between England and the United States is, that two cents on each paper shall be prepaid in each country, and two cents after the arrival.

Price of subscription, including foreign postage, $2.25, in advance, sent to the address of subscribers. Elder Richards has requested us to act as agent, but has not given us the terms. The above is the nearest approximate that we can arrive at without instructions.

The subscriptions can be sent to us, and we will immediately forward the names and address.

Published at 36 Islington, Liverpool, and 35 Jewin street, City, London.

Besides the above, there is a paper published in Australia, another in Bombay, one in Switzerland, one commencing on the Sandwich Islands, one in California, and one in Cincinnati; besides a host of minor publications.

Horace Greely was arrested in Paris on the 2d of June, and kept in the debtor' prison till Monday, upon a suit of a Sculptor, named Leclerc, on account of a statue placed in the N. Y. Crystal Palace, Mr. Greely being one of the directors of that Exhibition.

Fine Fishing.—A party of gentlemen returned to this village last week from a fishing excursion to our mountain streams, having caught about fourteen hundred trout during their absence. There are probably no better fishing grounds for brook trout, than in the streams of Ulster, Sullivan and Delaware.—[Kingston N. Y. Journal.

Fare to be Reduced.—A reduction of fare on the Hudson River Railroad is, we understand, contemplated.

Mormon Books.

We have at last received our Books from Philadelphia, and are prepared to supply orders.

To the Saints Scattered Abroad.

As there will shortly be many of our brethren here from Europe who will be in want of employment, in various trades and occupations, you are requested to send to this office, directions whereby we may know where to send those that are in need of employment, on their arrival in this country.

Those of the Saints who have not already reported, are requested to report themselves through their presiding officers or individually to this office by letter or otherwise, as soon as circumstances will admit.

Letters must be post-paid.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deserétian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Pére et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

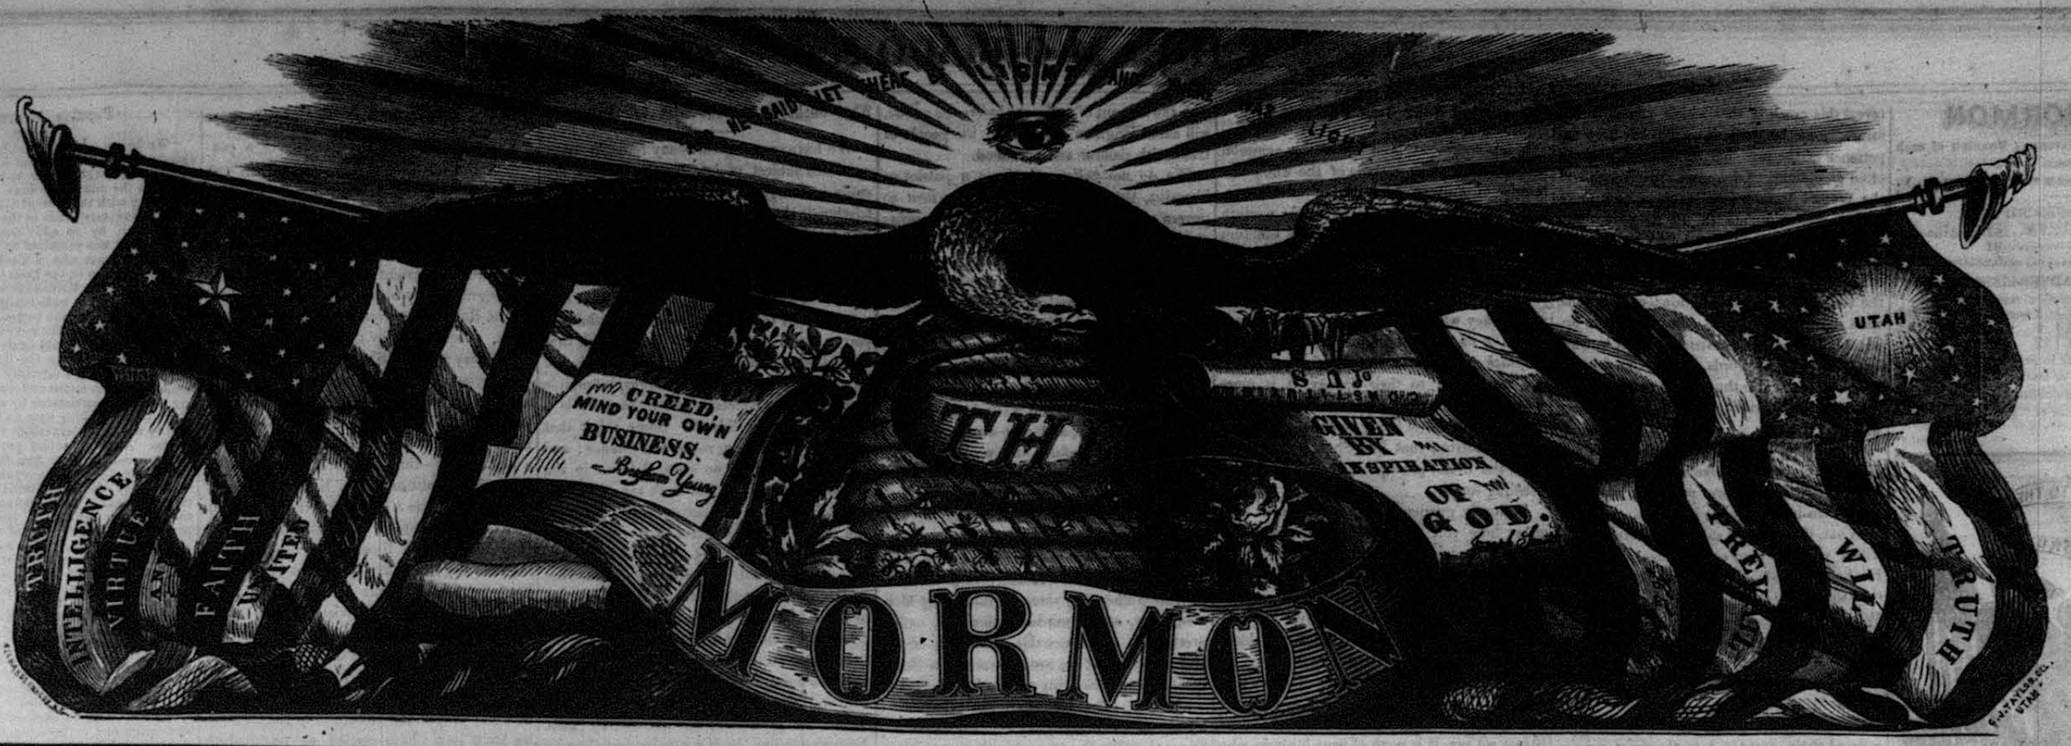
ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review o it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.



The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Truth.

BY W. W. PHELPS.

TUNE—"Stars and Stripes."

'Tis the truth that on land, or the sea,
Fills the heart of the Mormon with love;
For its light never fails, and is free,
As its fountain is filled from above:
'Tis the word that our Father has sent,
To gain us eternal reward;
And he calls on the world to repent,
And walk in the light of the Lord.

CHORUS.

Then Hosanna to God and the Lamb,
For Joseph the priesthood's restored,
With the keys of—I AM THAT I AM.

'Tis the truth that gives freedom its light,
Leaves the Gentiles of ages to pine
In their own narrow mansions of night,
While eternity's majesties shine:
'Tis the word that our fathers rever'd,
When Israel with knowledge was stor'd,
Which the host of vain Pharoah but jeer'd
And sunk in the light of the Lord:
Then Hosanna to God and the Lamb, &c.

'Twas the truth that our Joseph reveal'd,
When the clergy and christians of Baal,
Cried—"The Bible and heavens are sealed,
'Tis blasphemy! put such men in jail."
'Twas the voice of the Saviour again,
To Ephraim as scatter'd abroad,
Through the angel Moroni—(Amen,)
To walk in the light of the Lord:
Then Hosanna to God and the Lamb, &c.

'Twas the truth that on land or the sea,
Fill'd the hearts of the people with fear,
When the host of the realm of the free,
Basely martyr'd our "Prophet and Seer."
'Tis the "pearl of great price" in the hands
Of Brigham for all saints' reward,
While the "rest of mankind" runs or stands,
And melts in the light of the Lord:
Then Hosanna to God and the Lamb, &c.

The Platform of the Know Nothings.

We give below the results of the Know Nothing or American Party, held at Philadelphia, commencing the 9th of June, 1855. After some severe sparring on both sides on the great absorbing question Slavery, the Northern minority offered as an ultimatum the following resolutions:

"Resolved; That the repeal of the Missouri Compromise was an infraction of the plighted faith of the Nation, and that it should be restored; and if efforts to that end shall fail, Congress should refuse to admit any State tolerating Slavery, which should be formed out of any portion of the Territory from which that institution was excluded by that Compromise."

After a fierce debate, this resolution, which was moved as a substitute for the one proposed by the majority of the committee, was rejected, 51 yeas to 92 nays. The pro-slavery plank was then adopted, 80 yeas, 59 nays. A majority of the delegates from every free State except New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, then withdrew. The Southern representatives, with a few from the Northern States, subsequently agreed upon the following as the PLATFORM OF THE AMERICAN OR KNOW NOTHING PARTY.

I—The acknowledgement of that Almighty Being who rules over the universe—who presides over the councils of nations—who conducts the affairs of men, and who, in every step by which we have advanced to the character of an independent nation, has distinguished us by some token of providential agency.

II.—The cultivation and development of a sentiment of profoundly intense American feeling; of passionate attachment to our country, its history and its institutions; of admiration for the purer days of our national existence of veneration for the heroism that precipitated our revolution; and of emulation of the virtue wisdom and patriotism that framed our constitution, and first successfully applied its provisions.

III—The maintenance of the union of these United States as the paramount political good; or, to use the language of Washington, "the primary object of patriotic desire" And hence:—

1. Opposition to all attempts to weaken or subvert it.

2. Uncompromising antagonism to every principle of policy that endangers it.

3. The advocacy of an equitable adjustment of all political differences which threaten its integrity or perpetuity.

4. The suppression of all tendencies to political division, founded on "geographical discriminations, or on the belief that there is a real difference of interests and views" between the various sections of the Union.

5. The full recognition of the rights of the several States, as expressed and reserved in the constitution; and a careful avoidance, by the general government, of all interference with their rights by legislative or executive action.

IV.—Obedience to the constitution of these United States, as the supreme law of the land, sacredly obligatory upon all its parts and members; and steadfast resistance to the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretexts. Avowing that in all doubtful or disputed points it may only be legally ascertained and expounded by the Judicial power of the United States.

And, as a corollary to the above:—

1. A habit of reverential obedience to the laws, whether National, state, or Municipal, until they are either repealed or declared unconstitutional by the proper authority.

2. A tender and sacred regard for those acts of statesmanship which are to be contra-distinguished from acts of ordinary legislation, by the fact of their being of the nature of compacts and agreements: and so to be considered a fixed and settled national policy.

V. A radical revision and modification of the laws regulating immigration, and the settlement of immigrants. Offering to the honest immigrant who, from love of liberty or hatred of oppression, seeks an asylum in the United States, a friendly reception and protection; but unqualifiedly condemning the transmission to our shores of felons and paupers.

VI.—The essential modification of the naturalization laws.

The repeal by the Legislatures of the respective States of all State laws allowing foreigners not naturalized to vote.

The repeal, without retro-active operation, of all acts of Congress making grants of land to unnaturalized foreigners, and allowing them to vote in the Territories.

VII.—Hostility to the corrupt means by which the leaders of party have hitherto forced upon us our rulers and our political creeds.

Implacable enmity against the prevalent demoralizing system of rewards for political subserviency, and of punishments for political independence.

Disgust for the wild hunt after office which characterizes the age.

These on the one hand. On the other:—

Imitation of the practice of the purer days of the Republic, and admiration of the maxim that "office should seek the man, and not man the office;" and of the rule, that the just mode of ascertaining fitness for office is the capability, the faithfulness, and the honesty of the incumbent or candidate.

VIII.—Resistance to the aggressive policy and corrupt tendencies of the Roman Catholic Church in our country by the advancement to all political stations—executive, legislative, judicial or diplomatic—of those only who do not hold civil allegiance, directly or indirectly to any foreign power whether civil or ecclesiastical, and who are Americans by birth, education and training—thus fulfilling the maxim, "Americans only shall govern America."

The protection of all citizens in the legal and proper exercise of their civil and religious rights and privileges; the maintenance of the right of every man to the full, unrestrained and peaceful enjoyment of his own religious opinions and worship; and a jealous resistance of all attempts by any sect, denomination or church to obtain an ascendency over any other in the State, by means of any special privileges or exemption, by any political combination of its members, or by a division of their civil allegiance with any foreign power, potentateor ecclesiastic.

IX.—The reformation of the character of our national Legislature, by elevating to that dignified and responsible position men of higher qualifications, purer morals, and more unselfish patriotism.

X.—The restriction of executive patronage—especially in the matter of appointments to office—so far as it may be permitted by the constitution, and consistent with the public good.

XI.—The education of the youth of our country in schools provided by the State, which schools shall be common to all, without distinction of creed or party, and free from any influence of a denominational or partisan character.

And, inasmuch as Christianity by the constitutions of nearly all the States, by the decisions of the most eminent judicial authorities, and by the consent of the people of America, is considered an element of our political system; and as the Holy Bible is at once the source of Christianity, and the depository and fountain of all civil and religious freedom, we oppose every attempt to exclude it from the schools thus established in the States.

XII.—The American party having arisen upon the ruins, and in spite of the opposition, of the whig and democratic parties, cannot be held in any manner responsible for the obnoxious acts or violated pledges of either. And the systematic agitation of the slavery question by those parties having elevated sectional hostility into a positive element of physical power and brought our institutions into peril, it has therefore become the imperative duty of the American party to interfere, for the purpose of giving peace to the country and perpetuity to the Union. And as experience has shown it impossible to reconcile opinions so extreme as those which separate the disputants, and as there can be no dishonor in submitting to the laws, the National Council has deemed it the best guarantee of common justice and of future peace to abide by and maintain the existing laws upon the subject of slavery, as a final and conclusive settlement of that subject, in spirit and in substance.

And regarding it the highest duty to avow their opinions upon a subject so important in distinct and unequivocal terms, it is hereby declared as the sense of this National Council, that Congress possesses no power, under the constitution, to legislate upon the subject of slavery in the States where it does or may exist, or to exclude any State from admission into the Union because its constitution does or does not recognise the institution of slavery as a part of its social system; and expressly pretermitting any expression of opinion upon the power of Congress to establish or prohibit slavery in any Territory, it is the sense of the National Council that Congress ought not to legislate upon the subject of slavery within the Territories of the United States, and that any interference by Congress with slavery as it exists in the the District of Columbia, would be a violation of the spirit and intention of the compact by which the State of Maryland ceded the district to the United States, and a breach of the national faith.

XIII.—The policy of the government of the United States, in its relations with foreign governments, is to exact justice from the strongest, and do justice to the weakest; restraining, by all the power of the government, all its citizens from interference with the internal concerns of nations with whom we are at peace.

XIV.—This National Council declares that all the principles of the Order shall be henceforward everywhere openly avowed; and that each member shall be at liberty to make known the existence of the Order, and the fact that he himself is a member; and it recommends that there be no concealment of the places of meeting of subordinate Councils.

E. B. BARTLETT, of Kentucky.
President of National Convention
C. D. DESHLER, of New Jersey,
Corresponding Secretary.
JAMES M. STEPHENS, of Maryland.
Recording Secretary.

The above was given as the Platform of the great National confederation of the Know Nothings. The question upon the adoption of the Pro-Slavery was taken on Wednesday, the 13th, when a serious collission took place. It would seem that the Northern Anti-Slavery pro-clivities, could not amalgamate with the Pro-Slavery feelings of the South; next day the Northern delegates met at the Girard House, appointed Hon. Henry Wilson as Chairman, and H. M. McAbee of Ohio, as Secretary, came out in rebellion to the Order and appealing from the Council to the people, adopted the following as their Platform:

APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE.

To the people of the United States:

"The undersigned, citizens of various States, assembled at Philadelphia, on the 14th day of June, 1855, feel constrained, under the existing state of affairs, to affirm the following principles:

"FIRST—The unconditional restoration of that time-honored Compromise, known as the Missouri Prohibition, which was destroyed in utter disregard of the popular will—a wrong which no lapse of time can palliate, and no plea for its continuance can justify. And that we will use all constitutional means to maintain the positive guarantee of that compact, until the object for which it was enacted has been consummated by the admission of Kansas and Nebraska as Free States.

"SECOND—That the rights of the settlers in Territories to the free and undisturbed exercise of the elective franchise, guaranteed to them by the laws under which they are organized, should be promptly protected by the National Executive, wherever violated or threatened. And that we cannot concientiously act with those who will not aid us in the correction of these National wrongs, and who will not even permit their fair consideration and their full discussion.

"THIRD—We further declare our continued and unalterable determination to use all honorable efforts to secure such a modification of the Naturalization laws, aided by such an elevation of public sentiment as will preserve the true interest of the Nation, and will guarantee the three vital principles of a Republican Government: SPIRITUAL FREEDOM, A FREE BIBLE and FREE SCHOOLS—thereby promoting the great work of Americanizing America.

"FOURTH—That we invoke the arm of legislation to arrest that growing evil, the deportation, by foreign authorities, of paupers and convicts to our shores; and that, as our National Constitution requires the Chief Executive of our country to be of native birth, we deem it equally necessary and important that our Diplomatic Representatives abroad should also possess no foreign prejudices to bias their judgment or influence their official actions."

PROTESTS OF THE NORTHERN DELEGATES.

The following protests were presented to the Council by Northern delegates, most of whom tried to maintain a half-way position between the Northern and Southern sentiment:

"The undersigned, citizens of the United States, and residents of the States set opposite their names, solemnly protest against the introduction of any question connected with slavery into the platform of principles of the American party—being convinced that no such issues were intended to be embraced within its purposes and objects.

"That we believe in and shall defend the right of freedom of opinion and discussion on that and every other subject not intended to be embraced with the design of our organization.

"That if the question of slavery is to be passed upon and made a part of our national creed, then, in that event, we cannot consistently act with fidelity to our principles and former professions with any national organization whose action on the question of slavery will result in endorsing the Kansas-Nebraska act, and which refuses its sanction to the principles of the Missouri Compromise Act of 1820. That we believe that time-honored compact was an honorable and fair adjustment of the question of slavery. We desire to place this protest upon the journals of the Council, that in no future time the undersigned may be charged with infraction of express or implied faith to their fellow-members in failing to support the majority resolutions.

DIVISION DIVIDED.

"The undersigned delegates, representing the Council of the State of Indiana, respectfully protest against the platform adopted by the National Council at its present session, and beg leave to say that in regard to the measure known as the Kansas-Nebraska bill, neither those within the Council of the State of Indiana nor the people have awaited the action of the National Council in order to form their opinions.

"Their opinions have been formed and avowed. An issue has been made with their political antagonists, and the soundness of those opinions tested in public debate and tried at the ballot-box. The edicts of the National Council, however canonical they may be, will be powerless to change those opinions or to reverse the action of the people of Indiana. Always conservative in their opinions and actions; always mindful of the Compromises of the Constitution of the United States; ardently devoted to the American Union, they will see with regret the promulgation of a platform by this body which can have no other than to increase the fury of the conflagration which the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill has lighted up.

"The undersigned respectfully express their deliberate conviction that, immediately upon the publication of the platform adopted, the Order in the State of Indiana will cease to acknowledge the authority of the National Council; and they respectfully ask that this protest may be received as a termination of their duties as delegates from that State.

We have given the Know Nothing platform and its divisions; we now present our readers with the Know Something platform, which we extract from the "Columbian," published at Columbus, Ohio, June 20th:

KNOW SOMETHINGS.

NATIONAL PLATFORM OF THE KNOW SOMETHINGS, ADOPTED AT CLEVELAND, JUNE 14, 1855.

"As servility to the Slave Power characterizes the national organization of the existing political parties, and as this servility is perilous both to the MANHOOD of the North and the LIBERTY of the Republic—

"We declare:

"FIRST—That the issue before the American People, is whether Freedom shall be limited to the Free States or whether Slavery shall be limited to the Slave States.

"SECOND—That this issue has been forced upon the country by the Slave Power through repeated aggressions, and by acts which have violated national faith, solemn compacts, and sacred covenants.

"THIRD—That these aggressions, especially the Nebraska outrage, with the brutal assault upon the elective franchise in Kansas, have aroused freemen of the Republic to a just sense of their duty and their danger; and though they will invade no right of any State, they will maintain every right of freedom, and resist the admission of another Slave State or the addition of another foot of Slave soil.

"FOURTH—That we shall meet this issue, thus forced upon us, in the spirit our fathers met the issue of their day; and believing, as they believed, that, rightfully, man can hold no property in man, we will maintain the NATIONALITY of Freedom.

"FIFTH—That Freedom being one in aim and end, the world over, the friends of Freedom in this Republic should make Principles and Character, not Birth-place, the test of admission to citizenship, and its constitutional rights.

"And we further declare:

"SIXTH—That the right to worship God according to the dictates of individual conscience being inviolable, we will labor to strengthen this great immunity through wise State laws; but we will repel every politico-ecclesiastical interference, in political affairs, by potentate, pontiff, or priest, or their abettors, as destructive alike of this Right and our common Liberty.

"SEVENTH—That intemperance being an evil, we recommend to the several States such action for the promotion of Temperance as will extend and establish that virtue.

"EIGHTH—That Free Schools, Free Labor, the Improvement of Rivers and Harbors, an honest Republican Official Representation Abroad, all measures that tend to elevate MAN, establish the material prosperity of the country, and give stability to the Union, shall receive our hearty support.

"NINTH—That to insure practical success we will strive to fill all offices with men of undoubted integrity and sobriety, of ability, and of nerve to resist aggression upon Right, come when, where, or in what shape it may.

"TENTH—That for these objects, vital alike to Humanity and the Republic, we are ready to unite with all men, under whatever name or organization, who will aid us in carrying into successful operation these great principles."

In their Convention they resolved to dispense with oaths, substituting a pledge of honor. They remain anti-Slavery and anti-Papal. An attempt to bind the organization to support Seward, by the insertion of an article in the Constitution, was opposed by several delegates, and postponed. The Constitution was adopted last evening. Hiram Griswold, of Ohio, was elected President, and Wm. Richardson, of Albany, Secretary.

The same paper gives the account of a "Freeman's Meeting" at Ashtabula county, June 7th, at which the Hon. F. B. Wade, the Hon. J. R. Giddings, and other notable personages, were present, and at which, among many others, the following resolutions were passed:

"Resolved, That the General Government, having refused to furnish the necessary protection to the emigrants from the Free States to the said Territory, it devolves upon the Free States in their sovereign capacity, and each State for itself, to afford such protection to the emigrants; and, until our State Legislature convenes and makes the requisite appropriations, other counties concurring for such purpose, we are ready and willing to furnish one able-bodied free man to every hundred electors in our county, fully provided with the requisites to make and MAINTAIN a residence, and to assert and maintain his own rights as a freeman and the rights of the Free States in that Territory.

"Resolved, That we invite our friends in each of the several counties of our State, to aid in the settlement of Kansas, and the protection of free emigrants there in the same way."

A SOUTHERN DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

A DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION, assembled, on the 6th inst., at Milledgeville, Ga., laid down a platform, of which this is a synopsis:

1. The Union—but the Union as secondary to the reserved rights of the States.

2. The total non-interference of Congress with slavery anywhere, in the States, in the Territories and in the District of Columbia.

3. The maintenance of Fugitive Slave law just as it is, without amendment and without repeal.

4. The principles established by the Nebraska Kansas act, which are the rights of the people of Kansas to form a Republican Government, with or without slavery, whenever they please, and to come into the Union on an equal footing with the other States.

5. The resolution of the Georgia Legislature, that any opposition to these principles, by man or party, is an act of hostility to the people of the South.

6. Sympathy with the "friends of slavery in Kansas in their manly efforts to maintain the rights and interests of the whole Southern people," over "the paid adventurers and Jesuitical hordes of Northern Abolitionism."

7. Opposition to every party at the North which "does not come up fully and fairly" to the Southern standard, including the Know-Nothings.

8. Retaliatory measures against Massachusetts and Vermont, for "virtually repealing the Fugitive Slave law;" and,

9. The annexation of Cuba.

And thus it goes where will it end? Conventions are being held, resolutions passed, platforms erected, sides taken, violent language used, a great deal of gas no doubt; but at the same time a great amount of combustable matter. When will it explode?

The Cost of War.

The English Army and Navy Estimates.

The estimates of the English Army and Navy, for the year 1855–6, have just been published. The total amount required for the Army is upwards of $58,000,000. The increase on the year 1854 is about $32,000,000. The total increase provided for is 50,819 men and 2,610 horses. The Navy estimates for the same period, including transports, amount to something like seventy-nine millions of dollars. Of this, about one-third—£5,181,465—is required for transport service and prisoners of war. These estimates are based on employing in the service 38,819 seamen, 10,000 boys, and 16,000 marines; which, with their officers, will make an effective naval force of 70,000 of all ranks.

Thus we find that the English Government contemplate having engaged in the war during the opening year, no less than 263,594 men of all ranks in both the services, land and sea, and that the sum necessary to support and render efficient this body of men and the ships to be manned by them, for a single year, will be more than one hundred and thirty-eight millions of dollars! Such is the cost of war in dollars and cents for a single war; or rather, such is the estimated cost, for the actual cost will, in the aggregate, doubtless greatly exceed these estimates.

The Way Some Live in New-York.

ALTHOUGH a trite, it is nevertheless a true saying that, "one half of the world does not know how the other lives."

Travelling a few evenings ago, in an omnibus, about 11 o'clock at night, our attention was attracted by a small barefooted girl, who entered the vehicle. Her apparel was very much worn; she had on an old slouched sun-bonnet, which hid a bright but careworn countenance. She crept into one corner, as though she considered herself an intruder, although in this great public convenience and conveyance, for which she was paying her share. Attracted by her appearance and the late hour, we made free to interrogate her: a few pennies made her communicative, when the following colloquy took place:

What is this in your hand, my little girl?
A song.
What do you do with them?
I sell them.
What do you get for them?
A penny.
What do you give for them?
Three cents a dozen.
How many do you sell in a day?
I have sold twenty to-day.
What do you give for riding in the stage?
Two cents; we learned afterwards three; perhaps she commuted.
Have you a Father?
Yes.
Where is he?
In the hospital.
Have you a mother?
Yes.
What does she do?
Sometimes she goes out to scrub.

We could not help but feel sympathy for the little wanderer. Here in this stage, thought we, poverty and wealth meet face to face; side by side, perhaps are the daughters of the wealthy millionaire, and the little song-seller; the one pampered with all the luxuries of this great metropolis; her every thought anticipated, and every wish gratified, obsequiously bowed to, courted, respected and honored; the other, a poor wandering ragged, shoeless outcast, travelling along in this vast city wilderness, dependant upon her own exertions for a living a bare existence; waiting at theatres and public places of resort, offering her songs, dependant upon the meagre and precarious profits for a living; subject to the taunts and cuffs of the vulgar; and after a day of toil, care, and anxiety, that her age ought never to know, creeping into a stage, and although paying in full her fare, feeling as though she was an intruder, she rides home, perhaps a luxury to her; home did we say? how cheerless. Her father the inmate of an hospital; the mother after a day of toil brooding over their misfortunes; they retire to bed if they have such a luxury, to commence the same scene another day. Surely no sun shines for them, for them the birds sing not nor does nature rejoice; for such what is there in the furture? Hope is a name. Such is the world; such is destiny; and probably this is but a faint picture of thousands of others.

A Naked Story.

THE accounts of the wonderful doings of the late hurricane which swept over the Western country, represent it as having been most terrible in Cass Co., Missouri. The Cass Co. Gazette says, great numbers of birds, rabbits, &c., were found torn to pieces in its course, and we are informed that the poultry of Mr. Young which were not killed, were stripped as naked as if they had been scalded and picked for the frying pan!

Sharp Shooting.

TOM MOORE said to Peel, on looking at the picture of an Irish orator: "You can see the very quiver of his lips." "Yes," said Peel, "and the arrow coming out of it." Moore was telling this to one of his countrymen, who answered: "He meant arrah coming out of it."

Discipline.

A LAUGHABLE circumstance took place a short time since. As a soldier was carrying the dinner belonging to his mess from the baker's, one of his companions coming behind him called "Attention!" when this well-disciplined soldier dropped his hands, and at the same time the dinner of his unfortunate comrades.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1855.

Government—Religion—Morality—Mormonism.

THE great machinery of the world, considered either religiously, politically, or morally, is manifestly out of joint, and performs its functions in a most rickety, loose and unsteady manner; its disordered condition forces upon reflecting minds much doubt and uncertainty as to the future, and serious questions upon the propriety of attempting to sustain the one or the other; for insolvency and dissolution are clearly discernible in its weak and faltering step; and the indefinite posture of all parties in the present great struggle for ascendancy among mankind is so precarious, that any one who ventures to endorse either would likely find his paper protested, and himself involved in bankruptcy in the final settlement of the present speculative age. Who so obtuse as not to see, after four thousand years of practical experimenting, that there is wanting in human governments that enduring quality needed to give order, stability and assurance so plainly visible in the material universe, in all the works of the Creator; the protests of partizans to the contrary notwithstanding, it is a failure—a total failure.

Experiments in government were commenced in Asia immediately after the flood, and continued under various phases of Patriarchal, Despotic, Theocratic, Monarchical, Democratic, Aristocratic, and all the multitudinous phases of governmental paraphernalia, and lastly shooting forth into American Democracy, in which the rays of freedom penetrates the broken clouds of Despotism, to cheer the hearts of down-trodden humanity, and Republicanism budded forth upon this land, as the brightest spot, upon which mankind might rest their hopes of freedom to the race; and even here, the gathering clouds of fanaticism lift their hydra head, and lash into fury the fiercest passions of the human mind; the thickening mists blot out the invigorating and genial influence of hope's brightest rays; these, with the dark portentous clouds thick hovering over Europe, threaten to extinguish the last hope of the ability of man to resist the demon of Despotism.

We have said human Government is a failure, Religion is a failure, and morality at its lowest ebb. As to Government, the highest magnates of the political world assure us that dissolution is inevitably decreed upon this Union, which is based upon the greatest productions of the human mind, nearest the divine in the art of Government, the Constitution. What can man do? He is only able to act as the light from a higher sphere penetrates his darkened vision; though he takes to himself the glory. It is higher power that imparts the light, by which he acts at all. The manworshiper and sycophant cry out, see what man has done to redeem his fellow man! how he has progressed for ages, forgetting that with all his wisdom—like fragments upon the ocean, each wave has dashed him on the shore, or whelmed him in the boundless flood; powerless over his own destiny, as the inanimate pulp that floats amid the rocks upon the surging wave. The partizan looks back upon the past with complacency and congratulates himself upon the improvement of man. He is not however with all his boasts so near the goal to day, but that one eventful wave may tarnish all his glory, obliterate his political, religious and moral prestige in the yawning whirlpool of confusion anarchy and despotism, and submerge him forever. One day of Egyptian darkness, and he is lost with all his artificial lights; the mist is impenetrable. Politics never were more unsettled, since the world begun. Religion never more divided, immorality and hypocrasy never more systematized and prevalent than now.

The best government upon the earth formed of the most incongruous materials, and confusion fast spreading over all; where is it to end, and what is there to hope for the future? Is there a man that can step boldly forward, and say, I know what the result of all this will be; if there is, that man is a Prophet of God. Show me the plan for the future. That plan manifested to the world, would immortalize its projector; if man is yet to grope his uncertain way along, then there is none that can answer for the future, God alone can reveal this much of that which relates to the future, may be well reasoned out from experience of the past, but of this rule there is often exceptions. Of human Governments at the present time, where is there one more perfect and complete in all its parts than that of the United States? And yet this system has taken ages to perfect, yet in this so-called "Model Republican Government" are the seeds of its own dissolution; of Religions, what more perfect, more admirable more applicable to man, than christanity; yet in what instance could the words of its divine founder be more applicable than to its present state, "A kingdom divided against itself, cannot stand."

Of morality, has the innumerable variety of diseases, the certain index of corruption and immorality, been more prevalent over the earth than in the age we live in?

What, then, can be said of the future? The wisest plans of man on all sides, are failing. He has long since renounced the hope that God would speak again, and open his way. What will he do, then? Look, as it were, upon a vast mass of unintelligent matter, resolving itself into some uncertain crystalization? How, perchance if this mass has crystalized for the last time? But let us briefly review the past. Mankind historically commenced their career in Asia, the great nursery of the East, slowly developing, as wave after wave rolled toward the West—and long he lingered upon the shores of Europe as though not yet worthy to enter the rich, new, broad and unexplored remaining span of earth's circumference. Here was the last cleared field for his development; for behind him, the crumbling ruins of the past impeded the free exercise of his being. Upon this land sprang forth the last most vigorous shoot from the great trunk of humanity, and many a weary traveller has sought shelter under its ample branches, many are the oppressed who have sought its protection from the oppressor, many a dim eye has brightened at the prospect of a peaceful home upon this highly-favored land.

Here might have been expected the roots to strike deep in the virgin soil, and the sturdy branches defy the raging elements, that has periodically swept over the Eastern hemisphere.

Here might have been expected religion would find shelter—cherished and united under one faith. And this land claim the honor to present to the world a model Government, and a Religion worthy for all mankind to imitate.

But alas, we are not one, though our motto once was "E Pluribus Unum." We certainly are not "Vox populi, vox Dei;" we are not united; and, although our Saviour prayed that his disciples might be one, even as he and the Father were one; religion is divided, and her votaries contentious; and corruption and depravity worse than heathenism fast overspreading Christendom.

What, then, is there no hope for the future? Yes; in God, He who has sustained through the past.

But if He is not willing to communicate again with man, then we are indeed lost; but if willing again to speak, and there are those who will not believe, then they are lost.

"Westward, the Star of empire wends its way."

Out of this last experiment of man, for he has now circumscribed the earth from the midst of present disorder and confusion, what, "Tree can spring forth for the healing of the Nations";

It must be, that which combines all his interests in one, which cannot be divided. That which is built upon the Rock of Ages, impervious to the waves of time. It must be, by God himself, by allowing Him to speak. The establishment of that "Zion," out of which the law shall go forth," in which "should be deliverance" that to which "they should gather together from the four quarters of the Earth" —Indeed, that never ending Kingdom which Daniel saw should be set up in the last days; over which Christ shall reign upon the earth; That Kingdom has already commenced upon the Earth; upon this continent; among this people; out of this government; it flourishes upon the mountain tops. It owns, acknowledged, and reveres "the God that made the Heavens, the Earth, and the fountains of waters," and He rules in the midst thereof. To it shall nations gather, "to learn of His ways, that they may walk in His paths, "Gentiles shall come to her light, and kings to the brightness of her rising." A tree under "whose branches all the fowls of the air shall find shelter."

From this continent shall "swift messengers" yet go to a nation scattered and peeled from the beginning." Upon this land is the "Standard reared," unto which "they shall gather as clouds, and as doves to their windows;" "The Mountains of Israel."

But how is all this to be accomplished? As the wisdom of man fails to penetrate the veil that shrouds the future from their view, so will his wisdom fail to provide for the great events, still hid in the womb of time.

How then can it be, without revelation from on high, without a people willing to hear, believe, and obey it; without a prophet, through whom He ever speaks to the people?

So it is, that Mormonism claims paternity upon this land, claims revelation from on high, and as in days of old, claims prophets in their midst, and the organizations of heaven and obedience to its laws. In it, is combined all the interests of mankind, both here and hereafter, with the blessings of the everlasting priesthood, the covenants and promises; the gathering of Israel, the establishment of righteousness, preparatory to the great Millenium, and second coming of Christ, and Reign of Peace upon the earth. This is Mormonism.

"He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

NEW ORLEANS, June 25.—Cholera has rapidly declined in this city, and during last week there were only 48 deaths from that disease.

"Mind Your Own Business."

MORMONISM has been made the common property and stock-in-trade of the whole fraternity of Editors, from Maine to Georgia, and from the Atlantic Ocean to the western bounds of Missouri; every village sanctum has become a dissecting room; knowing editors have flourished the scalpel over Mormonism without mercy; each in turn, ready to swear, they witnessed its mangled corse, consigned to its final resting-place; but like the "Danish ghost," it still stalks forth to haunt it's murderers; to their dismay, it is more than ghosts; it is an apparition of bona-fide flesh and blood—of living realities, that starts them in horror; that like Shakspeare's quills upon the fretful porcupine, their hair stands bristling forth.

Seriously, gentlemen, it is none of your business; here you comfortably sit behind your desks throwing your squib shells into Utah, as though that were a part of your commission. You talk about Brigham Young as though he was a candidate for New York, or the Presidency. Now, gentlemen, we thank you for the compliment, bnt he is not up for either yet, it is only a Governor of Utah that is desired; and that by its entire population; therefore, as freeborn citizens of the United States we say, it is none of your business who governs Utah, so long as he does it constitutionally, so long as he makes correct returns to the General Government, so long as he is the unanimous choice of the people of that Territory.

You have tried your hand at defaming the character of Gov. Young before the public without success. You charged him with defrauding government of $20,000—he stepped forward, and individually proffered to cash at sight a government draft, if they were not satisfied in its disbursement. There has been no draft made upon him yet, and there has been many appropriations since made to Utah, and under his administration.

You charge him with disloyalty and treason, unfortunately for your correctness and veracity, Col. Steptoe and the officers under his command, with the Judges, Secretary of State, Marshal, U. S. Attorney, and all the Gentile merchants in the Territory unite in the strongest recommendations of Governor Young, and petition to President Pierce, for his reappointment as Governor and agent of Indian Affairs. The same Col. Steptoe that was appointed, and refused the Governorship of Utah, the same Col. Steptoe and his command, that you assured the public, would unmask Mormonism, and scatter it to the four winds. Gentlemen—in what light shall we view your professed magnanimity and truth?

Gov. Young is beloved by the people of Utah; he led them through trials and difficulties, that you would have paled before. He led them from destitution and mob-rule, through the wilderness to a place of rest: under his invigorating administration, the wilderness "has been made to blossom as the rose." Suffice it to say, the people love him; he rules by love; he is their choice.

Your "special correspondents from Utah" are continually repudiated, and proven false, by the facts that follow their pretentions to truth; yet you do not improve by the experience. You tell of the tyranny of Brigham Young; of the insubordination of the people; and the horrid debauchery of the Mormons. Col. Steptoe, the merchants, and all the Government officers, send on a petition for the reappointment of Gov. Young, as the best person that could be selected; and the unanimous choice of the people; the best for the administration of Indian Affairs, and the only one, in accordance with our Republican institutions that ought to be appointed.

Of the insubordination of the people, besides the above testimony, we may include all honorable persons that have traveled the plains and passed through Utah, from which there have been innumerable letters published throughout the States; showing the good order, energy and perseverance prevailing there; in fact the industry and energy, necessary to make the vast amount of improvement over that extended and otherwise sterile and barren region, is enough, of itself to refute all your allegations of tyranny and insubordination.

Now for the debauchery of the Mormons. You Mr. Editors, all, know that Mr. Brocchus, and associate government officers, went out to Utah with similar ideas, to those that you endeavor to promulgate, about the Mormons, and he says, in his letter on his return, that "they found it very hard;" and from later dates we learn, that certain gentlemen from the States this last season, found it "very hard" so much so that they resorted to "Indian squaws" for consolation, now, you moral editors, that descant so piously upon Mormon immorality, tell us frankly, do you think that these worthy gentlemen would have been forced to such an alternative as to flirt with the copper hued Delilahs, in any other community, even New York or Boston not excepted?

But these people are believers in Polygamy; well, admitting they are; so was Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Or, supposing I believe in the polygamous doctrines of the Scriptures, what business is that of yours, so long as I do not transgress your laws? Or do you condescendingly propose to throw the mantle of your State Government over Utah, the world, "and the rest of mankind?" How benevolent; you no doubt will correct all the errors of the South, the West, and the East, with the esquimanx, of the Polar regions, and define the amount of blubber to the meal.

You are transcendently charitable; only leave you to govern, and the long hoped for millenium will be achieved.

We believe, with all the testimony in favor of Brigham Young—now before President Pierce, that he would not be justified, as a Republican, to appoint any other person to the Governorship of Utah.

We do not believe the editor honest, that, with the amount of testimony before the public, will assail Brigham Young and the people of Utah with slander and falsehood.

We do not believe the man a patriot or liberalist, that advocates the sending men to govern contrary to the wishes of the people; and any man who advocates unconstitutional measures to accomplish his ends, we view as a traitor to his country, an apostate to his oath of allegiance, and an outlaw to any community in which he lives.

Pic-Nic.

WE told our readers some time ago that we intended getting up a boat-sailing, picnicking party, &c., and now we are going at it; and this is to inform the world and "the rest of mankind" that we shall stop our paper for one week for this purpose. But some may ask, could you not attend your pic-nic and paper both? Yes, if we had a mind to; but we have not. We are going all hands right into it. Who would want the pleasure of their recreation alloyed by some old vamped-up Mormon story, some murder committed, nation overturned, or treasonable enterprise of the Mormons? No; we are determined to throw them all overboard for one week, and let the world wag. The filibusters can take Cuba; Kinney go to Nicaraugua; the Allies take Sebastopol, or the Russians whip them out; Kansas and the abolitionists may fight; the Indians take Laramie, or the man come down from the moon; we are bent upon a reasonable excursion; and business or no business, rain or shine, serene and calm, or "dunder und blitzen," off we go. We have called for all the officers of our staff to assemble themselves together, to pass under a grand review, and we are going to make war upon cherries, strawberries, wortleberries, fruits, fish, flesh, and fowl. It makes us feel well to think of it; we expect to feel very good-natured on our return. To the gentlemen of the quill we say, Fire away; you will have a clear field for one week.

In retiring for our temporary rustication, to our friends, one and all, we make our best bow, and say au revoir.

Women's Rights.

UNDER this head will be found in another column a long communication from Br. Robbins, in which the subject of woman's rights is partially discussed. We expect more in the future on this subject, and therefore must let him speak for himself.

And while we acknowledge the correctness of many of his statements, yet far would it be from us and we believe from him, to proscribe women in any of their legitimate rights or privileges, or to throw one straw in the way of their happiness or progression.

They are already abused, insulted, imposed upon, crushed, and neglected too much, God knows. When we see them aiming at education, exaltation, improvement, and the cultivation of some of the sciences and professions suitable to their sex, we cannot but admire the energy and talent which we frequently see displayed. Who is there that would put a straw in the way of their employment in many of the lighter trades, if they desire it. Surely it is not too great a boon to grant them the privilege of labor, the privilege to live by their industry; why, the negro has that privilege; and then the privilege of being paid just the same as men when they do the same labor, and not cheat them because they are the weaker vessels; this is too mean and degrading.

We acknowledge talent and worth in female just as much as male, where we find it. And we would state that whilst some professions we consider indelicate for ladies, yet we must admit that we have seen some sciences, particularly those pertaining to domestic economy and the science of life, as ably discussed and defended by ladies as gentlemen. We consider the Woman's Advocate, Philadelphia, printed, edited and conducted by ladies, as respectable and creditable a sheet as any we have met with. Who could object to Mrs. Fowler's lecture, and many other things of a similar kind? We consider many things attempted are officious, meddling and out of place, yet would give all encouragement to the fair sex to improve in the science of life in all appropriate labors and intellectual advancement, and particularly in the management of household affairs and domestic economy.

From the Plains.

The Herald has the following from St. Louis, by telegraph:

"ST. LOUIS, June 25, 1855.

"Nineteen Mormon missionaries, with the mail, arrived at Atchison on the 22d. They expect no danger."

The above corroborates the confidence we have before expressed, of there being less danger and annoyance from the Indians in traveling the plains this year than usual, as we were aware that the Dragoons would be on the route, and the road therefore much less likely to be infested by their war parties and beggars.

IMPORTANT ENTERPRISE.—Both branches of the California Legislature have passed a bill, which will probably be signed by the Governor, appropriating $100,000 to construct a wagon road from Sacramento to the eastern boundary of the State, by the way of Johnston's Cut Off. We learn from the San Francisco Herald that this is the most rugged and difficult portion of the road from Salt Lake to Sacramento. The Herald says that as soon as the wagon road shall be constructed, some of the California stage owners and express men will start a line of stages to Carson Valley, and so on to Salt Lake.

NEW GRANADA.—The law on religious liberty was signed by the Vice-President Mallarino, on the 14th of May. It decrees that there is no State religion, and that all public authority shall refrain from interfering in matters and things concerning the faith and worship of the people, provided the public peace or morals be not disregarded. Churches and communions of any denomination may be incorporated by law; and cemeteries other than Catholic may be instituted.

What Ought to be Done with the Mormons?

WE have seen a great many remarks made upon this subject, of late, many of which are really amusing. Men have written so many falsehoods that they now actually believe their own fabrications to be true, and after having scared up a great hobgoblin, are really afraid of their own spectre. The thing yclept public opinion is so various and conflicting that it is very difficult to find out anything definite or correct from its statements. Some think that this fellow Mormonism is a spiritual kind of an essence, a sort of ignis fatuus, intangible jack-o'-lantern concern; others, that he is a literal, material solidarité. Some think that he is a monster, in mein and essence; and others, that there is no especial harm in the critter. Some think, but don't say it, that he might be useful in an electioneering campaign, and that it would be better to propitiate him, as one of the elements to be fused in the approaching contest. Others have somewhat similar views, but think he would be opposed to them and their policy, and therefore it is better to lie about him, and do him all the harm we can. Some say that he is worse than the Jews, Irish, Germans, or even Catholics, and that he would not compare with either the pro-slavery or anti-slavery men. Notwithstanding, he is a regular Jonathan by birth, and a real native American in religion. Some think he has no rights, is a quiet, Simon Pure sort of a fellow, and can be disposed of like a quid of tobacco, a runaway negro, or a caught abolitionist, and that all that you would have to do with him would be to make ready! present! fire! bang!! and away he goes; he is blotted out; obliterated; melted away; not even a grease-spot left of him. Others think more soberly, and consider that he is a terrible fellow, a sort of Bluebeard, with a grim countenance, stern visage, and warlike mein, and that it would require a nation's power to bring him into subjection; while one old fellow, hearing the hubbub asks what have the Mormons done? Have they turned over the mountains, run away with the Mississippi, destroyed our cabbage beds, burned our railroad cars, passed resolutions about North or South, taken Nicaraugua or Cuba, killed the President, abjured the Constitution, defied the United States, instigated rebellion, imprisoned abolitionists, or stole niggers? Another, thinks they have done all this, and more too. While a third thinks that they have neither horns nor hoofs, that they have eyes, heads, ears, feet, noses, chins &c., that they are pretty much like other folks, and might make tolerable good christians, if they were only converted. While another, went so far, as to say, that they were "born free and equal" with others and have actually "the right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Now this is really a stretch of liberality unlooked for, in this enlightened, proscriptive, go-a-head age. This sentiment might have done for the old fogies who framed the constitution and bill of rights; in those dark ages when men's ideas had scarcely vegetated; but to talk of such doctrines now is ridiculous. It may do well enough for a speech on Washington's birth-day, or a Fourth of July oration; but then it is conceded that these are words without meaning. It won't do for this fast-enlightened-fillibustering-Young-American-go-aheaditive age. No, no; Mormons must not expect this; we must have them straightened out, and teach them that they cannot have the liberty of franchise, the rights of freemen, or "worship God according to the dictates of their conscience," in this enlightened age. We must put them down. Another thing must be done; and while we are straightening the Mormons, we may as well take that in hand; we refer to the man in the moon, and seriously call the attention of politicians to this matter. Some time ago he was taken up there, we are informed, for gathering sticks on the Sabbath day. Now, who does not know that this is a heinous crime? Yet, despite this, he is not ashamed of his acts; but there he sits, peeking down upon us; not among the little twinklers; but on the big, broad face of the full moon, displays openly his flagrant, shining shame, defying the vox populi. Now this is an assumption, on his part, that ought to be taken into immediate consideration, and be made one of the chief articles of our platform for the next Presidential election. No man ought to be allowed to take the highest gift of the people who will not pledge himself to remove this intolerable nuisance. It is worse than Mormonism, because more visible, flagrant, and glaring. Are the free and enlightened citizens of this great Republic to be everlastingly annoyed by this Sabbath-breaker peeping, peering, and impudently looking down upon them? and, when the silvery moon is shining, interrupting the equanimity of their pure, chaste thoughts? It must not, it cannot be. Mormonism must be put down, and so must the man in the moon; and then with these polygamists removed, and no dark shadow on Luna's bright face, we shall see her shining in her virgin splendor, unsullied and unalloyed, the fit emblem and true representative of the purity and virtue of the morals, religion, politics, and philosophy of this great Republic.

Indian Troubles.

IN our last we published several rumors, in relation to Indian outrages and particularly concerning the alledged capture of Fort Laramie, and its possession by the Indians. We believed then, from our knowledge of the position of affairs in that country that it was both unreasonable and impracticable. We are very happy to be able to inform our readers particularly, who have friends on the route and who are otherwise interested, that we are correct in our opinion, and that there exists no serious cause of alarm. The following from the New York Herald of last Sunday, will be sufficient upon that point:

"The War Department has received further advices which entirely discredit the reported capture of Fort Laramie by the Indians."

Russia and Mongolia.

THE acquisition by the Russians of a portion of the territory of the Mongolians, four chins having given in their allegiance, does not appear to have excited that attention which the movement demands. We have to consider, in any estimate of its importance, not merely the extent of the new territory and its geographical position, but the relation held by the Russian Government to the Mongolian races. Russia wins by diplomacy more than by military power. She concerns herself with the elements of nations, and as far as she can combine these, triumphs by means of her despotic sway. The present is no isolated movement—no mere annexation. It is but part of a vast system—the methodical extension of an increasing coalition. The Kalmucks, in her own territory, are a branch of the Mongolian race. The Kalmucks themselves allege that they dwelt, in old time, in the country lying between the Blue Lake (Koho Noor) and Thibet. In the day of the Mongol power, when the present four grand divisions were united under Ghengis Khan, we know how they swept from the regions of the Altai mountains over the whole of Eastern Europe, and at a later day, when broken up, and when the Mongols proper had to submit to the Chinese, we know how China carried on negotiations with those now beneath the Russian sceptre, and who, as the most formidable tribe in Asia, had encamped on the banks of the Volga, for the sake of bringing them beneath its sway; how the Kalmuck princes, in defiance of Russia, extended their way, and presently entered into alliance with Peter the Great in his famous expedition against China, and subsequently against the Turks; how, with innumerable herds of cattle, they presently extended to the foot of the northern slope of the Caucasus; how vast numbers were induced to go over to China, and how, when the Russian Government was endeavoring to adopt those principles of uniformity that now characterize its rule, abridging the power of the princes by a new organization in their administrative council, interfering with the primitive authority of their Khans, half a million left for China, leaving only fifteen thousand families in China, when the Volga, from not being frozen to an unusually late period, prevented from going the seventy families under Oulacha. It is matter of history that they arrived in China, in the thirty-sixth year of Kien Long, A. D. 1771, where they entreated the favor of being admitted as vassals of the empire. For this they had encountered a thousand perils. It has often been matter of wonder that Russia did not interpose to prevent the marching of the hordes. But to suffer them to go forth was part of the policy of the Muscovite Government; this most extraordinary emigration of modern times favored the traditional plan of aggrandizement. The plan of Russia is to familiarize men with the idea of her ascendancy, to accustom them to her sway, which can afford to be liberal in proportion to the readiness with which new populations assent to it. She saw in these departing people the hereditary enemies of the Turks and the Chinese—the Chinese having already subjected them, and the Turks having opposed their conquests in Asia. She had leart to avail herself of the elements of their barbaric power, and now had a band of connection even between Southern Russia and remote Thibet. At a later period, when the Moravian missionaries attempted to colonize the Kalmucks in Russia, she speedily put a stop to their proceedings; it was no part of her plan that these Mongolians should be dissevered in character and nature from those of Northern Russia. Even the emigration may have been by her secret instigation, the reason given by the fugitives, who had deserted the borders of the Volga and the Jaik, rivers which empty themselves into the Caspian Sea, that they had abandoned them to come and admire more closely the brilliant lustre of the heavens, and at last to enjoy, like so many others, the happiness of having for master the greatest prince in the world.

Russia, by the individuality of her government, has ever been able to avail herself of the most complex elements. Her own civilization being external, is an imposition; her apparent advancement in science is but the importation from other nations of the individuals who embody it, and who are the full fruits of real civilization; her principles of uniformity prevent that development of character that would seem to civilize and to elevate; and her progress to be checked by higher development of the mass composing other nations, this development affording means of unity superior to her own. She triumphs by division, and regards with no little satisfaction the varying elements composing the present alliance against her. What are these elements, based on varying views of national self-interest, and failing to regard the interests of the world at large, to her own policy, which concerns, in Sclavonic estimation, the well-being of the whole of Axia? With her double-headed eagle goes the cross; and the greater the superstition, the less does it interfere with, and the more subserve her course. The Mongol invasion, that overwhelmed all the East of Europe, is likely to find its counterpart in a Muscovite invasion, overwhelming all the North of Asia.

COL. KINNEY left behind him a pronunciamento explaining the suddenness and secrecy of his leave. He says his presence was imperatively necessary in Nicaragua, and as the United States interfered, his only course was to jump the fence and clear out, leaving his adherents to follow as they best can. His letter confirms the suspicion of the lawlessness of his scheme.

AN excursion party of about 250 persons, is talked of to leave Buffalo about the first of July, in a steamer, passing through the Saut Canal, and making the entire circuit of Lake Superior, stopping as long as the company may desire at all places of interest on the route.

Popular Sovereignty.

"WE do not consider it either wise or politic to agitate for the re-enactment of the Missouri Compromise. It ought never to have been repealed, but since the mischief is done, the only proper way of dealing with the present difficulty is to give full effect in the territories to the principle of popular sovereignty, by an additional law of Congress. The country was promised by the promoters of the Nebraska-Kansas acts a final settlement of the slavery question on the basis of popular sovereignty, but events in Kansas show that the Nebraska-Kansas acts do not sufficiently guarantee and protect the principle, and to meet this defect will be one of the duties of the next Congress. The General Government should exercise only the slightest supervisory care over the Territories. The first step in organizing a territory should be simply the declaring of its metes and its bounds, and throwing it open to settlement by citizens from all parts of the Union, taking care to limit the amount of land to which settlers might establish pre-emption claims. After the actual population of the territory reached three or five thousand, the settlers should have the right to organize a territorial Government, by electing Executive and Judicial officers, the right of voting being confined to the citizens actually resident in the territory for three months preceding the day of election.

"This would be such a recognition of popular sovereignty as would secure the people of the territories the full and free enjoyment of their Republican rights, and would remove their contentions from the arena of National politics. When they had multiplied and increased so that their numbers would give them a right to form a State organization and ask admission into the Union on an equal standing with the other States, the duty of Congress would be limited to the inquiry, "Do they come to us with a Republican constitution?" and admitting them if the answer proved satisfactory.

"But if Congress shall go on legislating for the territories, and authorizing the General Government to appoint and control their executive and judicial officers, the popular soverignty principle will be flagrantly violated, and the affairs of the territories will be a perpetual source of strife between different sections of the country. Let it be the aim, then, of the next Congress to give a full and fair effect to the principle of popular sovereignty in the territories, and upon this safe and sound basis the patriotic and union-loving majority can make a firm stand against all sectionalism and traitorous disunionism."—N. Y. Sun.

The above is as reasonable, consistent and common sense a view on the subject in question as we have seen lately. Why should the inhabitants of a Territory be interfered with by the inhabitants of other States, or rather a few truckling, office-seeking, interested demogogues. If Republicanism means anything, and there is any virtue in our much boasted motto, the Vox Populi, what have other States to do with affairs of Territories? The Territories do not interfere with States; why then should they be interfered with? It is the interference of reckless demogogues who, for abstract political purposes, have introduced their favorite dogmas in an extra-politico manner, that has caused all the disasters and troubles that have so much afflicted Kansas. If they had been let alone, and things allowed to take their proper legitimate course, there would have been no difficulty. These settlers, we say, ought to be protected in their rights. Are not men who brave the difficulties of a new country; who dare the Indians, kill the snakes, make the roads, and build the bridges, as capable of knowing what they want as some of our city counter-jumpers and Miss Nancy politicians? It is an outrage upon the principles of justice, reason, common sense and our Republican institutions to act otherwise. This interference is revolting to the mind of a freeman, and if anything will rouse up his feelings and cause him to burn with indignation, it is an unnatural assumption of men that he knows are not half so competent as himself to interfere with his political franchise and rights as a freeman.

WASHINGTON, June 25, 1855.

"Important dispatches have been received here by the last steamer from Mr. Mason, our Minister at Paris. He has taken strong ground against the conduct and views of the French government in relation to the rights of neutrals in the Baltic, as illustrated in certain alleged acts of the allied blockaders. Mr. Mason had also called the French Minister of Foreign Affairs to account in reference to those late high-handed proceedings of Monsieur Dillon, the French Consul at San Francisco. Our Minister's dispatches upon this subject so thoroughly fired up Mr. Pierce that he was for a war with France right off, but Marcy interposed and secured an armistice for one week, by which time he expects more pacific advices from Paris."—[N. Y. Herald.

It seems the object of certain pettifogging office-seekers to get Government into difficulty, if it is by any means possible; not successful with Spain, they would saddle us with a war with France, merely from a mistake which might naturally arise between parties speaking different languages, as in the present instance. Capt. Watson, of H. B. M. ship Imperieuse, on arriving in the Baltic, sent a communication to the Russian authorities, intimating "that neutral ships then in Baltic ports might quit, but only in ballast, or with cargoes not considered Russian property." When the inquiry was put to Capt. Watson, whether neutral vessels allowed by him to depart from Baltic ports after the establishment of the blockade, in ballast, or with cargoes, would be at liberty to pursue their voyage without risk of being detained by any of her Majesty's cruisers which they might fall in with at sea; he replied that he could not undertake to say that such would be the case, inasmuch as the Admiral commanding the British fleet might hereafter make other arrangements. From these imputed declarations of Capt. Watson, the Russian Government concluded (and we think not without cause, notwithstanding Lord Clarendon's counterplot) that the British Government was about to abandon her declaration of last year, "that she would not interfere with enemy's property laden on board a neutral ship, unless it was contraband of war." A statement to that effect was addressed by Count Nesselrode to the Russian Minister at Brussels, with directions that copies of it should be forwarded to the American Ministers at London and Paris. (This, of course, would be but a neighborly act between Governments that are on good terms with each other, under the circumstances, as it was understood by the Russian Government.)

Following this, Lord Clarendon comes out with a circular to all her Majesty's consular agents abroad, and contradicts the assertion of Count Nesselrode, and implies a degree of duplicity in the Russian Government, in trying to enlist the sympathies of neutral powers, &c. This implication of the Russian Government is made to turn upon the construction put upon the alleged answer of Lieutenant De Kantzow, of the said ship, to the Russian Governor, in which Lord Clarendon endeavors to show there was a mistake.

On which Mr. Mason, our Minister at Paris, adopting the Russian view of the case, and acting, perhaps, somewhat hastily, replies to the circular, and immediately forwards dispatches to Washington containing his views of the subject, while Mr. Buchanan in his views, it seems, is inclined to coincide with Lord Clarendon's circular, and believes it all gas on the part of Count Nesselrode.

So stands the beam at present, and plenty to throw their weight, or wind, in for War, WAR, WAR, with anybody, only done with these peaceable, quiet times, for in them there is no hope of spoil for such demagogues.

FOR THE MORMON.

Women's Rights.

Much of late has been said and written with regard to the rights of women. Talented females have mounted the rostrum, pressing the claim of their sex to an equality with that portion of creation that has so long lorded over them, confiscating and appropriating to their own aggrandizement those rights assigned to them in the economy of Heaven. Male lecturers and editors, from an aversion probably to be thought ungallant, and from a disposition to pursue the popular course of flattery which, though costing nothing, never fails to pay an ample dividend in the approving looks and well-wishes of the fair sex, have followed with much power and ability in the advocacy of the same claim. I doubt not, however, that there are exceptions among the latter, who believe and teach conscientiously the equality of the sexes in authority and government, whether national or family, in all the relations of life. To such as advocate these principles with an honest purpose and conscientious zeal (whether male or female), I, with every other man professing liberal principles, award commendation, as we always should do, to those who act thus conscientiously. But to concede a person's honesty is not always to acknowledge the principles he advocates by any means. I claim the same honesty that I award when I say, conscientiously, that I do not consider the equality of the sexes (as aforenamed) tenable, either by Scripture, philosophy, or common sense. With this honest difference understood, I purpose to examine this claim by the above rules, desiring to place the subject in its true position, and never to pluck unjustly one feather from the cap of those fair creatures, without whose presence the earth would be a blank, and men the most miserable of all created beings.

The account given by Moses of the formation of Eve from a rib taken from the side of Adam is frequently quoted by those equal rights' advocates, to show that the fact of her being taken from his side is circumstantial evidence that it was the design of the Creator that she should be equal with him. If such was the design, it seems to have been very soon changed, which would place the designer in a position to contradict the whole tenor of the Scriptures, that "God is an unchangeable being." The passage, Genesis 3d, 16th, which follows the chapter in which the creation of Mother Eve is recorded, and which is directly to the point, (of authority) reads as follows: "Unto the woman, he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee." Can anything be more pertinent to the point at issue than this Mosaic testimony? I doubt whether a plainer could be constructed from the English language. If this was all, however, we could hardly come up to the Scriptural requirement, that "by the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established;" but we find Paul has been very explicit on this subject in a variety of instances, placing the woman in the same relation to the man, as the Church is to Christ; so that it would be just as consistent, according to Paul's reasoning, for the Church to contend with Christ for an equal right to dictate in matters pertaining to either, or both, as for a woman to contend with her husband for the same point. The Apostle farther proceeds, and says in so many words, "I suffer not a woman to teach or usurp authority over a man." Peter follows in the same strain, saying, "Likewise ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands;" illustrating the same by a reference to Sarah, the wife of Abraham, (who is reckoned as the father of the faithful,) portraying her obedience; stating that she went so far in her submission as to even call him Lord (a title beyond what any man pretends to claim from his consort at this day,) adding "whose (Sarah's) daughters ye are as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement." I deem it unnecessary to quote farther from the Scripture, as I presume no one will pretend to argue the equality of sexes on scriptural ground; but thus much I have adduced, having seen some that profess to believe in the doctrines of the Bible, yet (innocently, no doubt,) advocating the "two-headed system."

If we examine the subject philosophically we find no less objections than before. Order, and gradation, are found in all the works of the Creator; and even among the systems of men, we rarely find this order departed from owing to the disastrous results which usually follow such departure. How would it comport with our inate sense of propriety, and good Government, to recognise two Gods holding equal authority with reference to the planet on which we live; such a thing would be to us an anomoly; and until we could have it understood, which was the principal to whom we might look for a final decision, we should be in much perplexity. The same with the National Government; place for instance two Presidents at the head of our governmental affairs, endowed each with the same power and authority to wield the affairs of State, does such an idea find an approval in a philosophic mind, nay! it revolts at it, whether in male or female, insomuch that it has become a philosophic proverb, that "a thing with two heads is a monster." Suppose one President acting on his prerogative, as generallisimo of all the forces raised and susceptable of being raised in the States, should order those forces to our Kansas frontier, to sustain those abolisionists against their pro-slavery neighbors whose too close proximity has rendered them obnoxious; then on the other-hand, the other President whose predilliction, might favor the other side of the question, should make the same legal efforts, on the same prerogative, in favor of the latter, against the former! Who so blind as not to foresee the disastrous result of such an inconsistent perversion of law and order! Yet that such occurrences, under such an administration, would be unavoidable, no one I presume will question. It may be urged however, that equality among Gods, Emperors, Presidents, Mayors, &c., is on a larger scale, and will not apply to those minor relations of husband and wife; but I argue the principle is the same in every department in life, and extends even all the way down from God himself through every grade of the animal creation. Two partners in the Mercantile business, can never do a prosperous, and systematic business until one or the other is acknowledged really, if not ostensably, the governing genius of the firm.

The principal of rank, and gradation in government and control, holds good mentally as well as physically; and vice versa, the superior ruling the weaker. Again, it may be urged that some females are more capable (owing to their superior talent) of governing the family than their husband, and consequently should do so according to this philosophy. This, I admit, would be true if the position was correct; but a man taking a wife superior in talent and ability to himself, or a woman attaching herself to a man of inferior powers to her own, are perversions of the laws of nature, or of God. As soon should we place a man, with ideas scarcely above an oyster, over the affairs of State, including within his jurisdiction the combined talent and education of the land, as to place him in the above position; it is one of those incongruities that Pope justly calls a "sin against the Eternal Cause." But, says the lady of twenty-five or thirty (if modesty permit), "I have loved only to be disappointed, and see the object of my affections placed beyond my reach by uniting with my rival—the laws of my State forbid that I too shall become his wife, which leaves me no alternative but to marry mechanically at the first opportunity (if such shall ever occur), or fail to answer the design of God in my creation."

These are facts, constantly being demonstrated in our midst, and who can't see that either alternative is a perversion of the laws of our being?

Woman is so constituted that though she may have an abundance of this world's goods, she is not satisfied short of becoming a mother and exercising those faculties which so eminently qualify her to become the guardian and tutor of her own offspring. This is her true element (although perversions of the laws of nature have produced exceptions in the present state of society). This being an established fact, and the preponderance of the sexes being on the part of the females, and an augmentation of that preponderance caused by the bachelor predilections of quite a portion of the male minority, and the laws of the different States prohibiting the plurality of wives, it is not to be wondered that the female portion of the community should be dissatisfied with the present state of things, and undertake to make some change for the better. Who blames them? I do not. That woman has been abused, tyranized over and crushed beneath the iron heel of her despotic sovereign, is too true. And that those who were designed in the economy of heaven to be her protectors and guardians in all tenderness, as unto the weaker vessel, are the very ones who seek her overthrow and destruction, by robbing her of that virtue which to a spirited female is dearer than even life itself, is also true. But will the present equal rights movement have the desired effect? I conclude it will not. What is the panacea? Can the wise men and legislators of this generation tell? If they cannot, the Mormons can.

Texas Correspondence.

WACO VILLAGE, June 6, 1855.

BRO. TAYLOR—Dear Sir: You, among the rest of our brethren, are perhaps unaware that we have recently established our Church in this far distant land. On last Sabbath we had preaching in the Court House in this place, which was numerously attended by all Christian denominations, as they call themselves; a good feeling and general satisfaction prevailed. The Campbellites, or, as they call themselves, "Christians," are very much pleased with our new minister, Bro. Grant, who has so kindly favored us with his presence, and preached at the instance and by the request of the Baptists three days and nights in the school-house on the Busque creek, some ten miles distant from this place; and I am happy to inform you that he baptized seven. Among the number were two members of the Methodist Church, which has caused some hard feelings towards the Saints; but we are conscious of our right motive and correct principles, and are not afraid to meet any Gentile sect or denomination whatever upon a fair, honest, and truthful translation and rendering of the Scriptures. Bro. Grant has many warm friends here, and he is admired by all parties for his kind and amiable disposition and Christian-like deportment. He is a young man of extraordinary learning, and has of late been ordained in our Church at St. Louis, Mo.: he has been residing in Grimes county for some time. His parents, who reside in Grimes county in this State, were Presbyterians until very recently. They have joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and now commune and have become united among us, and rejoice in the fullness of truth; the blessings of the gospel of peace.

This portion of country is near the extreme frontier of the State; is a good and excellent section of country, high, and abounds in the most beautiful prairie, with skirts of excellent timber, which consists of cedar, ash, cotton wood, and burr oak. The former is very abundant, and is mostly used for building purposes and rail fences, which reminds me of our Church and religion, never decays—everlasting. We have a Church at Port Sullivan, seventy miles below this place, on the Brazos river, and many members, with buoyant prospects of many more joining in a short time. Bro. Grant leaves for Bellton in a few days, which is some fifty miles west of this place, and requests me to remember him to Bro. Taylor, as well as our brethren in your city; and may God in his mercy protect, govern, and bless you and all the Saints throughout all the land, and may our dearly and beloved brethren who are now at Salt Lake, and who have been persecuted and ill-treated, prosper under the guidance and directions of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; and through his agent on earth, Brigham Young. Amen.

T. E. CHARLTON.

By the same mail as the above, we have word from our old friend Judge Thomas, who has been laboring in Texas. The last word we had was that he had raised up a branch; whether this is the one or not we don't know. He writes from Vine Grove P. O., Washington county, Texas, June 5th. We give the following extract:

"I have baptized none since I wrote last week, but expect to soon. I now think I shall take a trip to the western part of Texas in a week or two, as I have received a letter from them, inviting me to visit that quarter. The work seems to progress slowly, yet there are some very good people inquiring, and I hope to roll out a good company by another season. Please to remember me in your prayers. May the Lord bless you in New York, bring us to our homes in peace, and save us all in his celestial kingdom, is the prayer of your devoted brother in Christ." PRESTON THOMAS.

Mormonism.

THIS is a fruitful topic with some of our cotemporaries, and evidently puzzles their philosophy not a little. All concur in the idea that it is an evil; but how are we to get rid of it? The Albany Transcript puts forth the absurd idea that government should put it down by force of arms. It says:

"In view of the fact that this society is the vilest excrescence as a religious community—that it is utterly deficient in the grand primal elements of truth and principle—that it presents an antagonism of the deadliest hate and most determined character to all that is noblest, purest, best in our national institutions—and finally, that it is increasing in numbers and strength so rapidly that its chiefs laugh at our impotence as a government to avenge our own wrongs in our own territory—in view of all this, we ask, is it not time that firm and immediate action was taken by our federal authorities, at least to check and repress the extension of the evil, if eradication cannot be pursued?"

To this the Knickerbocker replies in the following tart manner:

"It is all very well to say 'repress the evil,' and 'put down Mormonism,' but how is it to be done? Would our friend wage a civil war against the Saints? If he would, what good would that effect? Did the editor of the Transcript ever know a religion to be put down with artillery? But granting that gunpowder would sweeten the morals of Utah, where in the Constitution has the government a right to resort to such power for any such purpose? Congress has certain well-established limits within which it can act, but within these limits we find no authority that would warrant the government in waging war against a people because their marriages are such as Noah, Abraham and Moses believed in. We say that Congress has no power to act in the premises. If the editor of the Transcript thinks differently, he will confer a favor on us by pointing out the chapter and verse. If Congress can put down the Mormons for having a dozen wives, why not our friends the Shakers for having no wives at all? The Shakers believe that marriage is a sin—a doctrine which would depopulate the world in a century. The editor of the Transcript says that bigamy is injurious to the best interests of the State. If that be so, what must we say of a faith that places an embargo on the supply of children?—an article without which the United States would soon become a howling wilderness. If the Transcript would preserve its consistency, it must not only war against the Mormons, but against our broad-brimmed friends of Niskayuna. Will it do so? We pause for a reply. Face the music, Jakey, and define your position."

It is always best to count the cost of an undertaking before it is commenced, and also to consider the means of accomplishing it. Perhaps some of our cotemporaries can show that the government has both the authority and the means of suppressing religious evils at will. If so, we hope they will do it.—[Dispatch.

We can honestly say with the Dispatch, we hope so too. This eternal tirade about nothing is as contemptible as it is ridiculous. Come, gentlemen, bring on your reasons; we call for proof; these frothing, fuming, bleating, empty words are nothing. We know you don't want the will; but give us your reasons; come, you have most of you been dabbling in the monstrosities of Mormonism; if you can't show them, the people will begin to disbelieve you. What a pity you can't make your exhibits! The old saying is—

"Vice is a monster of so foul a mein,
That to be hated needs but to be seen."

If that is true, and there are so many evils about Mormonism, they are easily pointed out. The editor of the Dispatch thought he knew all about it a few weeks ago; he now calls for help. Do step forward, gentlemen, and give him a little assistance.

Salt Lake Mail.

WHERE is our mail? What excuse have our mail contractors for not bringing it? Is the whole Territory and the States beyond, with all their interests, to depend upon the caprices of one man? These trumped-up Indian difficulties may perhaps suit the convenience of interested parties. Our missionaries, who neither get pay nor Congressional appropriations, can carry the mail and do the work of others that are officially favored. What does it mean? Are we to be eternally mocked and insulted, and then as a palliative offered no other antidote than the sickening, nauseating, old woman's tales of "Indian difficulties!"

If missionaries are not afraid to carry mails, it speaks little for the heroism of mail contractors, aided by Government troops and Government appropriations, to say, "Oh, dear! I'm afraid."

FIGHT IN NEW MEXICO.—The Frontier News at Westport, Mo., of the 7th, has the following:—Just as we go to press, we learn from Colonel Boone that the Apache Indians had attacked two companies of the United States troops garrisoned in New Mexico, and killed upwards of fifty men and all the officers of one company.

Atchison an Outfitting Point.

To give our readers an idea of the amount of business done in our city, we give the names of some of the principle shippers who are now outfitting here.—Livingston, Kinkead, & Co., the Salt Lake Merchants, who had made arrangements to start from Leavenworth City, after outfitting one train at that place, which was four days arriving within five miles of this city, landed the ballance of their freight, (80 tons) here, and will do all business which they may hereafter have, in the outfitting line, at Atchison. Mr. Blair, another merchant, with a large train and heavy freight, is also in our place, making arrangements to start for Utah at an early day. Messrs. Hooper & Williams, will start from Atchison this season, about one hundred and fifty waggons, and probably a much larger train next spring. Mr. Kimball, with his extensive train, heavily freighted, is on the eve of departure for the Salt Lake valley. The merchants named above, comprise the chief business firms in Salt Lake City, and have control of the vast trade between that place and the States.

In addition to the large shipments of the traders named above, the entire Mormon Emigration, which is of itself sufficient to build up a large town, starts from Atchison. We cannot give the exact number of waggons necessary to convey five thousand emigrants, with their goods and effects, so long a journey, but our readers can see that the number must be large. They have already landed at our wharf about a thousand tons of freight, and a much larger quantity is yet to arrive.

This is the first season that shippers have been suited in an outfitting point. Here all advantages offered, (separate, in other places) are combined. The best range in the world, with a great quantity of good water, a healthy city, with a good landing; large and commodious warehouses, and stores well filled with goods, adapted to the wants of the emigration. Shippers who have examined this place, endorse it as the best outfitting point for the California, Oregon and Salt Lake Emigrants, on the Missouri River.—[Squatter Sovereign.

Great Democratic Demonstration.

As we are just going to press, we have not room to give the particulars of a large Democratic meeting held at the Metropolitan Theatre on Wednesday evening last; suffice it to say, it was numerously attended, and might with propriety be called the Mass Meeting of the National Democracy of the city of New York. Many honorable and distinguished gentlemen were present. The Hon. Samuel Beardsley was chosen President, and a number of Vice-Presidents as well as Secretaries were appointed. The Hon. Judge Beardsley, Daniel S. Dickinson, Mr. Sickles and other distinguished gentlemen addrssed the audience; letters were received and read from G. M. Dallas, Greene C. Bronson, Harmon S. Cutting, F. P. Stanton and others. Resolutions were presented and adopted, which we are sorry that we have not room for at present. We give however the following, and must leave the remainder for another time:

RESOLVED, That Congress has no power to interfere with or attempt to dictate or control the domestic institutions of States or Territories, and that its power to do so in the District of Columbia, being gravely disputed, ought not to be exercised; that we deprecate and oppose the agitation of the subject of slavery in Congress, under any shape or form; and while we approve of, and will adhere to, as just and constitutional, the existing legislation upon the subject of the rendition of fugitive slaves, and the principle of the acts organizing the Territories of Utah, Kansas and Nebraska, we demand, in the name of the sound Union feeling of the country, that all insane sectional prejudices—unfraternal agitations—and hypocritical aggressions, fomented by designing and dangerous men, shall cease.

RESOLVED, That the unqualified hostility of all friends of free institutions should be visited upon that spirit of sectarian enmity which has been invoked of late for partizan objects by designing men in our midst; that we utterly oppose the proscription from office or deprivation of civil rights of any citizen on account of his religious belief honestly entertained, and the enjoyment of which has been sacredly guaranteed to him under our State and Federal Constitutions, and that the man who will deliberately in this the nineteenth century, and in these United States of America, lend his voice or his vote for the building up of political parties upon religious differences, is unworthy of the honor of American citizenship.

Information Wanting.

THE London Times of the 4th instant has news from the United States by the arrival of the Asia at Liverpool, and of the Hermann at Southampton. The news is rather peculiar in several particulars, and worthy of being known on this side the water.

It appears from the London Times, that "Judge Edmonds has decided" the constitutionality of the Maine law, which may, therefore, be considered as being set at rest. It would appear from the method of stating this important decision, that the law has been passed by the National Legislature instead of by those of individual States!

It also appears to be a fact worthy of importance and of rejoicing, that "the Rev. Thorne Parker, of Boston, has addressed an audience in the slaveholding State of Wilmington, Delaware," a locality which is apparently quite familiar to the geographers at the Times office.

Of course, the Herald humbug (first invented by Col. Benton) about Mormon complicity with the Indian murderers of Capt. Gunnison, and the New York Times raw head and bloody bones stories about secret associations of slaveholders "sworn to destroy Northern men" in Kansas, find a fitting copyist, and are served up to the enlightened "British public" as veritable facts. They are excellent Know Nothings over there!

LOSS OF THE UNITED STATES BRIG PORPOISE—THE JAPAN TREATY, ETC.—Washington, June 25, 1855.—The Navy Department to-day received official intelligence which has fixed the conviction in relation to the loss of the sloop-of-war Porpoise, with her officers and crew.

Commander Adams has arrived, bringing hither the treaty between the United States and Japan, as ratified by the Emperor.

The Grand Jury is engaged in examining witnesses to ascertain who destroyed the stone presented by the government of Rome to the Washington Monument.

Triumphant Passage Through the Sant Canal.

The steamer Baltimore, Captain John Reed, of Colonel McKnight's Lake Superior line, reached this port yesterday about 5 1-2 o'clock P. M. The Baltimore left this city nearly four years ago, and was taken across the Portage to Lake Superior, where she has been ever since. Her arrival yesterday created not a little enthusiasm and excitement on the dock, and all were on the qui vive for news concerning the opening of the canal. The steamer Illinois entered the canal at about eleven o'clock, A. M. on Monday, and passed all the locks to the caisson gate without difficulty. Here she was detained until eleven o'clock P. M. This gate had never been moved, and it required the united exertions of the Illinois, pushing on the lower side, and the Baltimore pulling on the upper side, to move it. After the Illinois had got through, the Baltimore immediately entered, and made the passage in two hours, without the least detention. Considering that she came through in the night, the passage was a remarkably quick one. The next day the propeller General Taylor and the schooners Fanny and Floy, both loaded, passed through in an hour and a half. The Illinois passed on up to Ontonagon, whence she will return. On the north bank of the canal, just above the second lock, the water was shoving itself through pretty freely, and it was deemed advisable to put in the caisson gate, and draw the water out so as to give the banks a chance to settle. Superintendent Burt thought, hower, that he should have no difficulty in passing vessels through as fast as they should arrive. From the little use already had of the canal, Mr. Whiting thinks it is evident that a guard gate will have to be put in at its head.—[Detroit Free Press, June 22.

European News.

THE steamship Baltic arrived at this port on the morning of the 28th, with seven days later news from Europe.

This arrival brings telegraphic details of the French capture of Mamelon and White Works, after sanguinary fighting in which five thousand were killed and wounded. The French took sixty-two guns and five hundred prisoners, and their new position enables them to shell the shipping in Sebastopol harbor. Simultaneously the English stormed and took Riflemen's Works in the quarries. Since then the firing has been slack. The fleets have achieved new successes in the Sea of Azoff, and have burned stores at Taganrog, Marionpol and Genitchi, and a boat expedition is fitting out against Perekoy. The Russians are reported to have evacuated Anapa. Nothing from Tchernaya or the Baltic.

The Hon. Milliard Fillmore, late President of the United States, and suite, have arrived in London, and taken apartments at Fenton's Hotel. Mr. Fillmore was presented to Queen Victoria by the Earl of Clarendon, at an "audience," and subsequently was present at a "drawing room." Mr. Buchanan accompanied him. Mr. Fillmore afterwards dined with the Queen.

The Hon. Martin Van Buren and Col. Van Buren have arrived at Long's Hotel, London.

THE WAR.

The following dispatch has been received from General Pelissier:

CRIMEA, Saturday, June 9—11 P. M.

The situation is the same as yesterday. All the demonstrations of the enemy against the conquered works have been fruitless. They have abandoned the so-called battery of the 2d of May; they have also completely abandoned to us the right shore of Careening Bay.

The vessels in port have sought refuge in Artillery Bay, where our large mortars can reach them. We are watching them attentively.

JUNE 10, 11 1-2 P. M.—The combat of the 7th of June was more advantageous for us than I had at first announced to you. It placed in our hands 502 prisoners (of which number 20 are officers), and 73 pieces of cannon.

JUNE 11, 11 P. M.—We are consolidating ourselves in the new works. We have been able to fire with the Russian mortars on their ships, which have gone still further off.

We are preparing new batteries.

The fortress of Anapa was abandoned by its garrison on the 5th of June. It is now occupied by the Circassians.

Russian interests in that quarter are very seriously compromised.

PARIS, June 12.—The latest information from the Crimea states that General Morris, at the head of a cavalry force, had made a reconnoisance of the entrenched camp possessed by the enemy beyond the Tchernaya, and estimated the number of the enemy to be between eighty and one hundred thousand men.

The heat was excessive in the camp.

Gen. Pellissier was forming a depot of provisions on the Tchernaya.

Accounts from Varna mention the rumor that preparations for an expedition against Perekop were being made.

MARSEILLES, June 12, 1855.

We learn that the allied troops occupying the valley of Kamara, on the banks of the Tchernaya, amount to fifty thousand men. They have wood and water in abundance. The aqueduct that leads to the Careenage, and which was diverted by the Allies to deprive Sevastopol of water, has been repaired for the service of the camp.

General Bosquet was to invest the north side of Sevastopol at the head of his corps d'armee.

Letters from Constantinople state that the dismissal of Riza Pasha, the Minister of War, arose from a threat made by Omer Pasha that he would send in his resignation if Riza did not retire.

Riza Pasha is appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Imperial Guard, instead of Mehemet Reschid Pacha, the head of the War Party at Constantinople.

The Sultan has consented to hand over 3,000 of the Turkish troops, to form a skeleton for the Anglo-Turkish army of reserve at the Bosphorus. The Turkish officers will be replaced by English officers, as soon as the latter are able to give the word of command in the Turkish language.

Gorchakoff writes from the Crimea that the cannonade against the Romiloff Bastion still continued on the 9th.

A manifesto dated St. Petersburgh, June 2, ordained; that in case of the decease of the present Emperor, the Grand Duke Constantine shall be regent during the minority of the Crown Prince. The regency is to continue during the minority of the second, should the eldest die. The Empress is to be guardian.

THE CRIMEA.

The correspondence is down to the 4th. The Guards had lost thirty-five men from the cholera. The 31st Regiment had also lost many more. The weather was excessively hot. The army had received 6,000 drafts since May 1. It was thought the force under Sir George Brown would return and land about six miles east of Balaklava, and form a junction with the force on the Tchernaye.

All accounts agree that there is a vast amount of disease and despondency in the garrison of Sevastopol.

Private letters and documents taken at Kertch give a fearful account of the sufferings of the Russian army, as well from wounds as sickness. The frequent burials which are continuing to be made in the cemetaries on the north side, confirm the information on this subject.

Information is said to have been obtained that the Russians have secured a communication with the Crimea independent of the road traversing the Isthmus of Perekop, by means of a bridge of boats across the Sirwash.

Corrected to June 28.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Cornellle, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

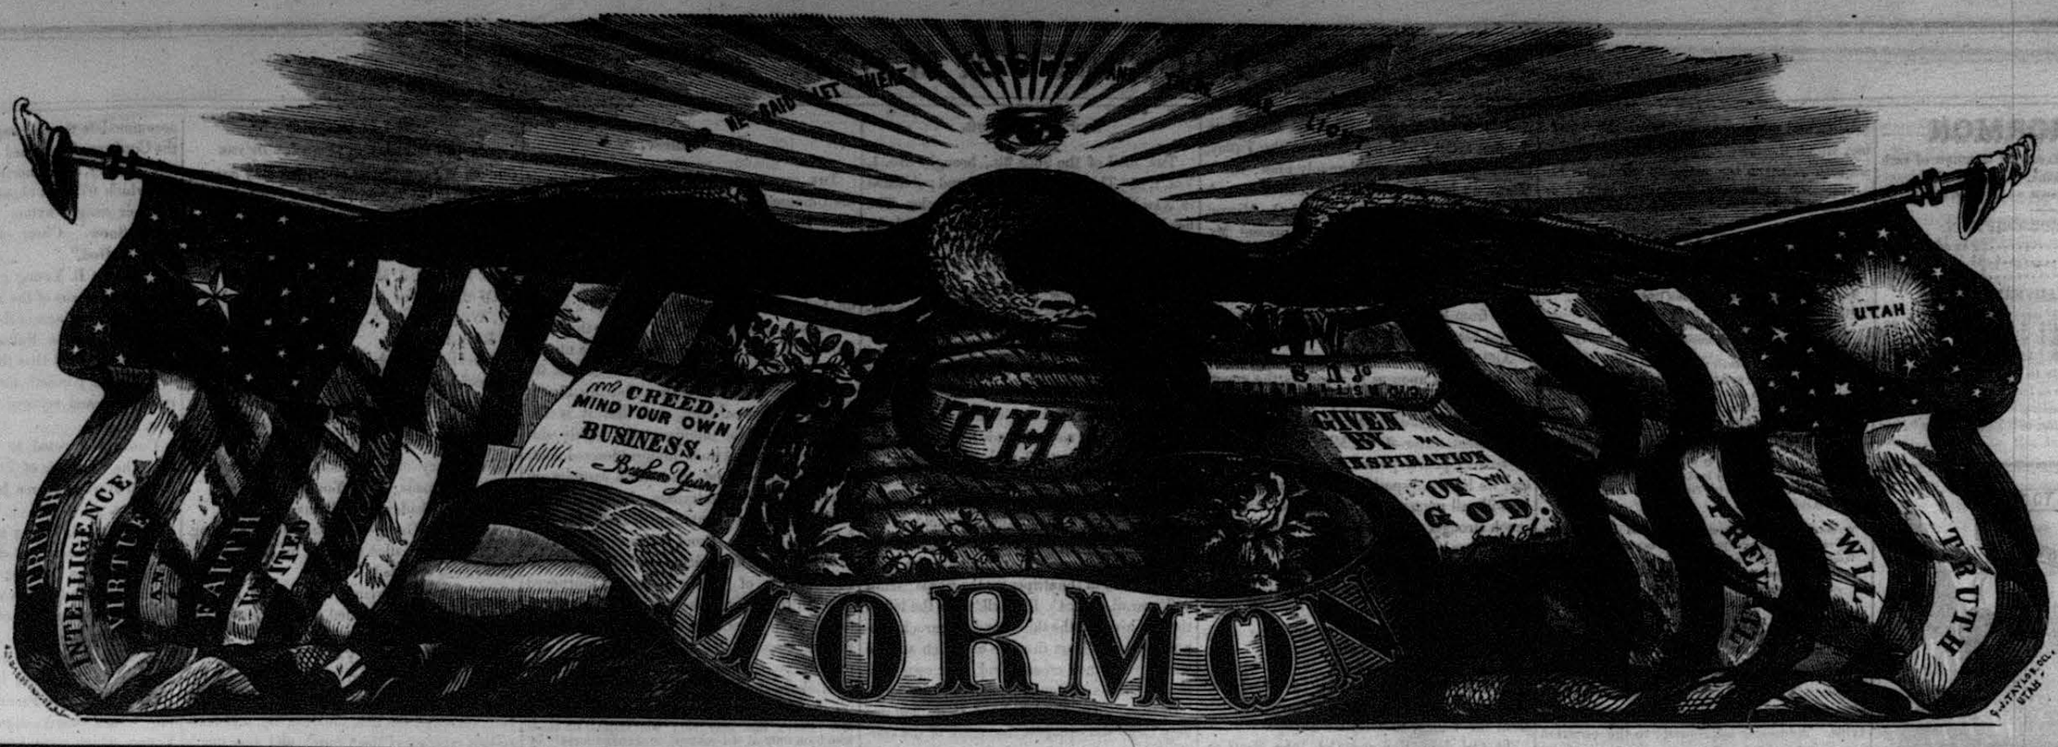
ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.



The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Steel Engravings by Charles Fenn and Edwin Roffee:

New Orleans;	Entrance to Kanesville;
Baton Rouge;	Council Bluff Ferry, and group of cottonwood trees;

The First No. of the above Work was published in Liverpool by Elder F. D. Richards, in July last, and will be continued monthly untill complete.

Persons wishing to obtain them can leave their orders at our office, No. 102 Nassau street, corner Ann, Room No. 9. Immediate application should be made, so as to send our orders to Liverpool before the season passes for the Spring Emigration.

HYMN,

Sung at Conference, April 6, 1855.

BY BERNARD SNOW.

AIR—"God Save the King."

OUR God, we raise to Thee
Thanks for Thy blessings free,
We here enjoy;
In this far western land,
A true and chosen band,
Led hither by Thy hand,
Would sing for joy.

Bless Thou our prophet dear;
May health and comfort cheer
His noble heart:
His words with fire impress
On souls that Thou wilt bless,
Nor gold may they caress,
But free impart.

So shall Thy kingdom spread,
As by Thy prophets said,
From sea to sea.
As one united whole
Truth burn in every soul,
While hast'ning to the goal
We long to see.

O may Thy saints be one,
Like Father and the Son,
Nor disagree;
United heart and hand,
So may they ever stand,
A firm and valiant band
Eternally.

Twelfth General Epistle

Of the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to the Saints in the Valleys of the Mountains, and those scattered abroad throughout the Earth, GREETING:

BELOVED BRETHREN:

Under the blessings of an overruling Providence for our preservation, we have renewed obligations of thankfulness and praise to our Father in heaven, whose protecting care has turned aside the shafts of death, and sheltered us, as with a mantle, from the scourges and devastations which have been poured out upon the earth.

We have truly realized that His power has been over us for good, and that these distant vales have thus far proved a safe retreat, wherein the saints have found quiet, health, prosperity, and peace, while the indignation of the Lord has partially visited the nations. Our hearts are full of joy when we reflect how kindly the Lord has overruled seeming evil for good, and turned the wrath of man to His praise, by delivering so many of his saints from wicked Babylon, and from the power of their enemies, before these scenes of woe, confusion, and distress spread desolation and affliction over the earth. At the same time we feel anxious for those faithful saints who are still obliged to wait for deliverance in the midst of such fearful calamities.

The indications of the times and seasons, as they rapidly roll, are truly fulfilling the words of the ancient prophet, that "the Lord has decreed a consumption upon the whole earth." In the dispensation of the last days, we are truly gratified with the faithfulness of the Elders in going forth to proclaim the fullness of the Everlasting Gospel to the children of men.

Although a great work yet remains to be accomplished, still it has been carried to the most distant portions of the earth; and been preached to many of the principal nations in their native tongue. In North America and Great Britain it has been extensively preached and published. It has been preached and published in the French, German, Italian, Danish, and Welsh languages. It is also translated, and ready for publication in the Hawaiian language, and will probably be published the ensuing season. In addition to the foregoing, it has been preached to the Spaniards, Norwegians, Swedes, Icelanders, and the inhabitants on the Danube, the Nile, the Indus, and the Ganges. It has been freely offered, by the Elders of Israel travelling without purse or scrip, to all these nations, and to the people of Malta, Southern Africa, Ceylon, Siam, Australia, the largest and most populous of the Pacific Isles, and to many other nations and people in their native language. Among all to whom the gospel has been proclaimed it has found more or less of Israel; but it is worthy of remark that in those countries which were favored with the gospel in the early ages of Christianity, that had the testimony of Jesus and his Apostles, we find the grossest darkness and idolatry, and the least susceptibility to the principles of our holy religion, while among the more enlightened portions, such as Western Europe, the English settlements in Australia, and America, and in the United States, it is more readily received by the honest and sincere inquirer after truth.

The Missions during the past year have been usually successful. We have received intelligence from Australia, which shows a considerable increase of numbers, and a constantly increasing inquiry after a knowledge of the truth. From Bro. Jesse Haven, who is still presiding and preaching in Cape Colony, we learn that quite a branch has been raised since his arrival, mostly among the English settlers.

At Ceylon the missionaries were badly treated, and were soon obliged to leave the island. In Siam they have been permitted to remain, but have made very little impression, except among the English, a few of whom have embraced the gospel. This Mission has been in the immediate charge of Bros. Luddington and Savage, under the presidency of Bishop Nath. V. Jones, whose location is at Calcutta. In this place also, as well as Bombay, Burmah, and the northern provinces of India, small interest has been awakened, and that mostly among the English; but the majority of them being soldiers in the British army, the officers frequently prohibit their attending the meetings, or in any wise associating with the Saints. They also used a very powerful interest against our brethren in all their labors, even with the natives. In Hamburg, and in several of the European States, our Elders have frequently been imprisoned, and finally banished from their dominions. But in all of those places the word has been sown, and the native brethren, who have a right to remain, are preaching and teaching, as opportunity occurs, there by laying a foundation which will eventually result favorably to the cause of Zion, by opening the way for the spread of the gospel, and breaking asunder the bonds of bigotry, superstition, and darkness, which have so long enthralled the earth.

In England, Scotland, the Orkney Islands, Ireland, Switzerland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, the Channel Islands, some portions of the United States, the British Provinces, and the Pacific Isles, the work has been and is prosperous, continually adding to the Church, and opening new and more extended fields of labor.

In our own Territory we have been blessed with health, peace, and prosperity unequalled. Crops matured, and were more plentiful than ever before in these vellays, although much damage was done by grasshoppers in the month of July, and there was hard frost and ice on the 30th of May, and the 15th of October. It is the first time since we settled in these valleys, that we could say there was a surplus of grain raised for the inhabitants, and although an unexpected, unusual, and large amount has been drawn for the United States troops who quartered among us during the winter, from the 2d of September to the present time, we still believe there will be an abundance to last until replenished by another harvest.

Our public works have steadily progressed. The adobie wall around the Temple Block has been completed, and a large amount of the stone coping prepared and some put up. The Endowment House on the Temple Block is finished, and a large share of the Temple foundation is laid. The Sugar Factory, on Big Kanyon Creek, has been put into operation, and the south wing of the State House, at Fillmore City, is in progress of completion.

The Seventies have built a commodious hall, which has been very constantly occupied during the winter, although it was not began to be built until the 13th of August.

Country and city improvements have been extensive, astonishing every beholder with the eminent success and prosperity which have attended all our exertions. How truly may we attribute all these blessings to that kind Father who has shielded us from our enemies, and showered down his blessings upon us. He has caused the earth to bring forth, in its strength, the grain and rich fruits thereof for the sustenance of man. The elements have also been propitious, and the moistening nurture of the "early and latter rains" has not been withheld; neither have the mountain streams failed to furnish their usual supply. There has also a much greater supply of goods been brought into the Territory than heretofore, for which however the demand seems constantly increasing, although large amounts of clothing are manufactured by the people. Home manufactures and productions have been a part and portion of our domestic economy, and should be practiced by every Saint. It is the only path in which we can walk with any assurance of securing our freedom, and of perpetuating that liberty which we inherit, as a rich legacy, from our ancestors and our God.

Our Holy Religion brings us in contact with long established error, and the traditions of centuries, which are prevalent throughout the world; hence are we necessarily a peculiar and separate people, whose best interests and preservation depend upon union and self-dependence, upon practicing virtue, industry, and sobriety, and manifesting our faith by our works in magnifying our Priesthood, and in serving our God by keeping ourselves pure and unspotted in this wicked and adulterous generation.

For this cause we gather out from the world, and for this cause we should rely upon our own skill and ability to produce, from the native elements, every article of food, and raiment necessary for our use, or comfort.

Brethren be wise, and eschew foreign productions as articles not suitable or designed for Israel, and draw your supplies from nature's great storehouse, the rich and abundant though undeveloped, resources with which we are surrounded, and which are clearly within our grasp.

As wickedness, discord, and confusion continue to prevail and increase upon the earth, the Saints will discern that the time is not far distant, when they will probably be obliged to pursue this course for their own salvation. How much easier then for them to be preparing when surrounded with peace and prosperity. How much better to do what is proper, and necessary to be done, under the most favorable circumstances than to wait until stern necessity compels. We say then, to the Brethren and Sisters in all these valleys of the mountains, learn now, to make your own clothing, and encourage the home manufacturer and producer; and let those who intend to come here to reside bring all manner of labor-saving machinery, and such articles for its construction as cannot be readily procured here. Also bring cotten and teasel seed, and seeds for raising all kinds of vegetable dyestuff, and all kinds of fruit and flower seeds, also grafts, and grape cuttings; procure and drive the best kinds of stock. And let those who have the things now named preserve them with care, that the best of all kinds of fruit and stock may be cultivated, and the poorer qualities improved, that in our midst may be found an abundance of everything that will contribute to use and comfort, or that will delight the eye or beautify the earth. For the encouragement of fruit growers, we merely mention the fact that, for the last four years, peaches have ripened upon trees growing from seed planted by us, since our location in these valleys, and apple trees, have, though in less quantities been bearing two years, and bid fair to produce much fruit the present season.

On the 27th of June the Conference appointed at the adjournment of the April Conference, commenced and was held two days, during which many missionaries were sent to the United States, among whom, was Elder John Taylor, of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles who was to proceed to New York City, with the view of there publishing a newspaper. John Smith, son of Hyrum, was chosen, presiding Patriarch over the whole Church, and was ordained to that office, with all the keys and authority thereof, on the 18th of February. This was to fill the vacancy which occurred by the death of our beloved lamented Patriarch, Father John Smith, who died on the 22d of May, 1854, aged seventy-three.

Father John Smith was the brother of Joseph Smith, Sen., who was the father of the Prophet and was the first Patriarch in the Church. He was succeeded in that office by his son Hyrum, upon whom he conferred it before his death, and after his decease, father John Smith was chosen, Hyrum having no son old enough to fill the office at that time. The respected and beloved Patriarch went to his rest full of days and honor, having run the race with patience, and endured unto the end, and was lamented by thousands upon whom he had laid his venerable hands to confer a patriarchal blessing, by virtue of his holy office and Priesthood. He will long be remembered by the Saints as a Father whose blessings were counted of great value, and which will remain a comfort and consolation through all the various changes of life's pilgrimage in the flesh. Having suffered persecution in common with us and our brethren who have gone before, he was broken in body; and although permitted to live a few short years in quiet and peace in the valleys of the mountains, still the infirmities were upon him which were caused by the many exposures, and troubles through which it has been the lot of the Saints to travel; but the vigor of mind and intellect remained unimpaired to the last.

Thus has another of the noble men of the earth gone to his rest, prepared to come forth with glory, immortality, and eternal life, when the keys of the resurrection shall be given unto the Priesthood of the Almighty to again administer its power upon the earth.

During the past year we have enjoyed tranquility with the native tribes, having concluded a treaty of peace with the Indian Chief Walker, whom we met for that purpose at Chicken Creek, in Juab county, on the 11th day of May last. We have great cause to acknowledge the hand of the Lord in restraining these savages from literally drenching our settlements with the blood of the Saints, and in preserving our brethren from utter destruction, for nothing but His Almighty power has prevented such a catastrophy.

Some of the settlements seeing, and feeling by sad experience, the imminent peril they were in, have undertaken to partially secure themselves by fortifications, &c.; but we are grieved at being obliged to say that these defences generally remain in an unfinished condition, and many of them are of but little value. How long the Lord will continue to extend his protecting care, and indulge his people in such inexcusable carelessness, and indifference to his counsel and gentle admonition, remains to be seen. It appears that the very moment when peace again smiles upon us, danger is forgotten, and we at once relapse into the same careless indifferences which has always characterized our actions in these valleys, so far as regards our being well prepared to meet our steadfast enemies. We say unto you, brethren, do not longer indulge in such criminal neglect, do not longer trifle with the counsel and urgent entreaties of your brethren, but improve the present moment of peace and prosperity for making yourselves secure, and in preparing against a day of trouble.

Towards the Indians continue to exercise patience, charity, and forbearance; give them your faith for their reclamation from their low estate; pray for them, and teach them also, that the principle of improvement and enlightenment may possess their minds never again to be rooted out, that they may learn the ways of the Lord and rejoice in the true knowledge of the God of their fathers.

We realize that the Lord has been gracious, and is answering the prayers and supplications of the Saints in their behalf. We realize that His spirit is being poured out upon them, and to this cause we attribute the power which has restrained them from more extended and active hostilities. We exort you to feed and clothe them as heretofore, but never lose an opportunity of learning them to work, in order to gradually teach them the way to industriously provide for their own wants, a course mutually more beneficial than to sustain them in idleness. Providentially, indeed, have we been thrown into their midst, bringing with us our holy religion, and our civilization. As we have been abundantly blessed with the good things of the earth since we came, let us impart freely unto these degenerate sons of Israel, of such as we have received, and not, as is too often the case in the conduct of the whites towards them, condescend to their level, thereby debasing ourselves and abusing their confidence, but seek to raise and exalt them to us, that they may in very deed become "a white and delightsome people," in whom the Lord can take delight, even as in days of old.

Indian chief, Walker, died after a few days' illness, near Fillmore city, on the 29th of January; and the Utahs have chosen his brother Sen-a-rock, commonly known among the whites by the name of Arrow-peen, to be their chief.

Owing to the ignorance of the Indians, and to their having so little understanding of the nature and obligations known to civilization, the laws have seldom been enforced against them. However, in the case of the unprovoked murder of two of the boys of bishop Weeks, of Cedar valley, while engaged in getting wood and poles from the kanyon, two Indians, the principal actors in that scene were hung on the 15th of last September; having been tried and convicted before the U. S. District Court, the Hon. Judge Shaver presiding. Again, in the case of the massacre of Capt. Gunnison and party by the Pah-van-te Indians, in the fall of 1853, a number of them were tried at Nephi before the Hon. Judge Kinney of the U. S. District Court of that district, which resulted in three of them being convicted of murder in the second degree, and they were sentenced to the extent of the law of the United States in such cases made and provided. In this case, we understand that there were many extenuating circumstances which appeared to mitigate, on the part of the Indians, the perpetration of this horrid massacre. It was the time of war between the whites and the Indians, and this particular band had just previously suffered the loss of one of their chief men by a party of white emigrants, who killed him while passing through their country, without even a cause of provocation. This so enraged the Indians, that although they had not previously participated in the war, they straightway commenced gathering up their forces to come against the settlements, and to join the other Indians already engaged in hostilities. It was at this moment that Capt. Gunnison and party arrived in their country, while prosecuting his duties in exploring a location for a rail-way across the continent, thus furnishing them that opportunity for retaliation which they were so earnestly seeking, and which was so fearfully visited upon the innocent. This should prove a lesson to all travelers who wantonly shoot the Indians; for though they may pass in safety, peradventure the very next traveler may fall victims, as a consequence of their inconsiderate and worse than savage barbarity. All persons having knowledge of law, and at the same time treating the Indians so inhumanly, should be held responsible for the results of their acts; which, as in the case of the lamented Gunnison, are almost certain to be visited on the first opportunity, upon some who were entirely unconnected with the aggression.

It cannot be expected of the Indians, in their present low, and ignorant condition, with all their traditions and ferocious natures upon them, to understand and act in accordance with the provisions of law which they never had the least knowledge of, nor any opportunity for obtaining such information. Therefore it becomes those who profess civilization to set them an example, and not, while pretending to execute law upon them, be more brutal and murderous than they are with each other. Let all such persons consider these facts and act wisely, let the blood of their victims be found upon their own skirts; and brethren, be careful lest you also trample upon the "oil and the wine," make shipwreck of your faith, and lose your salvation in the kingdom of our God.

At the October Conference several of the brethren, who had been absent on foreign missions, were present, having returned with many Saints; and although the last company did not arrive until the 28th of October, it was a time of rejoicing with us all, but especially with those who, having safely passed through death and suffering, were permitted to associate in peace with those having a common faith with themselves and to listen to the instructions of the servants of God in Zion. Every countenance beamed with joy, and nothing occurred, during the three days which the Conference lasted, to mar, or in the least disturb the peace and unity which universally prevailed. Elder Horace S. Eldredge was chosen to take the place of Jedediah M. Grant as one of the seven Presidents of the Seventies.

Since the October Conference, but little has occurred differing from the usual routine of our business.

The winter has been unusually mild, and work has progressed in many respects, almost as well as in the summer.

The Legislature held their usual session of forty days, and adjourned to meet on the second Monday in December next, in the new State House in Fillmore City.

Various associations for religions, literary, and scientific purposes have been formed, and much useful instruction has been imparted, as also in many evening and day schools, which have generally been kept in operation during the winter, in all the wards. Amusements have also had their time and place, and, with the exception of a little disturbance caused by a few disorderly U. S. troops, a general time of quiet, good order, and peace, has prevailed in all the settlements.

In accordance with their respective appointments, Elder John Taylor repaired to New York, Franklin D. Richards to Liverpool, Erastus Snow to St. Louis, Orson Spencer to Cincinnati, and Parley P. Pratt to California.

Owing to the irregularity of the Eastern mail, we have but little information concerning their success; but have learned that a stake has been established at St. Louis, and that a newspaper called the "Luminary," is published weekly. We have not yet learned whether other stakes have been established, or whether other papers have been published; though a press has been obtained in California which will be put in operation the ensuing summer, under the charge of Elder Geo. Q. Cannon.

Elder Amasa Lyman still labors at San Bernardino, California, and the remainder of the Twelve Apostles are at present with us, laboring as opportunity occurs in the various settlements of Utah. Elder Geo. A. Smith is still engaged on the History of Joseph Smith, and will, in a few months, probably, have it finished and ready for the press.

At this April Conference just adjourned, the reports and exhibits of the financial affairs of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Co., and of the Church were fully presented, from which it appears that the capital stock of the P. Emigrating Fund Co., amounts to $71,005 14 3-4, although scarcely a dollar of it is at present in available means that can be used for the purpose of emigrating the poor saints. This arises from those who are in debt to the Fund neglecting to pay for their emigration. There is now owing to the Fund, from this source alone, about fifty seven thousand dollars, which, if it could be realized in available means, would very much increase the operations of the company, and assist many thousands to come, who are looking and praying for deliverance through this source. By every light in which it can be viewed, the brethren who have been assisted by this Fund, for their own, for their brethren's, and for the kingdom's sake, should cancel their obligations thereto. The subject of emigrating the poor saints, taking them from the overpopulated districts of the older countries, where, with their utmost labor, they can scarce procure subsistence, and where lack of employment frequently renders life itself precarious, and bringing them to a land where by industry they can soon acquire a competence, and rise in the scale of intellectual existence; commends itself to all the Saints, and is worthy of their faith and most active benevolence.

The reports of the financial affairs of the Church show that the resources have generally invested in buildings, and making public improvements, such as the Council and Endowment Houses, Tabernacle, wall around the Temple block, store houses, Temple, &c. In order to successfully prosecute our business, we find it necessary to have a considerable amount of active capital to enable us to furnish materials, and supply clothing and articles necessary for those who are constantly engaged in the public service.

The tithing furnishes our resources for all of our public improvements, and this is generally paid in grain, vegetables, stock, wagons, labor, and other property, and but very little in money, and with the exception of what is needed for the use of the men employed, has to be turned into cash to procure such other articles as are necessary for properly prosecuting business. The constant investment of the funds of the Church in permanent improvements, trouble of changing, and delay of converting into cash, sometimes unavoidably involve us in debt; but if the brethren will be faithful and punctual in paying their tithing in kind, it will relieve us of all embarrassment, and furnish sufficient for all the needful purposes for which it is used.

Brethren, as you wish to hasten the building of a Temple, and the rolling forth of the work of Zion's King, put your shoulders to the wheel, render effective aid to her cause, and make her interest your own. Remember that all you do to favor Zion is only favoring your own interest, that it is for yourselves that you are laboring and toiling in the kingdom of God; rejoice therefore in your labors, and consider the reward which is laid up at the end of the race. It should be deemed a blessing as well as a duty, to have this privilege. No greater favor could be bestowed upon this people than they enjoy in having a part and lot in this matter, in being the humble instruments in the hands of the Great Jehovah, in bringing to pass His purposes upon the earth in these the last days, in being the recipients of the eternal truth, light, and knowledge emanating from Heaven's King, in whom is all excellence, power, and glory.

Incomparable delight and happiness fill the soul of the faithful saint, who has the testimony of Jesus and the spirit of the living God to enlighten his understanding. Happiness supreme and love divine fill his bosom, as he seeks to impart the gladsome intelligence to his fellow species, that they also may be partakers with him in the glorious cause, and share in its blessings. Thus our Holy Religion absorbs every feeling, desire, ambition, motive and action of our natures, and renders every association in life tributary thereto; it forms the vitality of our very existence; it enters not only into our spiritual but also into temporal organization, and controls us in all our affairs. This is true of every person who has tasted the good word of life, has received the Holy Ghost, and continues to walk in the light, and be led by its gentle influence. This is salvation in the kingdom of God, it is glory celestial, and exaltation. This is the work that makes angry the adversary, who fears the overthrow of his kingdom and power upon the earth, that causes satan to rage and seek to destroy the Saints of the Most High, as he did in the days of Jesus and of his apostles and followers.

Hence the persecutions and martyrdom which wasted the faithful from the earth, and caused the apostacy of the ancient church. The world overcame and destroyed them, and seeks to overcome and destroy us, for they are actuated by the enemy of all righteousness, the arch deceiver, who desires the overthrow of the work of God. Therefore brethren, be on your guard, lest you enter into temptation and darkness comes upon you; lest you get bewildered and led astray, and unwarily imbibe an apostate spirit which will lead you to deny the faith.

The consecrations of the Saints have been delayed for a time, in order to obtain the form of a deed which should be legal, in accordance with the laws of the Territory. This has now been accomplished, and many are deeding their property to the Church. We wish it distinctly understood that no person deeds his property unless he feels it to be a privilege, and prefers to do so of his own free will and choice. Neither do we wish any person to deed any property which is encumbered by debt, or liabilities. Pay what you owe, and then if you would be independent, keep out of debt, improve upon your inheritances, and the stewardship which is committed to your trust, that being found faithful over a few, you may be made ruler over many things.

Let the Saints abroad in the world devote all they have for the spread of the gospel, the gathering of Israel, and helping the poor, who are faithful and true, to come to Zion; and it is believed there are means sufficient among the Saints in England, and other places, if properly distributed, to emigrate all the faithful. If those having means would be liberal enough to freely impart to the needy, simply retaining sufficient to accomplish their own emigration, and trusting in the Lord for future means of subsistance, they would be blessed by the Lord and their brethren, and rejoice in having wrought salvation and deliverance to many of the meek who shall inherit the earth.

Let those brethren who are willing to devote their means in this way, do so in wisdom, by giving it into the hands of our authorized agents, whom we have appointed to that business, and not pay it, as is too frequently the case, to irresponsible persons who scatter it to the winds without doing any good. Let all things be done in order, and through the proper channel.

It is a very common occurrence, for those having means when they come into the church, to lose every dollar, by their business transactions with the world, before they gather with the Saints, or have contributed much to aid the cause of Truth. When stripped of every thing, they are ready to come, regretting that they had not devoted their means for the building up of the Lord's, instead of the Devil's Kingdom.

The best way is for the Saints, when they first come into the Church, to close up their business, as soon as they conveniently can without too great a sacrifice, and then "gather up for Zion," without unnecessary delay; for the devourer and tempter are abroad in the earth, and the Lord has commenced his pleadings with the people by "fire and by sword, by pestilence, famine, and tempest;" escape therefore, while the way is open before you.

To all the honest in heart throughout the world, both of high and low degree, we say "repent, and be baptized for the remission of your sins," obey the ordinances of the gospel through the administrations of the servants of the living God, for the judgments of the Almighty are upon you, flee therefore from the sinks of iniquity and corruption, lest the fiery indignation of the Lord also consume you with the wicked, of whom he has decreed that he will empty the earth.

Saints in the valleys of the mountains, unto you we say, raise grain, sow, plant, water, and harvest in the proper seasons thereof; cultivate no more land than you can cultivate well, save and preserve your grain, that nothing be lost; take care of your animals that they be not stolen by the Indians, or driven off by the white thieves who annually make their predatory excursions through our settlements; fence pastures for your stock, that you may preserve the grass in your immediate vicinity for their use; and let the transient herds pass beyond the settlements, to where range is plenty and not occupied, and there will be less danger of their mingling with those belonging in the Territory.

Prepare good granaries for your grain, where it can be kept safe, and clean from dust, and lay up your surplus in store, against a time of need.

Finally, brethren, be one in faith and in effort, and walk humbly before the Lord. Keep sacred His commandments, and your covenants. Seek continually unto Him for wisdom and knowledge, that you may enjoy the light of His spirit, and be thoroughly furnished to fulfil every duty incumbent upon you, by virtue of the Holy and Eternal Priesthood of Almighty God with which you are clothed, in a manner that shall best subserve the advancement and rolling forth of His Kingdom upon the earth.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1855.

Fourth of July Excursion.

ACCORDING to arrangement named in our last, we proceeded accompanied by Brs. N. H. Felt, A. Robbins, C. C. Dulin and others, on our rusticating expedition to Tom's River, N. J., via Amboy and Freehold, leaving New York Saturday the twenty-ninth ult., at six A. M., arriving the same day at four P. M. We found the Saints in that place glad to meet us and was no less pleased ourselves to meet them. Brs. Clinton, Harrison, and Lenzi, who had arrived from Phildelphia the day previous also greeted us on our arrival.

On Sunday, July 1st, we met the Saints in Conference, found the best of feelings existing among the Brethren generally, made some instructive remarks after which the business of Conference was attended to, Dr. Jeter Clinton, presiding.

On Monday the second, made up a small party of ten and sailed down the river in the yacht "Merry Mormon," owned by Br. Samuel Brown, who commanded her to the satisfaction of all concerned.

After sailing down to the ocean some seven or eight miles and bathing and frolicking in the turbulent blue waves of the broad Atlantic, we returned to Tom's River much refreshed and invigorated by the excursion. Thus revivified and remote from the humbugs and bed bugs with which we were wont to be anoyed in the great metropolis we slept that night "in very deed."

Tuesday, the third, started on another sailing tour of which that of the preceeding day was only a miniature. Capt. Wm. Reamer having volunteered the services of himself and "Good Schooner Elizabeth" (owned by sheriff Ivins who also graced the company with his presence) to take all who might wish to participate, we had the joy and satisfaction of associating with some ninety-five men, women, and children, whose only object seemed to be to make each other comfortable and happy. At 9 A. M. all on board, a fine breese from the north, broad pendant and American ensign streaming from the main, we loosed from our moorings, and accompanied by the merry Mormon, sailed away; the choir under the direction of Bro. Darton at the same time singing, the songs of Zion.

Being fully underway we took occasion to address the brethren on the subject of recreation and enjoyment, and if we were to judge by our own feelings our brief remarks were received and appreciated with the best of feelings.

Arriving at the beach, and our crafts safely moored, we all disembarked, taking with us the nics on which to pick, without which it would fail to be a "pick-nic."

We proceeded to a house previously provided for the occasion, and having "dumped" our loads, retired in favor of the ladies, who handled the edibles with a dexterity rarely equaled. While dinner was being prepared a party crossed over to the back of the beach and bathed in the boisterous surf that laves the Jersey shore, while others less amphibious remained on the beach witnessing the feats of the expert ones. Soon dinner was announced, and no way reluctant we rallied to the breast-work. "Then came the tug of war." Shoulder to shoulder were seen the old and young, and middle aged, weapons in hand, impatient for the onslaught. Fish, flesh and fowl, green peas, beans and new potatoes, strawberries, whortleberries and cherries, raisins, almonds and ice creams, all the varieties of pies, pound cakes, &c., &c., &c., were among the host of nicknacks, arrayed in solid front before us: it was almost as good as some we have seen in Salt Lake. By exercising some little military tact in disposing of our forces in such a manner as to make the attack to the best advantage, the victory was soon ours, as is most generally the case when empty stomachs come to the rescue under like circumstances.

After our conquest thus easily obtained, though to us very beneficial, we again embarked and returned to the river. On our journey homeward we were entertained with speeches from various individuals, select pieces sung and spoken, and other entertainments, accompanied by the excellent music vocal and instrumental. In the midst of this general hilarity and melee we perpetrated the following, which the choir sung:

WRITTEN ON BOARD THE SCHOONER ELIZABETH, AND DEDICATED TO EDWARD IVINS, ESQ., SHERIFF OF OCEAN COUNTY, N. J.

BY JOHN TAYLOR.

They say that the Mormons are foolish and mad;
But such folly as ours Old Bab'lon ne'er had.
We know how to live, and we know how to die,
And to drink of life's streams as they daily pass by;
But this is not our rest—unto Zion we'll hie,
And partake of pure fountains that never run dry.

While in Babylon we dwell we'll partake of the good,
Which is mixed with evil, in life's turbid flood;
But quick as we can unto Zion we'll go,
And drink of the streams that in purity flow.
For this is not, &c.

We are Saints! we are Saints! and the kingdom is ours.
We are free! we are free! by the truth and its powers;
No fetters shall bind us by land or by sea,
Our song and our chorus is—Truth's made us free.
But this is not, &c.

We are Saints! we are Saints! and our God is our friend;
We've commenced an enjoyment that never shall end
While eternity rolls in its cycles of years;
In Celestial joys; 'midst Celestial spheres.
But this is not our rest—unto Zion we'll hie,
And partake of pure fountains that never run dry.

Wednesday, the fourth, at 10 A. M., according to previous arrangement, with the American Ensign floating in the breeze, met with our friends on terra firma, beneath some beautiful shade trees, on the premises of Sheriff Ivins. Addresses appropriate to the occasion were delivered by Dr. Clinton, Hon. N. H. Felt, and Capt. Robbins, after which we adjourned, in order to do justice to those alimentary commodities so essential to the inner man. Thursday the fifth, spent in visiting our friends. Friday the sixth, embarked with our staff in the yacht "Merry Mormon" for Barnegat Inlet, intending to come from there to New York, per schooner Practical, Capt. Phillips, another one of Sheriff Ivins vessels; but owing to adverse winds did not arrive at the Inlet until the seventh, and then not without a drenching by rain and spray. Our ducking however, was soon attoned for, when we came among the blue fish, with which that Inlet abounds at the present time; four of us in two yachts, had the pleasure of catching some twenty-five, weighing probably 40 or 50 lbs, in less than an hour, which to us (a little green at the business) was quite a treat.

Sunday the eighth, wind being ahead, and but little prospect of getting to York, we divided our staff, two remaining to go by water, two recrossed the main and took the cars; all however arrived here on Monday evening, at about the same time. We have now only to say, that we have had our season of recreation and enjoyed it highly, we are again in the old chair, feeling first-rate, not wishing to quarrel with any one; our spree over, with our coat off, and up to the elbows in Mormonism, we again salute our friends.

The Mirror Again.

SOON after the commencement of the Mormon, our readers will recollect that a very high eulogium was passed upon Governor Young, and the Mormons by the editor of that paper Mr. Fuller, who stated that

"During a three weeks' sojourn at the city of the Great Salt Lake, we saw more order, industry and decorum than we ever observed elsewhere in the world, and the writer of this has seen a little of the spheriod. We venture the assertion, and challenge contradiction, that a more peaceful, orderly, industrious and law-abiding community than the dwellers in Deseret cannot be found, and we wish it distinctly understood that we know not a soul among them, and have not a particle of sympathy with their religion or polygamic institution."

Some two or three weeks ago the same paper not only did not challenge contradiction, but actually contradicted its own statements, and represented the Mormons as a corrupt debauched people; and that a public meeting ought to be called in the Tabernacle for an expression of public sentiment upon this subject. Whereupon we took the liberty of publishing both the statements, with a gentle enquiry as to which was true, expressing a willingness to meet the gentleman in the Tabernacle, if desired. Instead of giving an answer however, he published some remarks upon a novel lately published that has as much to do with Mormonism as the stories of Cinderella or Jack the Giant Killer. We very much doubt whether the writer ever saw either Nauvoo or Salt Lake. After endorsing as truth the novel writer's chimeras he gives us the following:

"And, by the way, we must make an apology in this connection, for a paragraph which we allowed to appear in the Mirror a few months ago, highly commendatory of the character, habits, and appearance of the citizens of "Salt Lake City," the head quarters of the impostors. The Mormon papers made extensive use of the Mirror's endorsement of the sobriety, decency and industry of the dupes of Joe Smith; but, as we have good reason for doubting the veracity of the writer of the paragraph in question—for doubting even that he ever saw the city he described—we take an early opportunity to repudiate everything that can be construed into a favorable opinion of Mormonism—the most disgustingly beastly humbug ever imposed on the credulity of the superlatively foolish, vicious, and vulgar specimens of the most depraved portions of the human family."

The above, of course, we must receive as an answer to his former statements, and swallow the latter as gospel; being very much obliged for his condecension in noticing us; (why he is quite patronizing,) and the extensive use that we have made of his former falsehood must be full pay for the great and important truths he is now uttering. But unfortunately we don't feel either very highly honored, or disgraced by the falsehoods or truths uttered by this said "Mirror." Its reflections are so uncertain of late, that we consider it rather a poor looking-glass, and furthermore we wish to tell the present editor that the Mormons are as independant of his opinions as he can be of theirs, and that we will not only meet him in the Tabernacle, as proposed; but his precious author or authoress tod, if they can be produced.

But now for Mr. Fuller's apology. We wish our readers to understand that this fling is not intended for us. It would seem that there are two Mr. Fullers, that have been associated with the Mirror; the proprietorship or possession of which is now in letigation. The present Mr. Fuller, who now holds the paper; but who, it is expected, will be dispossessed shortly by that very troublesome fellow, the law, is the one who is opposed to Mormonism. It is the other Mr. Fuller who is expected shortly to take the editorial chair, who wrote the first article, who has been in the Valley, and is a courteous gentlemanly man; not a Mormon; but we conceive a gentleman. A late injunction on the premises of the Mirror, is, we presume, the secret of the present Mr. Fuller's throw at the veracity of the former writer. We have had an interview with the Mr. Fuller who wrote the first article, and know from his knowledge of affairs there that he has been to the Valley.

And as the Mirror has failed to explain, we have taken it upon us to reconcile the apparent difficulty which is very plain, when understood. In regard to Mr. Fuller, the second, the present editor of the Mirror, as he seems to be very poorly posted about Mormonism, and we have a disposition to accommodate, if he will call upon us, we will furnish him with much stronger arguments against Mormonism than either he or his authoress have produced; more reasonable, and better authenticated, that he may be enabled to give greater plausibility to his bungling statements.

Arrivals.

WE have been very much gratified with striking hands with a number of our old friends from the Valley, en route for Europe.

Lt. Col. John Key and Col. John Scott arrived at New York on the 5th ult., in good health and spirits; they purposed leaving on the "Baltic," which sailed on Wednesday, but every berth was engaged. On Thursday last, we were agreeably surprised with the addition of Major Hector C. Haight, Hon. J. L. Smith, Lieut. R. F. Noslin, Daniel Davis, D. A. Curtis, J. P. and Lieut. William S. Muir, all Elders, and going on foreign missions.

It did our heart good to see them and strike hands with them; they are all true, good men. and every way competent for their responsible duties, whilst their hardy, healthy looks bespeak the place from which they hail. We wish them God speed, a pleasant voyage, a successful mission, and a safe return to their families and homes, than which we are satisfied they will not find better in all their wanderings. But it is written "he that goeth forth weeping, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

By the last European mail, we learn that President F. D. RICHARDS is quite unwell.

President ERASTUS SNOW is going to the Valley this fall. Professor ORSON SPENCER takes charge of the "Luminary" during his absence. We may expect some rich treats from his pen.

Salt Lake Mail.

WE clip the following from the "Squatter Sovereign:"

SALT LAKE MAIL.—There is evidently a screw loose somewhere in the Salt Lake mail arrangement. We are continually hearing of its failure, and much dissatisfaction exists as to the manner in which the contractor fulfils his duty. Major Rose's party, just in from the Valley, brought a large number of letters containing drafts money, &c., which the senders were unwilling to risk across the Plains in charge of Uncle Sam. They were deposited at the Atchison post-office, to be forwarded to their respective destinations. We hope the post-office department will look into this matter, and if the price now paid for carrying the mails is not sufficient, such an amount as will justify the contractors in keeping good teams on the route should be paid. A great saving of time and money could be effected by making Atchison, K. T., the departure of said mails.

The way our mail is conducted is a perfect outrage. We were telegraphed a few weeks ago that the April and May mail had arrived, and were very gravely informed that there was no Indian difficulties; this we could have told and did tell before, we were satisfied that these reports were merely trumped up stories, for interested motives; our May mail arrived several days before the April, and from these mails we learn of the most outrageous mail delinquencies in Utah. We were in hopes some time ago, that things would have been different after the liberal appropriations made by government, our hopes however, are beginning to fail, "hope deferred makes the heart sick." As our merchants nor nobody else can trust the mail we would recommend to the citizens of Salt Lake to start a mail of their own, and not be humbugged as they have been; by a little extra allowance on letters, this could easily be done and who would not pay it?

We say start a Utah Independent mail, and let the ox-mails of Uncle Sam alone. If we can't have business done like other people let us do it ourselves.

Anonymous Letters.

WE frequently receive communications, on various subjects, without names, with a desire, of course, that we shall publish them. This may be a very convenient way for men who desire to appear before the public without responsibility; but we never pay any attention to such things; we must have the names and address of parties before we can make their sentiments known. A man that is ashamed of his name ought never to be attended to—is not, by us. We are responsible for all our acts, but cannot take upon ourselves to endorse for others; and, if we did, such characters are the last we should do it for. We believe in open sailing, with the colors nailed to the mast; and this is to inform all such characters that we cannot and will not publish any anonymous publications. We, of course, reserve to ourselves the right to give initials or withhold the name; but we must have it ourselves—we want nothing done in the dark.

TERRIBLE STEAMBOAT EXPLOSION.—By telegraph we learn that, on Sunday, the steamer Lexington was blown to atoms near Stephenaport, Ky., on her up trip from St. Louis to Louisville. The packet Baltimore brought 20 of the officers and crew to Evansville, among whom was Capt. Troop, and Mr. Sanderson, first clerk, both wounded. The captain thinks there are not more than 35 killed. About 100 persons were on board at the time of the disaster. All injured except ladies, who were all unharmed. The accident occurred at 3 o'clock Sunday morning. Boat and cargo a total loss.—[Democrat.

New Publication.

THE mail of the 26th ult., brought No. 1, Vol. 1, of "The Mormon," edited and published in New York City by Elder John Taylor. The heading of the paper is deep, massive, bold, significant, and beautifully designed and engraved. At the top are the words, "and he said let there be light, and there was light;" immediately beneath is the all-seeing eye surrounded by rays of light, and directly over the American Eagle which is hovering over a bee-hive, and holding in his beak a streamer upon which are the words "The Mormon." On the right of the bee-hive are the rose and reed supporting a scroll headed, "Constitution of the United States," with the inscription, "given by inspiration of God.—Joseph Smith." To the right of the scroll, and pendant from an inclined flag staff, are the broad folds of the United States flag with a blaze of light in the centre of the starry field containing the word "Utah," and in the stripes are the words "truth will prevail.—H. C. Kimball.' To the left of the bee-hive are the thistle and shamrock supporting a scroll, on the face of which are the words, "Mormon creed, mind your own business.—Brigham Young;" and on the edge, "Deseret." On the left hand U. S. flag one very large star occupies the centre of the starry field, and on the stripes are the words, "truth, intelligence, virtue, and faith united.—J. Taylor." The signification of the emblems, &c., we leave to the sagacity of our readers. Under the splendid head is the very correct motto, "it is better to represent ourselves, than to be represented by others."

The editorial head is also very tastefully designed, the eagle is standing upon the bee-hive with his wings slightly expanded, and bearing in his beak a streamer with the words "holiness to the Lord." Behind the eagle are two U. S. flags. On the right, resting on the hive, is a scroll with the words, "peace and good will to man." The Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants rest against the bee-hive on the left. The words right and left, in these descriptions, are used as the objects present themselves to the person looking at the described embellishments; this use is the reverse of the artistic mode, but has been preferred as being the one that will be best understood by the majority.

The Mormon is printed on a large sheet, and is filled with a variety of well selected matter, and an unusual proportion of apt, spicy, and well written editorial articles.

Agents in Utah, Bishop Edward Hunter, all the bishops throughout the Territory, Judge E. Smith, P. M., and Joseph Cain.

When the signification of the motto of "The Mormon," is considered, viz: that 'it is better to represent ourselves, than to be represented by others;' when the acknowledged power of the press is taken into account, and that we have but five presses in operation, while there are hundreds, if not thousands, rolling forth a constant stream of error, calumny, vituperation, and abuse; and when it is well known to be a difficult matter to start and sustain a new paper amid such numbers as are already in the field; it is presumed that Utah will stretch forth her hand, by way of subscribers, and assist Elder Taylor in his arduous, necessary, and highly useful mission. If no mails come from the East, the Panama route is still open; and if the U. S. Mails entirely fail us, we can transport our own letters and papers to and from Independence, and San Diego.—[The Deseret News, May 2.

The Fourth.

THE Fourth of July never was, perhaps, celebrated to such an extent on this island as the present year; and, despite the rain, never was so great an amount of powder expended on private account. It was celebrated alike by natives and foreigners, on land and water. Late events in Europe have had certainly some effect in kindling this spirit of celebration. For the aid afforded in this celebration, the Celestial Empire is largely credited, for whole shiploads of detonating crackers were on this day flashing in the air. The Germans, pre-eminently a social people, perhaps reaped the fullest amount of enjoyment. They possess, above all others, the happy art of selecting picturesque spots, "nooks and corners" where others would never dream of searching for them. There is always a piece of water to their landscapes, and were all these "lots" put up for sale, and had poets as many gold eagles as verses, they would fetch enormous prices. The Americans have a vast deal to learn of the Germans in respect to sociality. The Winter Gardens of Berlin do not afford more charming scenes than their retreats, where for hours in social converse they enjoy both the beauties of nature and relaxation from all care. Still, in countless ways, the Fourth may be "kept."

"Let this happy day," said Mr. Lee, in his support of his resolution on the 4th of July, 1776, for the adoption of the memorable document from the pen of Jefferson, "give birth to an American republic! Let her arise, not to devastate and conquer, but to re-establish the reign of peace and law. The eyes of Europe are fixed upon us. She invites us to prepare an asylum where the unhappy may find solace, and the persecuted repose. She entreats us to cultivate a propitious soil, where that generous plant which first sprung and grew in England, but is now withered by the blasts of Scottish tyranny may revive and flourish, sheltering under its salubrious and interminable shade all the unfortunate of the human race. If we are not this day wanting in one duty to our country, the names of the American legislators of '76 will be placed by posterity at the side of those of Thesems——— and of all those whose memory has been, and forever will be, dear to virtuous men and good citizens."

POWDER MILL EXPLOSION.—Boston, July 11, 1855.—The powder mill in Bennington, N. H., exploded on Monday, killing a man named Thomas West. Two hundred kegs of powder exploded.

The Chinese.

THE commotion which the introduction of the Chinese into California caused some time since has not escaped public recollections. New evidence are continually transpiring of the hostilities of race, and now we have the evidence of an individual employed by a public body to labor amidst them; and a report of whose sentiments will be found in the latest California files, that the Chinese are utterly unfit, in their nature and in their habits, for the liberty accorded them; that this liberty yet more debases them, and that it is the opinion even of the intelligent and highly educated Chinese that their immigration redounds to their own injury, and must exercise on others of their countrymen abroad, and on those coming into contact with them, the most injurious effects. Proof is even afforded of these observations which singularly agree with the opinions of M. Huc, who has journeyed through the heart of the Chinese Empire, and for eighteen years been in familiar intercourse with all classes. His testimony none will dispute. The Chinese nature is scarcely developed above the brutes. He says:

"Chinese society has a certain tone of decency and reserve that may very well impose on those who look only at the surface, and judge merely by the momentary impression; but a very short residence among the Chinese is sufficient to show that their virtue is entirely external; their public morality is but a mark worn over the corruption of their manners. We will take care not to lift the unclean veil that hides the putrefaction of this ancient Chinese civilization; the leprosy of vice has spread so completely through this skeptical society, that the varnish of modesty with which it is covered is continually falling off and exposing the hideous wounds which are eating away the vitals of this unbelieving people. Their language is already revoltingly indecent, and the slang of the worst resorts of licentiousness threatens to become the ordinary language of conversation. There are some provinces in which the inns on the road have apartments entirely papered with representations of all kinds of shameless debauchery, and these abominable pictures are known among the Chinese by the pretty name of "flowers." The ravages of pauperism, it may well be supposed, must be terrible, in a society in which gambling, drunkenness and libertinism are thus largely developed; and in fact, there do exist countless multitudes perpetually stagnating in vice and misery, and always ready to enroll themselves under the banners of theft and highway robbery. To this pauperism especially, we believe, is to be ascribed the monstrous crime of infanticide, so common in China, and for the prevention of which the charity of Europe, and particularly of France has been so deeply interested.

In respect to China, we have heard much about the triumph of the "Christian Faith," in the early progress of the insurrectionists, but the fast wavering doubts, which, after circumstance developed, may be henceforth set aside, the same author declaring:

"Should the Mantchoo Government," "triumph over the insurrection, which already more than once has displayed the cross upon its standard, it will have no mercy on the Christians, and this long struggle will have only served to redouble its suspicions and embitter its wrath; if, on the contrary, Tien-te should gain the victory, and succeed in driving out the ancient conquerors of China, since he claims not only to found a new dynasty, but also a new worship, he will, in the intoxication of victory, break through every obstacle that may oppose his projects. Thus the conclusion of the civil war may be to the Christians the signal of a new persecution."

His complaint is that the Chinese Government, though not intolerant, is indifferent to his religion, or any religion whatever. The social regeneration of the Chinese is a problem he does not undertake to solve. "Seeing," he says, "that Christianity has been brought into China, and propagated by Europeans, the Government has persuaded itself that they have done this merely with a view to obtain partisans, in order to be able some time or other to seize on the Empire with more facility. The greater the zeal of the Europeans, the greater the fear and suspicion of the Government."

The above may be partly correct; but it is very difficult to judge from such one-sided testimony. That licentiousness and corruption abound to a very great extent in China, is matter of history; but that they are capable of self-government, we think none can deny, however revolting their amalgamation may be to the Saxon race. Their position as a nation proves their governmental capacities; for while other nations have been torn to pieces, changed, removed or obliterated, they have retained their identity; and with some few changes, from the Mantchoo to the Tartar dynasty, and vice versa, they are the same nation; ancient and venerable the Celestials can boast of having outlived all the Barbarians, or civilized nations of the world.

It is true they are not Christians, nor do they trouble themselves much about religion; a thing that is becoming quite popular among Christians. They have a tolerable philosophy, (Confucian;) but like many Christians may not live up to their profession, and consequently many evils may, and no doubt do abound.

In regard to civilization, if obscene pictures—their so called "flowers,"—is a token that they are not civilized, then is France not a civilized nation, for they abound in such flowers not only in petty "Inns," but in public stores, while their Ball Masques are exhibitions of licentiousness revolting to decency and propriety. These flowers are scattered profusely in Europe, England and in the United States, and may be found in many of our fashionable boudoirs, and at select places in our principal Hotels, not to mention our obscene books, houses of assignation, prostitution, and all the pharaphernalia of vice, that unblushingly stalks in our most, refined, polite, civilized, society; our cities especially are crowded and cursed with such infamy.

It is true that the Chinese cannot readily mix with the Anglo-Saxon, their customs, habits, religion and pursuits, are different; but they are quiet, peaceable and inoffensive, and in their California difficulties have been sinned against more than sinning.

KNOW NOTHING CONVENTION IN MAINE.—Hollowell, Me., July 11, 1855.—A large and respectable Know Nothing Convention of Kennebec county, was held here yesterday, nearly every Council being represented. Strong resolutions were adopted against the National Administration and slavery, and recommending open nominations in connection with the Republican party.

Choir sung a hymn. Prayer by Elder Lorenzo Snow. Choir chanted, "We praise Thee, O God."

President B. Young gave notice that a report of the affairs of the Trustee in Trust would be the next business of the day, and it was read by Elder Thomas Bullock; and, on motion, Conference voted that the report be accepted.

President Kimball made a few remarks on the report, and rejoiced in our present situation.

Conference voted to drop William Davis from the bishopric of Box Elder, and that Elder Eli Harvey Pierce be ordained Bishop in his place.

President B. Young spoke on the Tithing report; the action and duties of Bishops; the building of the Temple; and on consecration; and said if the Bishops will not do their duty, we will drop every one of them, and put others in their places.

Elder Bullock read the report of the Treasurer of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund, also a Circular to the Presidents and Bishops of the several wards, signed by President B. Young, which were accepted. He also read the following Preamble and Constitution of the Deseret Theological Institute:

PREAMBLE AND CONSTITUTION OF THE DESERET THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.

Having in view the promotion of knowledge, and the extension of those principles of right and truth which we have received through the instrumentality of the holy Priesthood; and believing that the science of Theology embraces a knowledge of all intelligence, whether in heaven or on the earth, moral, scientific, literary, or religious; and being desirous of receiving and imparting such light, wisdom, and principles as have, or may come to our understanding, for the benefit of society, and the building up of the kingdom of our Lord upon the earth: Therefore, resolved, that we form a society by the name of "The Deseret Theological Institute," which shall have one President, three Vice Presidents, twelve Directors, two Corresponding, and one Home Secretary, and one Treasurer, whose term of office shall be one year, and until their successors are elected. In the first instance, they shall be elected by the congregation of the Saints in General Conference assembled, and thereafter by the members of said society.

Resolved, that the Presidency and Directors have authority to direct, manage, and control all matters pertaining to said Institute, as they shall be led by the Holy Ghost.

The following persons were unanimously voted to fill the several offices in the Institute:

President B. Young said that a few years ago, the Seventies started a Hall of Science, but they had not yet seen the time to build it; but we have now the privilege of forming a society to occupy it when it is built; it will be nothing more than a school-house, an academy, a seminary to teach the brethren all that is good, and then try to get more.

Samuel Stratton Thornton was dropped from the presidency of the 20th quorum, he having apostatized.

President J. Young showed that when the body of Seventies cut a man from the quorums, that man must have previously cut himself off by trangression; they only sever the nominal tie, after he himself has severed the spiritual tie; and exhorted the Seventies to be pliable in the hands of their superiors.

Dismissed with benediction.

SUNDAY, April 8, 10 A. M.

Singing. Prayer by Elder Geo. A. Smith. Chanting.

Conference voted that Lewis Bronson, son of Seymour Bronson, be ordained Bishop of Fillmore.

Elder George A. Smith alluded to our meeting house being too small, (although it holds 12,000), but it fulfills the words of the Prophet Joseph Smith. Has defended the Book of Mormon since he was 13 years old; spoke on the prejudices and traditions of the people; in favor of the Word of Wisdom, and on union and prayer; and bore testimony of this being the work of God.

Elder Ezra T. Benson bore testimony to the truth of the remarks made during this Conference, and preached on the Word of Wisdom.

Choir sung "Redeemer of Israel." Benediction by Prest. Grant.

2 o'clock, P. M.

All who could find room convened in the Tabernacle, on account of the lowering appearance of the weather.

Called to order by Prest. Brigham Young. Choir sung a hymn, for which see first page.

Prayer by elder P. H. Young. Singing.

Elder P. H. Young exhorted the saints to constant prayer and dilligence, and asked a blessing upon the bread,

Elder Lorenzo Snow compared the present day with 25 years ago, and alluded to the time when the elders were traveling without food or shelter to proclaim the gospel to nations afar off, and asked a blessing on the water.

Elder Woodruff said, that the more conferences we have, the more they improve in interest; it was music to his ears to hear testimony of the truth; referred to the dedication of the Temple in Nauvoo, and to the wars and distress among the nations.

Elder C. C. Rich said: for the past 23 years I have known of a surety that this work was true, and that this Church is led by the hand of God; spoke on the union of the people, and living to receive the blessings; if we do the best we know, we shell do first rate.

Prest. B. Young adjourned the Conference to the 6th of October next, remarking that if we were to continue a whole week, but a few of the elders could have the privilege of bearing their testimony; he that imparts truth as fast as he receives it, will grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. The first mission to Joseph, who was a pure Ephraimite, was to gather Israel; instructed the saints how to live and avoid desease, and strenuously advised them to observe the Words of Wisdom; and to cease using Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, Spirits, and all such articles, and raise their children healthy; this people have got to do it. He than blessed the Saints.

Choir sung "Come let us anew." Benediction by Prest. Kimball. THOMAS BULLOCK
Clerk of Conference.

From Our Utah Correspondent.

G. S. L. CITY, May 31, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

SIR: Several numbers of your highly interesting paper have arrived by the Eastern and California mails. The Eastern mail arrived on the 12th inst. with 27 sacks, the principal part of 4 months mail, and considerably in advance of the usual Ox Telegraph, which has generally made its appearance in October and November with a year's mail.

The Presidency, with a large company, have just visited most of the Southern Counties, the people are all enjoying excellent health, the Indians quiet, and many of them learning to work. The Iron Works are progressing.

But one drawback causes the feelings of all to awaken: every settlement has been visited with an innumerable host of grasshoppers, devouring all the early crops, standing guard over every spear of vegetation that may venture to present itself, and the moment a single blade appears, they attack it as vigilantly as Sir Colon Campbell's Minie Rifle Corps shoot at the Russian troops when they show their heads. The attack of the allied armies on Sebastopol is mere sham work compared with the investment of our grain fields by these united hosts.

The prospect bids fair for the Saints to learn to live by faith; for what little wheat is now left, the men, women and children appear to be organized into squads of three or four each, well armed with willow bushes, and they are very busy sweeping the armies of grasshoppers into the small creeks where they place coffee sacks, and when they get them filled, they dig trenches, and bury their enemy: others of the brethren are equally as busy where the grain is entirely gone, plowing, sowing wheat, harrowing, planting corn and potatoes, and they appear to be just as diligent as they were eight or ten weeks ago; 'tis true it appears rather late, but the Saints feel it is better to plant late than never, and they have a very strong faith that a loafer, or a lazy man cannot live here this season, at least; and you may sound as loud an editorial as you please, that emigrants for the gold mines, unless they bring their provisions with them, are likely to feel a little hunger in common with us, unless they can make up their mind to live on grasshopper or cricket soup; for 60,000 Saints must be fed, whether the grasshoppers or crickets continue or not. Where they must draw their sustenance from for the next year, it requires a pretty good stretch of faith to imagine. The Lord says in a revelation of Joseph Smith, "It is MY BUSINESS to provide for the Saints," and there is a very strong prospect for him to have it to do this year, for they feel it difficult to take care of themselves.

A few loads of rock are drawn to the ground to commence building an office for the Historian, which will be built opposite the President's office.

Sent out my clerks, Thomas Bullock and Leo Hawkins, to take a peep at the public works, and they report they have seen about 100 men very busy rolling down large rocks to form the foundation for the Temple, which is very nearly completed on the last or west side. They have commenced laying the flagging for the foundation of the cut stone, and very great progress has been made during the past month.

They saw several men at work cutting the large stones for grinding seed for oil, which are 5 feet 8 inches in diameter, and 14 inches thick, and are expected to be finished next week.

Visited the foundry, the fire of which is blown by heavy machinery, and took a sweating while Morgan Phelps, and his assistants cast two segments for a large iron wheel for a threshing machine, and which cannot very easily be beat in any of the Eastern States. Saw the blacksmith's shop, in which seven fires are kept constantly in blow, with the men broiling and sweating over their warm work, with the continual clink of the hammers, fashioning the useful and necessary articles for the public works.

Went into the stone-cutter's shop, where 17 men were busily plying their hammers and chisels, forming the coping for the north wall of the Temple Block, which is very near finished; also blocks, squares, and other shapes for different public buildings now in process towards completion; also saw a grave stone for Rodney Badger, who you will recollect was drowned in the Weber River, while endeavoring to save the lives of an emigrant woman, and her four orphan children, who were traveling to California last season; also one for the child of Elder O. Pratt, and one for Bro. Patterson, who was killed while quarrying rock: all of which are the labor of Bro. Wm. Ward, and will bear comparison with any work of a similar nature in the cities of America or Europe.

Next took a peep into the paint shop, where Bro. James Beck was putting on the finishing touch to some bedsteads put together upon an entirely new and scientific principle; examined his various pieces of workmanship, with which the public paint shop abounds. I learn he has nine men under him in constant employ.

They then took a stroll through the lumber yard, and saw the numerous pile of lumber, which Bro. E. Fordham told them contained over 150,000 feet. Went into the joiner's shop, which, under the superintendency of Bro. Miles Romney, is a perfect bee hive for industry, every bench being in active occupation, and every man intent upon the labors set before him. Saw the modeling shop, and finally visited the machine shop, where flanges, wheels, cranks, gudgeons, and machinery of various descriptions were being manufactured.

The whole being as complete a business establishment as you ever saw in any of the United States, England, Scotland, France, Germany, or any part of the world in which you have been a traveler; and although you know what Mormon enterprize is, I can scarcely write so that you can read and realize the great amount of improvements that have been made, and are daily making in our midst.

The people begin to realize that there is no place like the public works, for there they are sure of their food and the necessaries of life; while at the same time every other person is fearing and trembling, and endeavoring to work his temporal salvation in trying to raise a sufficiency of food; but the result of their labors they leave in the hands of Almighty God to do with them as seemeth good in His sight. Yours faithfully, GEO. A. SMITH.

Salt Lake Correspondence.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, April 29, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: By this mail I saw a copy of your paper, and was much pleased with the spirit that seems to pervade its columns; and being a citizen of the State of New York, and desirous that my views of this place and the people might be read by my friends, on the eve of my departure for California I sit down to scratch a few items.

I arrived here last fall, and from causes that hindered I concluded to stay over winter. I sat about procuring board, and found all I could desire in a respectable Mormon family of three wives; this rather suited me, as I had heard so much said about sensuality, quarrelling, &c., among Mormon wives; but, sir, to my great surprise, I never saw a family better conducted, prayer more religiously offered, than at my stopping place, and having some little religious ideas this suited me very well. I attended the theatre with my host and hostess, where I saw Mormon elders and their wives and daughters play some of the best plays, and certainly, for acting, I never saw an amateur company equal it. Some of the performers were stars in their line, particularly a Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Clawson, Mrs. Wheelock, and Mr. P. Margetts. The scenery was superb, the orchestre not to be excelled, the director, an Italian by birth, D. Ballou, worthy of great praise. I was struck to see some of these performers on the stand at the Tabernacle and preach their religious notions; at times the people laugh in the meetings religious, as well as meetings theatrical. Strange people and stranger notions certain. We know not Down East much about varieties.

But I must come back to my impressions on the City. It is well laid out, and considerable taste displayed of late, in building. The Governors house and offices are fine specimens of workmanship, as also Mr. Grant's, the Mayor of the City. The Hall of the Legislature is a neat well fitted room. The wall around the Temple Block, and when the Temple is reared, it will reflect honor and credit to the people. It is certainly Mormonic in its design, which design for its originality adds to its grandeur. I was favored by a view of the drawings in the office of Mr. T. O. Angell, the Architect of the Church. I saw also the State House, or the Capitol; though this is the grand centre; but the State House is a good specimen of workmanship, and from the natural resources, they can build readily. Yet the appropriations of Congress are too small, where labor is high, and many materials have to be transported here at great expense.

I attended several balls, and I certainly never saw better order, more taste, and better dancing anywhere, than here, and our down east ladies who see such shocking depravity as they think is here, would be astonished to see the reverse. These balls are opened and closed by prayer, which was another curiosity to me; but I got used to it, and finally became reconciled that man should do all things under God's approval.

During the latter part of the Fall, Col. Steptoe arrived with his command, and great exertions were made to render them comfortable. Citizens of the highest respectability, moved out of their houses, (certainly for rent;) yet it showed a good desire to see the officers and men comfortably situated. The authorities of the Church gave invitations to them, and gave orders that the citizens should use their exertions to render their stay agreeable.

All liquors shops, private breweries, and every avenue or chances was stopped that should in any way lead men to do wrong; but one thing I must say, I saw no drunkeness, heard no profanity, no brothels and every body seemed here to "mind his own business."

Prices remained during the winter much as before, except oats which from scarcity, raised to 1.75, wheat 1.50 to 1.75, potatoes 75. Beef delivered to the Quarter Master at 7c., hay $12 per ton, and so far as I saw nothing took an unprecedented raise, but all seemed to move harmoniously. The authorities respectfully wished the gentlemen officers to be gentlemen and keep hands off of the ladies, as they the Mormons were death on the seducers, and Mr. Kimball, one of the chief men, said "if any meddle with the women he would be down on them like a thousand of brick," but if they minded their own business all would be right. During the winter I saw and heard much to deprecate, as I saw it different before the soldiers came in. The officers and some of the judges were the first to introduce a raffle into this Territory, so I was informed, and which is repugnant to the laws of this Territory. Capt. Rufus Ingalls gambled off his horses and carriage, at which I attended as also Chief Justice Kinney, U. S. Attorney Holmon, and others of us Gentiles. During the sitting of the Legislature, the Governor and that body resolved to give Col. Steptoe and his command and all the United States officers a grand ball. I was privilged by the kindness of the gent, who got up the decoration, tables, &c., &c., to behold the rooms and I never saw it surpassed in any city. I wish I had a bill of fare but, I have not.

I was also informed by the same person who had got up several of the finest balls here, that he was instructed to spare no expense to make it a superb affair, and from him I understand it exceeded all others by several hundred dollars. I cannot discribe, my discriptive powers are too meagre. Suffice it to say, Gentiles and Mormons danced, feasted and reveled together, and especial pains were taken to introduce the officers to the first ladies of Mormondom: but all this generosity was rewarded, I am sorry to say, not by a return ball; but by some of the officers seeking the seduction of some of the ladies of Utah, and upon this ball built their hopes and accomplished it. I heard the same Mr. Kimball and Grant come out like small thunder on sombody guilty of such attempts; and being a gentile I knew where the shoe fitted. The officers succeeded in obtaining the Indians that had killed Gunnison; they were trigd convicted and sentenced to imprisonment, but escaped from the unfinished jail; unfinished because of a lack of material aid.

During the progress of the trial, his Honor Judge Kinney presiding, reports say, that some of the officers gave Ammon's squaw blankets and whiskey for those privileges which were only the right of Ammon; and all the Indians, squaws and Interpreters, testify to its truth, and the unpleasant consequences resulting to the principal actors, as many of the squaws, of late, are not free from disease, and there was some talk of prosecution for this and the gambling scrape; but all passed off, except the disease.

During the sitting of the Supreme Court here, Messrs. Capt. Rufus, Ingalls, and Rankin were admitted to the bar of said Court, over which a legal dinner was given. On the eve of the departure of the command, the men were ordered to Rush Valley, under canvas; the officers retaining their quarters. A few days ago this same Ingalls took a notion to a fine minor child, aged twelve years, enticed her into his carriage and four, procured her presents, and his special guard, for the occasion, and in open violation of the Colonel's command, at least so he said, drove off to Rush Valley, for what cause you must judge; and almost every officer can count one or more victims to his arts. The Governor sent word to Col. Steptoe that the child must be sent for. An express started and the child was brought back, as he said, pure. The Colonel threatened arrest and court martial of Capt. Ingalls. The gallant captain and Lieut. Moury waited upon the outraged mother, and offered, so I am told, for the damage done to her and her child's prostitution, one thousand dollars, which she refused, and her son-in-law, Mr. Davis, ordered them out of the house. The Grand Jury in and for this Territory indicted Capt. Ingalls on the charge of abduction. The case proceeded not very far; for the prosecution found that the principal witness was induced by gold to leave the Territory, and the other witnesses being girls seduced by some of the officers and their own teamsters, the prosecution saw they could not depend upon the witnesses left, and found also as the prosecution testified that nearly all the witnesses were bribed; and reflecting upon the cost, the nature of the case, who and what for, and the case, if prosecuted, who it would benefit, withdrew the case. The laws of Utah, neither, are not so complete as they should be, but they were made, as I see by reference, to a people who wish to live without lawyers, a curse anywhere; but public opinion is just as much satisfied that he prostituted the child as though he had stood trial and was convicted. She left her home, not well clothed, a modest girl; came back well dressed, a brazen prostitute, and I believe is going to California. Gold, whose gold I know not, has played the very devil here this winter. Many persons went away from here who were given to profanity, drunkenness, and debauchery. I have known the City Marshal call the U. S. Attorney to order in the theatre for drunkenness and rioting, and the said attorney beg pardon next morning; also the same Marshal order the same Attorney to dismount and go to his room, as he was too drunk to appear in the street; and, in fact, it was the prevailing fault. To enlighten you a little where the liquor came from, the U. S. army sutlers, Messrs. Perry, not Mormons. I was much amused to see a poor common soldier stand in the drill-yard, on a barrel, thirty days, with a board with "drunkard" on it, because he did it like a common soldier; the officers got drunk, officer like. Marvellous difference—common soldier, drunk; officer, inebriated. Well, they have left the city and a stench behind.

Before closing, I will here remark, that the Governor is a fine, jovial, good natured fellow, and his religion does not prohibit him from mixing with gentlemen, no matter whether they like Mormonism or not, so that they behave themselves. I have received many marks of favor and good advice from him, and as I am now leaving, I will say, and I trust I shall not be deemed Mormon struck, as I shall never return here, that if people coming here would attend to their own affairs, they need have no trouble.

I became acquainted with many gentiles here. Messrs. Livingston & Kinkead, who have done business here for years, Mr. W. Mac, Mr. Mason, Messrs. Branham & Norris, and others, who all assured me that it is a fine place to do business, being mostly cash, and that the prices of goods generally were lower this past season than heretofore. There is but one mercantile house of any size, the firm of T. S. Williams & Co., which is a rouser, and the said Williams is a rouser also.

Well, sir, I have seen Mormonism in all its phases; I see much to admire, and some I must condemn. If they like plurality, all right; the Mormon likes a number, the Shaker none. What a contrast! Which does the most evil or good for the community, I leave theologians to decide. I would say here is industry, fine farms, good cities, and all this the result of a few years. Here also is great patience, no lands given, no mails for months. Who, I ask, would submit to no mails! I have expected some, but none came. It is a shame; our eastern folks would kick up a row, and cry aloud and spare not, till reform came. It causes a stagnation to business generally.

At the time Col. Steptoe's commission arrived, I heard Gov. Young say, in the stand, that he would prefer him for Governor to any man he knew of among the outsiders, and pledge him fidelity from all parties.

His Honor, Judge Shaffer, is highly esteemed here, and for his upright course, he is preferred by Saint and Gentiles.

The Indians are at present peaceable. I cannot say I admire Gov. Young's policy in regard to the Indians. I should fight them; he wins by presents and sending farmers and mechanics among them, and already many raise their bread; it has been an expensive policy to him, as I learn, appropriations in this line are small. I attended their general Conference, and from their report they are growing rich, the Governor seems to be a good financier. Board here is $5 a week. I beleive a good hotel would do well, after our eastern style. The Springs, Salt Lake, the Minerals, the Mountains, and the people cannot fail to interest the sojourner here. And I am fully pursuaded that any man can live here if he will do right, in peace. They deliver now to the Temple, 40 loads of rock per day. The site for the same is fine, and all shows that a few more years Utah will do wonders. Her sugar factory; her iron works; her machine shops; her paper factory; nails do. leather, woolen, flour and saw mills, shows she can sustain herself. Why does Uncle Sam not give Utah land like other Territories? Why not be liberal and open hearted to her? She says she has been robbed and plundered before; let no further stain come on the escutcheon of our country. Give her this Territory, and cry quits, and see if she can live as she says she can without us. I beg your pardon for the length of my communication, but I could not stop I saw so much to write about. Acknowledge the receipt of my subscription for one year, and direct to me at San Francisco, California.

Yours, &c., C. D.

N. Y. City, July 12th, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR: Having just arrived in this city we improve this opportunity to drop a few lines to you. We left G. S. L. City on the 7th of May, 19 in number, 15 to fill missions, 7 to Texas and the Southern States, and 8 to England, Maj. S. B. Rose, Sub Ind. agent for Utah, bro. Child and families bro. Whithouse and S. L. Bedel on business. When we left home all was peace and quietness. We found no trouble with the Indians. Although at every trading station we were informed that we would find it just ahead of us; but through the blessings of our Father in heaven we found none.

We saw no hostile Indians on the route. About 300 Pawnee Indians visited us, they were very friendly and wished to have a talk; we stopped about an hour, fed the chiefs and a few of the braves, made them some presents and they left us well pleased.

We met a number of companies of Saints en route for Salt Lake, and some emigrants for California, with droves of cattle, some 4 or 5,000 in number. Two of our company visited the Saints in Quincy, Ill., and Keokuck, Iowa. Re-baptized some in both places, and endeavored to awaken them to a sense of their duty. They also visited Nauvoo, the remains of the Temple, friends, &c. The houses are fast going to decay. The place is mostly inhabited by foreigners. We shall probably leave for England in a day or two. Praying for the prosperity and welfare of Zion, we close by subscribing ourselves yours, &c.,

HECTOR C. HAIGHT, Capt.
R. SMITH, Clerk of Company.

THE Mayor of New York has re-organized the surgical department of the police, so as to secure, at all time, a full knowledge of the sanitary condition of its members, and to afford such as require it gratutous professional aid.

THE Corporation has accepted from a French artist, an allegorical painting representing "The Glory of the United States," or its chief revolutionary characters.

A MEETING of Liberals has been held in New York, to discuss the comparative merits of the ancient philosophers and the founders of Christianity—no results except one, a speaker affirming that Jesus Chirst never bade men thrust away the evidence of their senses.

THE census, recently taken shows that New York has a population of 750,000 and Brooklyn of 200,000 people.

STEAMER BURNED AND EIGHT LIVES LOST—MORTALITY AT NEW ORLEANS.—New Orleans, July 9, 1855.—The steamer Magnolia, with a cargo of 1,000 bales of cotton, was destroyed by fire a little below Baton Rouge, and eight lives were lost.

There were 160 deaths in this city last week, including 32 from yellow fever, and 19 from cholera.

A MELANCHOLY TRAGEDY.—St. Louis, July 11, 1855.—On Saturday night a young man named Belssing, of good family, took his sister, who had been leading a desolate life, out riding in the country, and there shot her. He then returned to the hotel where he was staying, and on Sunday shot himself.

ARRESTS UNDER MAINE LAW.—Twenty-five persons were arrested yesterday, accused of being intoxicated in the public streets, and all were committed to prison for ten days each. Ten of them were committed by Justice Wood, eight by Justice Connolly, and seven by Justice Pearcy. There were no liquor dealers arrested.

European News.

ARRIVAL OF THE PACIFIC.

THE Collins' Mail steamer Pacific, arrived at this port on Wednesday morning, at 6 o'clock.

It would seem that the rumors of the losses of the Allies in the Crimea, by the last steamer, have been greatly exaggerated.

Lord Palmerston declared, in the House of Commons, that the whole number of the non-commissioned officers and men killed is 144; and wounded, 1,058, making a total of non-commissioned officers and men killed and wounded of 1,202; the number of officers killed wounded is 93, making a total of 1,295.

The whole loss of the Allies in killed and wounded was, therefore, about 4,000 men. The attack was upon the Malakoff and the Great Redan. Among the killed are Major General Sir John Campbell, Colonel Yea, and Lieutenant Colonel Shadforth.

The telegraphic communication with the Crimea, which had been interrupted by an accident to the wires on the Austrian Territory, is now re-established, and we have news from the head-quarters to the 27th June.

The army is by no means daunted by this first repulse, but only burning to be revenged.

The following telegraphic despatch was received last night by the English Government:

The French and English are proceeding with their approaches against the enemy's works, and are erecting new batteries, to be armed with heavy guns.

The enemy continue to repair the damage done during the last attack. Very little fire on their part.

We retain possession of the round Russian fort in the Cemetery, whence they were driven out on the 18th, and the Mamelon, at the gorge of the valley which divides the English left attack from the right of the South harbor.

From General Pelissier the French government has received the following:

JUNE 19—The besieged, notwithstanding our failure of yesterday, which they will doubtless exaggerate considerably, grew alarmed last night, and for a long time they kept up a fire from all their guns at empty space.

To day, at 4 o'clock, there was an armistice for burying the dead.

JUNE 20, 1855.

The beseiged, closely pressed on the side of the Central Ravine, are setting fire to the little faubourg at the extremity of the southern port.

We are erecting batteries with guns of heavy calibre on the works captured on the 7th of June, which threaten more directly the great port.

CRIMEA, June 21—11 P. M.

We are actively making approaches towards the Malakhoff tower. The enemy appears to be exclusively occupied in repairing and strengthening his works.

A little cholera still prevails, but it does not spread.

The general health is good.

JUNE 22—11 P. M.

I have no new fact to mention.

I send you by the ordinary mail a detailed report of the combat of the 18th.

CRIMEA, June 24—11 P. M.

I have nothing new to announce to you. We are pushing our approaches against the Malakoff and the construction of the advanced battery, which will complete the investment of the port.

We are also drawing closer with our left attack. There are still some cases of cholera.

JUNE 25—11 P. M.

I have not anything to announce to you to-day of particular interest. The works indicated are progressing.

JUNE 26—11:30 A. M.

I have not any news to communicate.

The additional details received of the capture of the Mamelon and Quarries on the 7th June, show that it was a most gallant affair.

Lord Raglan has asked to be recalled, owing to severe illness.

The Allied fleet in the Sea of Azoff are making no demonstrations at present.

The whole movable force of the Allies now at the Crimea is estimated at 60,000.

The following despatch was received in Berlin, from St. Petersburg, June 25th:

After twenty-four hours of a murderous cannonade and unprecedented bombardment, the enemy, early on the morning of the 18th, attempted the assault of bastion one, two and three, and the Korniloff bastion.

Repulsed at all points with enormous loss, the French withdrew, leaving six hundred prisoners.

After this assault, so brilliantly repulsed by our troops, the enemy in the evening nearly discontinued his fire; and up the evening of the 19th nothing worthy of note had occurred in the vicinity of Sebastopol.

A Marseilles correspondent of the London Times, writing on the 26th of June, Says:

Sick and wounded soldiers continue to arrive from the East with painful rapidity. The British steamer, Parana, which sailed from Constantinople on the 15th inst., enterered the harbor on Saturday with 250 invalids or convalescents. The screw steamer Assyrien, of Bazine Leon Gay's Company arrived on Sunday with an equal number. The Post office steamer, Pharamond, less crowded, arrived the same day from the East. The mail steamer, Simois, from Constantinople, the 18th, arrived this morning, with despatches from the Crimea of the 16th inst., and 220 wounded or convalescent soldiers.

A correspondent of the London Times, writing from Warsaw, June 18, says:

Three American officers of the United States army have arrived here from St. Petersburg, where they went to ask permission to go to Sebastopol to watch the progress of events. As they appear to have been actuated by mere curiosity leave was not granted them, and they will return by way of Germany.

A Paris correspondent of the London Times, June 28, says:

The rumors I noticed in my Monday's letter, of a coolness between General Pelissier and Lord Raglan, and which I thought I was fully justified in discrediting, have been since repeated, and accompanied with such explanations as lead me to believe that his lordship finds a military brusquerie in the French Commander-in-Chief, which renders him a less agreeable partner in command than were Marshal St. Arnaud and General Canrobert. The latter, it is said, communicated his plans beforehand to Lord Raglan, who sometimes (is the French account) delayed his reply till the intended combination was rendered abortive. General Pelissier confines himself to informing the English general that he intends to do this or that, and that he wishes him to do so and so, evincing at the same time a determination to effect the intended operation by his own forces should Lord Raglan differ with him on the design or mode of execution. With the same resolute spirit of command and indifference to the understood customs of the service, Pelissier pushed on detachments of the Imperial Guard to the assault on the 7th and 8th, instead of holding them in reserve for great occasions, as is the universal rule in all services with regard to the household troops. But General Pelissier has had the fullest powers conferred on him by the Emperor, and is said to exercise them in an absolute manner, and in an unusual manner—but after a fashion perfectly to the taste of the French army, and which may turn out to be as little to the taste of the enemy. However, I am inclined to think that the old spirit of routine, which certainly infects the military authorities of England, will have its "withers wrung" by the morally and mentally bold and daring officer, with whom it has now to carry on concerted operations.

The London Morning Herald, of June 30, has the following:

Within the last forty-eight hours, we know that one of our ablest and most gallant captains of war publicly stated that he would stake his life, and all he possessed on earth, that Lord Dundonald would destroy Sweaborg within forty-eight hours after his arrival there, without loss of life to the Allies, and at a cost not exceeding £400,000.

THE LIQUOR SEIZURE AT POUGHKEEPSIE.—Poughkeepsie, N. Y., July 11, 1855.—Berbenck, who was arrested on Monday last for selling lager bier, was tried yesterday by a jury before the County Judge, found guilty and fined fifty dollars. The wine seized was returned to him before the trial.

SUSPECTED RECRUITS FOR THE CRIMEA.—Boston, June 25, 1855.—A letter from Holmes Hole states that the Revenue Cutter James Campbell anchored off there on Sunday, having in charge the British brig Buffalo, from New York for Miramichi, Nova Scotia. The Cutter fell in with the brig, when a number of German passengers on board appealed for protection, stating they were engaged in New York to work on railroads in Nova Scotia, but suspected they were in reality designed for British service in the Crimea, and asked to be taken out of the vessel. The captain of the Cutter will detain the brig until the matter has been legally investigated.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions caprisieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systémes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lascivité, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

JOHN TAYLOR.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "The Mormon" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "The Mormon" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "The Mormon." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

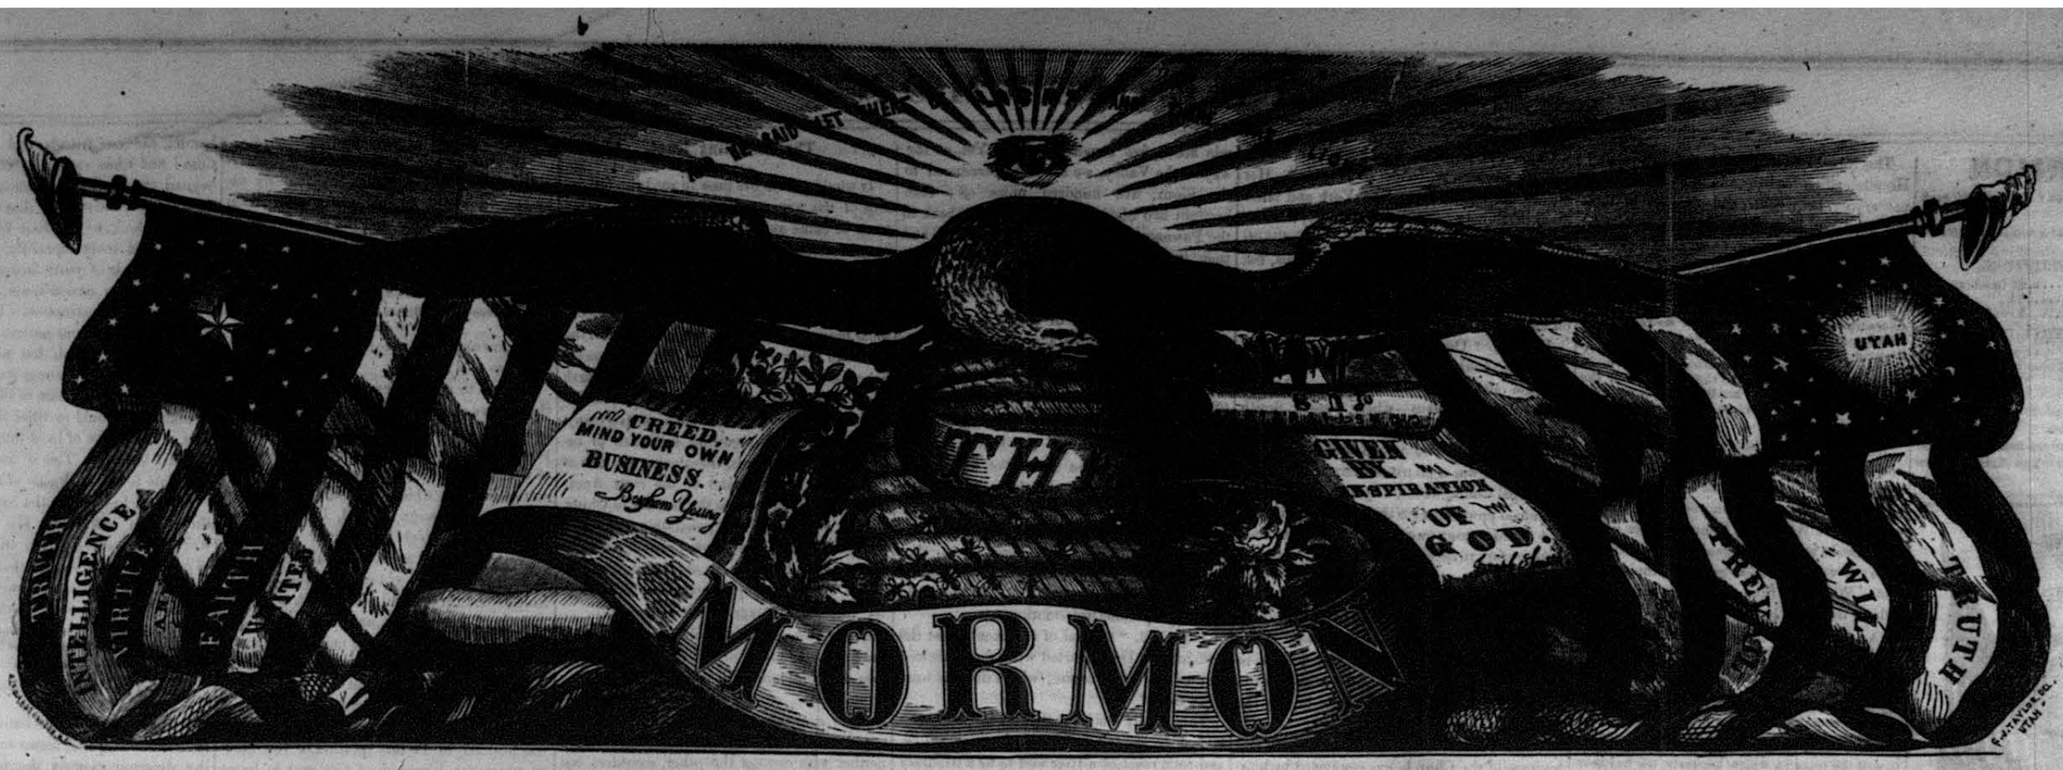
ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.



The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Poetry.

For the Mormon.

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

Let hireling priests their men-made dogmas teach,
And stipulate the sum for which they'll preach;
Carve out their sermons by the rule and square,
Mechanic-like, except the sacred air.

Let politicians scramble for the spoil,
And vote themselves pre-emption to the soil,
Proscribe poor Utah for her evil deeds,
Then pay for amors with the State proceeds.

Let lawyers soap their clients for a fee,
And dupe the honest with their artful plea;
Let dimes and dollars be the price of sin,
So screen from justice those who have the tin.

Let alopaths their deadly drugs impart,
And boast of wisdom in the healing art;
Deal out the grains—make salivation sure;
(Disease, 'tis true, is bad, but worse the cure.)

Let men of pleasure crowd the wanton gate,
With hearts depraved disdain the marriage state;
Court Bacchus, too, and wed his every ill,
So pass dishonored to the graves they fill.

But I would be a Saint in very deed,
The law of God acknowledge as my creed;
Love truth and virtue—every evil hate,
And pass untrameled to a higher state.

Visit to a Volcano on the Sandwich Islands.

[Extract from the Journal of Elder Geo. Q. Cannon.]

In May, 1854, I had occasion to visit the conference on the Island of Hawaii (the Owhyhee of Captain Cook,) and while there, together with several of the elders, both white and native, went to view the far-famed volcano of Kilauea. On account of our numbers, we found it most convenient to go on foot, our opportunities not being very good for obtaining animals. The district of Hilo, through which our road principally lay, is very fertile and productive, in consequence of the quantity of rain which falls almost daily.

We left Waiakea (or, as its called by the whites, Byron's Bay,) for the mountain, early in the morning. Our road was tolerably good; in many places the roots of ferns, which grow in great profusion all through this district, were laid crosswise—corduroy fashion—making it pretty good walking.

It is a singular looking country along here for some miles; its surface is undulating, and appears as though it had been formed by the frequent deposits of lava flowing from the crater. The soil is very rich in places, and covered with ki, fern, and occasional patches of timber. The latter part of the road, however, was pahoehoe or lava, whose scanty covering of soil was worn off by the constant travel of man and beast. In places, this lava was very smooth and slippery; and cooling as it ran, it had formed itself into fantastic shapes of every form and variety.

We passed through several small villages where they raise kalo—their principal article of food—in tolerable abundance, and for which they find ready sale at the bay. Our appearance was generally hailed by the cry of "the white men," and troops of boys and girls, as well as grown up natives, rushed to the road side to scrutinize us, and ask questions, which gave us a good opportunity to lay our principles, to some small extent, before them, which were productive of some good, for, when we returned from the crater a few days afterwards, we had the pleasure of baptizing several and organizing a small branch. We reached the half way house at a place called Olaa, about the middle of the afternoon, and stopped for the night.

The next morning, after breakfast, we resumed our journey—the man with whom we stopped accompanying us as guide, to show us the wonders of Kilauea.

The country resembled in some respects that through which we passed, but uninhabited. After a toilsome walk of some seventeen or eighteen miles, we arrived at the crater a little before three o'clock P. M. We saw nothing to indicate our near approach to it; no truncated top as we see in pictures of other volcanoes, nor elevated summit to be distinguished in the distance, but an immense chasm or pit with perpendicular sides, about 12 miles in circumference and 1000 feet deep.

We became aware of our proximity to the object of our journey by the steam which we saw issuing from the numerous fissures and pits scattered around on the surface of the ground, in the vicinity of the edge of the crater. In the distance, Manna Loa loomed up with its regular and dome-like summit, from which there was a very violent eruption in February, 1852, which caused some apprehensions to be felt for the safety of the town of Waiakea, on Byron's Bay—the principal place on the island.

As the main part of the company had not come up, we deferred our descent until morning, and employed ourselves in visiting the pits and seams, whence the steam issued. In some of these places the heat was sufficiently great to cook potatoes; and in one ravine we found banana trees and a few sweet potatoes growing. There is a sulphur bank or mound a short distance from the brink of the crater, called by the natives the kiona, where there are a great many chimnies, out of which a strong sulphurous steam was issuing, and so hot as to almost instantly scald the hand.

We ascended the mound, and examined the different apertures, the sides of which were covered with fine crystals of a yellow color. The vapor which is emitted from these holes is almost overpowering, and the footing is so very precarious that nothing but a strong curiosity could have induced us to approach the edges of these chimnies. We collected some very fine specimens of crystalized sulphur, but owing to the want of facilities to carry them without spoiling, we were only able to preserve a few.

The whole of the surrounding country bears the impress of the agency of great internal fires which are constantly at work, and which causes the whole of the island occasionally to tremble.

We found a spring of water near the edge of the precipice, which, our guide informed us, was formed by the condensation of the steam on the surrounding bushes. Ohelos—the Hawaiian whortleberry—grow quite plentifully, but many of the natives, I understood, are so superstitious that they will not touch them, as they say it will be sure to rain, and they will be apt to perish with cold.

Towards four or five o'clock the natives had all arrived; they brought up a large calabash of poi—a paste made by pounding the kalo root—on a pole between two of them; also a hog that had been killed and cooked in the ground* by the orders of Bro. Napela, who was caterer for the party; every one of the natives had also brought along a small bundle of pai at (kalo pounded and wrapped in ki leaves.)

We stopped for the night in a grass house which had been built on the brink of the precipice for the accommodation of visitors, and in the evening we had a splendid view of the lurid fires of the volcano; their reflection on the moving clouds of smoke required but little stretch of the imagination to people the bottom of the crater with living beings. It was easy to account for an imaginative and superstitious people, as the Hawaiians are, believing that these fantastic forms of clouds were the spirits of the departed, they were so truly life-like.

In consequence of the altitude, we found it quite cold in the night, and had to keep a good fire in the house; there being no chimney, the smoke annoyed us considerably. In the morning we were up and stirring betimes, and, without stopping to eat breakfast, commenced to descend, accompanied by our guide. By the aid of a good stout staff, which we found of great benefit, we accomplished the descent in safety, and soon found ourselves at the edge of what has been appropriately called the black ledge.

This was an immense field of lava which ran all round the pit, and was the effect of some former eruption. The appearance of this lava was singular indeed, resembling in many respects the sea, in its wave-like appearance, or a field of shore ice from which the water had receded, leaving it shattered and cracked. In fact, I cannot compare it to anything better than a frozen sea, black as coal; some portions of it resembling the sea in a state of rest, other portions as it would appear in a violent storm; in some places the waves had combed one over another, as in the ocean, and in this position they had cooled. Great care had to be observed in crossing over these combing waves, as the crust was thin, and there was danger of breaking through. How awfully grand must the sight have been when this whole mass of lava was in motion—a sea of liquid fire—and how insufficient language is to convey to the mind of man anything like the effect the sight of it would have produced!

In cooling, it had cracked, leaving large seams from which steam and heat issued, and in many places we had to use caution in crossing them on account of the intensity of heat. These fissures varied from two to six feet in width.

The upper crust of the lava is cellular, something like honeycomb, and very light and porous, and crackled under the feet like coal cinders. We felt our way carefully with our poles, like men passing over a frozen lake. There were several ridges of rock thrown up, and as we approached the vicinity of the fire, we came to a hill resembling a limekiln, which emitted a thick, large body of smoke and steam. It was composed of a variety of earths and rock, and seemed to be the chimney stack of the crater. I climbed up, and looked down a hole from which a sulphurous smoke and vapor arose, the inhalation of which involved considerable danger. The sides of this chimney, like those we visited at the Kiona close to the brink of the precipice the previous evening, were covered with crystals of a yellow color. We tried to ascertain its depth by throwing stones down, but we could not hear them strike the bottom. Within a few feet of this was another very large chimney, out of which a dense smoke issued, so dense as to preclude a view of the interior; it was a dangerous experiment peeping into this chimney, owing to the precarious nature of the footing; one false step whould have proved fatal to the explorer. This, we were told by the guide, was all included, a few years ago, in the pit or crater that was constantly active; of late years it has decreased to its present size, and only occasionally breaks forth in any other place.

Leaving this, the guide led us over places that looked dangerous and very risky, and I felt that we were indeed treading on a volcano and we had to be careful where we stepped. A feeling of awe very naturally crept over me, and I felt how very insignificant man is, and how little he knows of the works and operations of his Maker.

While going from, what I call, the chimney stack of the crater towards the pit or caldron, we had great difficulty in breathing, on account of the strong sulphurous smoke which the former emitted, and which the wind carried in the direction we were going. When we came to the edge of the pit, a sight met my eyes which I think I shall never forget, and which surpassed, in sublimity and grandeur, anything I had ever witnessed or imagined; language is too faint to convey any of my feelings; I could not repress my exclamations of delight and admiration, it so far exceeded what I had read in written descriptions, or what I expected to see. I felt amply repaid for all my toil in beholding this awfully grand and stupendous work of the Creator.

The pit we judged to be about fifty or sixty feet deep, with perpendicular sides, nearly round, and about, as near as we could judge, one hundred yards across. The strongest heat seemed to be round the edges; and in one side there were two large holes, very close together, which looked more like the mouths of two very large furnaces than anything else I ever saw. Here the melted lava or matter was in constant motion, a perfect mass of liquid fire, surging and heaving like the waves of the sea, with a noise which the paddles of a steam vessel sailing in the ocean slightly resembled—it was truly a magnificent sight. Before we reached the caldron, the sound of the spouting and surging matter resembled the booming of heavy artillery at a distance.

The surface of the matter while quiescent, was black, with beautiful red veins here and there through it; it had a movement—sometimes flowing quickly, other times slowly—from the north east to south west, to the places where it was raging so violently. It was surprising to see with what ease it would melt this stony mass and convert it again into a fluid, throwing it out sometimes with great force. Occasionally it would roll up in other parts of this vast caldron, red and fiery, with a slow, heavy movement, twisting and curling in all manner of shapes, and again relapsing into its former position. Where it was black, a stone would indent it, but not sink out of sight.

We found great quantities of capillary glass, or as the natives call it Pele's hair, believing it to be the goddess' hair—but, owing to the want of facilities for preserving it, we brought but little away.

A party of natives had been here, so we were told, a few days before, throwing the bones of a relative into the volcano, with hogs, fowls, &c.—sacrifices to propitiate Madam "Pele." The pit is called by the natives ku lua a Pelo, (the pit of Pele.) "Pele" was formerly, and is now by many believed, to be a goddess, younger sister of Papa, the woman that brought forth the islands, according to the old legend; the first-born being Hawaii, and the last Kauai and Nilhau.

Pele, it is said, came from Kahiki, (foreign lands,) with her brothers and sisters, and lived first at Kauai, from thence to Oahu, thence to Molokai, thence to Maui, and finally, took up her residence on this island, Hawaii, where she still continues to maintain it. The quiescent craters on all these islands give evidence of the existence of active volcanoes on them in ages past.

The Hawaiians formerly believed in a plurality of gods, and "Pele" was worshipped in conjunction with the rest, and had her devotees and priests as well as the rest: her place of residence or lua, was believed to be the place where all the spirits of good chiefs and men went to dwell; the bad ones going to the po or place of darkness in the centre of the earth—the dominions of Milu, the Pluto of the Hawaiians.

The practice of throwing the bones of dead relatives into the volcano, used to be, and is quite common among the worshippers of this goddess. Their idea is, that if "Pele" is pleased with the sacrifice she will consume the bones, and the spirit of the deceased will be permitted to return as a familiar spirit, and be with one of the family; if the sacrifice is not acceptable the bones are thrown out of the caldron.

We stood on the brink of the caldron watching it bubbling and hissing, and it seemed, in looking at the liquid mass, as though the popular theory of a central fire was somewhat plausible. I thought I should never be tired looking at it, but as we had a journey of eighteen miles before us, we were reminded to be stirring.

In returning, the guide led us back another way over a lower portion of the pit or sea of lava; it seemed to be very little above the level of the burning matter in the caldron. He pointed out to us several places where there had been recent eruptions, leaving large craters or pits, the bottoms of which presented a similar appearance to that portion of the field over which we were walking, having cooled and preserved its wave-like appearance.

* The process of cooking in the ground, so common among the Pacific Islanders, is as follows:—They make a round hole in the ground, varying in size according to the quantity of food to be cooked, and then build a fire in it; they then pile a large quantity of stones on the fire; when they are thoroughly heated, they are spread evenly on the bottom and sides of the hole. If kalo (a root which they cultivate and use as their common staff of life) is to be cooked, it is piled on these in a conical heap, and then covered with leaves; on the leaves there is a coat of dirt thrown up of sufficient thickness to prevent the escape of heat or steam, and just before closing it up entirely with dirt, there is a bucket or two of water poured in at the top to be converted into steam by the heat of the stones; and this cooks the food. In this manner meat is also cooked, with the exception of not pouring water in as with the kalo; if a hog, it is filled with heated stones, pockets being made in the shoulders for the insertion of hot stones; water is then poured into it to create steam, and it is laid on the heated stones in the hole, leaves being first laid to keep it from sticking to the stones or burning, and it is then covered as the kalo.

Wheat Fields in a City.

The consolidated City of Philadelphia is a great place, geographically speaking; but many of the Wards are far from being populous with humanity. Indeed, from what we see in the Philadelphia papers, we are led to believe the 21st, 22d and 23d Wards are almost in a state of nature, except portions which are appropriated to the raising of wheat and other cereals. By a late number of the Bulletin, we observe the harvest has commenced in the Quaker City. It says: "We saw the 'cradlers' hard at work yesterday in several wheat fields in the 21st, 22d and 23d Wards."

The Austin (Texas) State Gazette, June 23, says: "There is about $20,000 subscribed for a foray against Mexico, and we learn that some of the fillibusters are at present at the headquarters in San Antonia. Rumor gives the name of several, and some from Austin. It is intended to raise some 500 or 1,000 men in Texas to go over to Mexico."

We publish the following, that our friends in these regions may know something about the Utah gardeners. Mr. Sayers' statements as an experienced Horticulturist, can be relied upon.

Horticultural—The Valley Gardener.—Culture of the Pea.

Editor of the Desert News: Having many enquiries by new comers, and those unacquainted with raising garden vegetables in Utah, I take the liberty to offer a few remarks on the culture of the Pea, derived from six years' experience in cultivating upwards of thirty varieties which have come to hand, brought from different parts by various persons.

All the varieties of peas thrive well, and are adapted to our soil. A moderate rich soil is the best for most varieties, and all the better if of a light sandy nature. The time of sowing depends on circumstances; any variety may be safely sown, if the ground is in good condition, from the first of March to the first of May. The plan I have generally adopted is to sow three or four varieties, for a general crop, about the 10th or 15th of March, and if properly selected, they will follow one another in succession for the table.

The following list is the best I am acquainted with for general culture:

Early June, 2 feet high, will be ready 1st of June.
Prince Albert, 2 feet 6 inches high, will be ready 10th of June.
Blue Surprise, 3 feet high, will be ready 20th of June.
Blue Imperial, 2 feet high, (for a general crop,) will be ready from the 25th to 30th June.
Woodruff's Green Marrow, 1 foot 6 inches high, will be ready from 1st to 10th July.

VARIETIES.

There are few garden vegetables that have so many nominal varieties, and sub-varieties, as the pea; although the true varieties are compartively few. To swell the list, and to please the factitious epicure, Horticulturists have created a host of new names, to keep pace with the times. The old English early frame pea, the best variety of its kind, has a new name for almost every place where it finds its way. In Philadelphis this old favorite has been a little improved under the name of "Landreth's Extra Early." This pea I brought into the valley 6 years ago, and finding that it came to perfection for the table early in June, have sold it under the name of "Early June Pea;" but it has here obtained another more pointed name, viz: "The May Pea," which it does not merit, and never will, because it is not fit for table before the 1st of June, unless it is eaten like the skinless pea, pods and all. The "Bishop's Early Dwarf," and "Early Emperor," are only sub-varieties of this old standard pea, obtained by selecting some early dwarf seeds from the true kind. Indeed, all the extraordinary early peas are simply the offsprings of a meagre precocity, or early, unnatural maturity caused by decay, or disease of the natural habit of the plant.

The Charlton is the next true early variety of peas, and is fit for the table about ten days after the "Early Frame." The original of this pea is however rarely to be seen, although we have many sub-varieties of it. The pea called "The Poor Man's Friend" is one, and is a very prolific pea; but the best sub-variety that I have seen is the "Prince Albert," an excellent kind to succeed the "Early June," and well adapted to Utah.

The "Marrowfat," of which the old white Marrowfat forms the type, has of late years been made to produce almost everything desirable; from the "Dwarf Green Marrowfat," 11-2 feet high, to "Knight's tall Marrows," which on good ground grows from 5 to 7 feet high. It would far exceed my prescribed limits to enumerate the many varieties of this class that have come to hand. For general culture the old white Marrowfat is a favorite with me; it always bears a good crop, the pods are larger, and the peas of an excellent flavor. For field culture the black-eye Marrowfat is an excellent variety, being very hardy, and producing good crops. There are several varieties of Green Marrow, most of them of fine flavor, but have more claim on the epicure than the general cultivator. Woodford's Dwarf Green Marrow is well worthy of culture for a late pea; it is of excellent flavor, and comes into use after any other variety of the same sowing.

The Blue Pea.—The "Blue Prussian" appears to be the original of this class; it is however at present but little grown, being far inferior to the "Blue Imperial," which is one of the best peas we have. The dwarf variety is an excellent bearer, and the peas are excelled by none in flavor and appearance. The "Cimetar" and "Blue Surprise" are good varieties, the latter is free bearing, and comes to perfection about the middle of June.

"The Grey Pea" is readily known by its red blossom, and there are many varieties of it none of them worth cultivating for the table. As it is one of the worst kinds of pea to mingle with and spoil good varieties, it should never be allowed to grow in the neighborhood.

"Skinless, or Eat pod Peas" are hybrids from almost every variety, and esteemed by those who prefer to eat the pods with the peas.

In closing this article, I would recommend a more general culture of peas both in the garden and field, for in no other country, I believe, is the soil or climate better adapted to this excellent vegetable. I would recommend the dwarf varieties, as they do not require any sticks to support the vines, and generally produce better crops than the tall growing. To the farmer I would say, cultivate peas, for besides being useful as an excellent vegetable in their season, they are capital feed for swine, especially if ground with wheat or barley. But the greatest claim the pea has on the farmer is, it will produce a crop on poor, light sandy soil, where wheat is uncertain. They may be sown early in the spring, and will be ripe early enough to escape the drought, insects, and other common casualties detrimental to crops. Yours &c., E. Sayers.

Wild Pigeons.

In perusing Bancroft, a few days since, we were struck with the doubt contained in the following sentence. "The myriads of pigeons, darkening the air with the immensity of their flocks, and, as men believed, breaking with their weight the boughs of trees on which they alighted." The italics are ours, used in order to direct the attention of the reader to the subject matter of doubt. Now what was doubt with Mr. Bancroft is reality in experience of all lovers of the chase, and sports of the fowling-piece throughout the great West and the sunny South, where these wild birds still congregate in "myriads." Where we to affirm that we have seen boughs of trees, as large as a man's thigh, broken off by the "weight" of these birds, we would be only making an assertion that is susceptible of the "strictest proof," by oral testimony; but we could go still further, and produce the "record" in the form of broken limbs, such as we have spoken of, and the bodies of giant trees still bent, under the pressure of this living accumulated weight, by travelling some forty miles in a North-Easterly direction from this place.

We would thus be enabled to bring the doubter a roost that has been occupied by these clouds of wild pigeons for two winters. It forms an area of three miles, in the Parish of St. Helena—and were one to come suddenly upon it, the first reflection that would occupy the mind, would be, that it was the tract of some terrible tornado.

We were on the ground with our fowling-piece in the winter of '52, when the whole forest was literally darkened, and swayed to and fro with the weight of this living load. We fired among them until faint with the exertion of loading, when we seated ourselves on the ground, in possession of a long pole we had cut, and thrashed away, bringing several to the ground at a blow. These are facts which no one doubts in this latitude, and any one who would have the hardihood to express doubt, would be laughed at as "green."—[Baton Rouge Gazette.

Submarine Communication with Europe.—It is stated in the London Times that an additional step towards the establishment of electric communication between America and Europe is about to be effected in the course of a few weeks. The submarine telegraph cable to connect Cape Breton Island with Newfoundland is in course of shipment on board the Sarah L. Bryant, at the works of W. Kuper & Co., manufacturers, at Greenwich, and in less than two months the line is expected to be in operation. The length of the cable is 74 miles, weighing 400 tons, and it contains three conducting wires.

Reeder Thrashed.

On the arrival of Governor Reeder, he immediately wrote to Gen. B. F. Stringfellow, of Weston, requesting an interview with him at Westport, Missouri, the purport of which was to make, through the General, overtures o peace to the pro-slavery party. Having some personal matters to settle with his Excellency, Gen. S. readily complied with this unexpected invitation, though, as the sequel shows, he performed a part not "put on the bill" by the Governor. After discussing matters political, the General brought forward on the scene of action his personal grievances, the settlement of Attorney-General Isaacs and the Governor's private secretary.

It will be remembered that Governor Reeder, and the few sattelites that revolve around him, branded General Stringfellow, and others, at the East, as a "border ruffian," "cut-throat," "blackguard," &c., for which he took this occasion to demand reparation from his Governorship, which being refused, left a sound thrashing as the only means of redress. This the General administered in double-quick time, although his adversary escaped the full measure of his deserts, through the interference of his friends. Gen. S. struck Governor Reeder and knocked him down, when that person had a pistol cocked by his side on the table, which his craven spirit prevented his using.

This is but the beginning of the end. After the final decision of President Pierce in Reeder's case, he will either be removed by that functionary, or be forced to abdicate by the indignant squatter sovereigns of Kansas.

The Franking Privilege.

The following officers are entitled to the franking privilege by an act of Congress: The Secretaries of the Departments, Postmaster-General and Attorney-General of the United States, the First and Second Comptrollers of the Treasury, the Solicitor of the Treasury, the Auditors of the Treasury, the Treasurer of the United States, the Register of the Treasury, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, the Assistant Secretary of State, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Commissioner of Customs, the Commissioner of Patents, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Commissioner of Pensions, the Assistant Postmasters General, the Adjutant General of the Army, the Quartermaster General, the Inspector General, the Commissary General of Subsistence, the Paymaster General, the Chief Engineer, the Surgeon General, the Colonel of Ordinance, the Chiefs of Bureaus of the Navy Department, and the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, and assistant in charge of the office. This privilege, of course, is restricted to letters and packets relating to their official duties; those sent to be marked or stamped "official business," and this declaration to be subscribed by the officer, with a designation of his office. In the case of the Heads of Departments alone this declaration may be subscribed, under their direction, by their respective chief clerks.—[Union.

From New Brunswick,—An order was recently received from England for fifty artillerymen serving in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, to proceed to the Crimea. The requisite number was made up by volunteers, a larger number offering than were ordered. The St. John New Brunswicker has the following remarks in regard to the trouble with the Foreign Legion at Melville Island:—It is to be regretted that government ever undertook to raise recruits from among the outcasts in the United States, the very scum of all nations. If the honor of the British flag depended on such beings, we fear it would not long maintain its present proud position. The expense of these worthless hirelings will be more than they are worth—far more, indeed, than the best subjects at home could be enlisted for. We hope to see an end put to this mode of obtaining recruits. It is derogatory to the character of the first nation in the world. The sons of Britain everywhere are willing to share in the dangers and glories of the present contest with a barbarous Power, and there is no need of subsidising mercenary soldiers.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1855.

The Last Novel—The Last Nibble—and the Last Sell.

FOR some time past many of the editors of this great metropolis have been busily engaged in trying to hatch up something against the Mormons. Every story has been related, every report trumpeted, every communication heralded, and every whisper proclaimed. The Mormons have been represented as impure, debased, anti-American, traitors, ignoramuses, not fit to govern themselves, a curse to the United States, murderers of Gunnison, blacklegs, imposters, deceivers, and accused of all the vocabulary of crime.

These charges have been met and repudiated, and their shameless falsehoods hurled back in their teeth, and they have been confronted by testimony that they dare not deny. They have been called upon to substantiate their assertions, and in their exertions have brought into requisition all their inventive energies, used every literary hack, and seemed as though they would rake hades for something to bespatter the Mormons. Their filth, however, has rolled back upon themselves, and besmeared, begrimmed, and desperate, they have complained that the "Mormons have laughed at them." Poor fellows, they ought not to be laughed at—they ought to be pitied. They have then called upon the editorial fraternity for "HELP;" but their cry has been like deep calling upon deep, the response—a silent echo. Gov. Young's fraudulency has exploded. Colonel Steptoe has accomplished nothing for them. Instead of capital being made of the trial of the Indians, it has all resulted in several of the principal officers being disgraced; and in spite of special correspondents, testimony comes rolling in in relation to Utah, morally, religiously, and socially, rebutting their statements, and dumb-founding both the accusers and their propagandists. We were to have a rich treat from a wife of Brigham Young's, and a Mrs. Williams; but these have exploded, and now, as a sort of God-send, we have got a book rich in information and full of everything useful, entertaining, and interesting. Now, you Mormons, stand out of the way; we are going to give you Jesse. We have now proof "strong as holy writ—incontrovertible evidence—a book written by Maria Ward, not Gov. Young's wife, to be sure; but a Mormon Elder's wife." Isn't that enough; and then it is a description of "female life among the Mormons." Capital. A "book ably written," so says the Mirror. He states that > "Lord Bacon says: 'Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested.' A volume, entitled 'Female Life Among the Mormons,' the proof sheets of which have been sent us by Mr. Derby, is one of the books to be 'chewed.'"

We would rather Mr. Fuller had the chewing than us. A person chewing that precious morceau would not need an emetic. It would require something more strong than a Mormon's stomach to digest. But Mr. F. seems quite elated. He adds:

> "It is certainly one of the most extraordinary revelations of fanaticism, licentiousness, and cruelty that we have ever read; and altogether a most marvellous, melancholy book. It one-tenth part of the baseness and beastliness of Mormonism, as represented in the volume before us, be true, the whole tribe deserve extermination from the face of the earth—not for their pretended belief in the divinity of Joe Smith or Brigham Young, but for their gross and habitual outrages upon the common laws of society and the common decencies of humanity.
>
> "The book is well written, and if the community generally have confidence in the veracity of its statements, it cannot fail to excite such a whirlwind of indignant disgust as will sweep the 'Latter Day Saints' beyond the pale of Christendom. The evils of this 'Spiritual Wife' system has become gigantic—a hundredfold worse and more dangerous than African slavery; and we hope to see prompt action taken by the coming Congress, in vindication of the violated laws of the Republic in the too long prostituted territory of Utah. The writer of the book, Mrs. Maria Ward, gives a brief sketch of her seduction into the harem of a Mormon Elder."

But doucement, doucement, Mr. Fuller; it may be not so bad after all; don't get excited; you know although one Mormon is near you, the body are a long way off. Why, you are not taken yet; not even polluted by them. Don't cut all our throats—now don't.

We were amused at some remarks of Judge Phelps, in another column, about a hook baited with a grub; but the Mirror has actually swallowed the hook and chewed the grub.

The New York Dispatch is also quite elated. He was calling for help, and lo! while he was yet crying, help came, and greedily he took the grub, and is so enamored with it that he has published five columns of closely-printed matter at a time; and finally winds up by endorsing it in the strongest terms. He says:

> "Thus ends one of the most thrilling, and self-evidently truthful, narratives ever written. The book is published by Derby & Co., of this city, and we predict for it a larger sale and more extensive reading than any other publication that has made its appearance for years. In the language of the author, 'this narrative of her life only proves what has often been proved before, that 'Truth is stranger than fiction.'"

Some others have taken the same view of it, and stand fairly committed; while a few more sensible, intelligent, and not so easily duped, have taken altogether another view, among which is the New York Times, a paper decidedly hostile to us; they could not swallow the grub; it was rather too gross for their digestion. We select, from among the many, quotations, from this paper, because an enemy:

> "An anonymous work like this, making grave accusations against a body, and against individuals, is not entitled to much consideration at any rate. For our part, we cannot bring ourselves to believe that its details are true. What, on her own showing, is the woman who writes the book, and conceals her name? On the very first page, she states, that at the time her narrative commences, her reputation was so far injured that she had determined to quit the place in which her early life had been passed,—her words are, "I determined to abandon my home,"—and leave friends and enemies in the dark as to her future whereabouts. She takes 'the stage'—which means not a place for theatricals, but a public mode of traveling—and meets in it a middle-aged Mormon named Ward, who fascinates her with a glance! He introduces her to some Mormon friends, including an Amazon named Mrs. Bradish, marries her, and takes her away with him, in Joe Smith's retinue. Not a date does she give—a few facts known to the public to support the story of a cock-and-a-bull which she spins out over 450 pages. Yet she effects mystery, now and then. She describes Smith's death, and, in a very gingerly manner, speaks of his successor as "B——m Y——g"—just as if she should say "W——m C——n B—y—t of the Evening Post"—every one knowing, of course, that Brigham Young and William Cullen Bryant are the parties indicated.
>
> "There is some ability (but not much) in the book. It has very little vraisemblance, nor can we believe, from a painful perusal of its platitudes, that it was written by a woman filling the position said to have been occupied by this pseudo-autobiographer. Nor can we bring ourselves to credit the assertion that the writer is a female. The book is such as might readily have been manufactured out of newspaper anti-Mormon reports and a very small degree of imagination. It strikes us as being the worst fiction of the season."

But now for the book. We have to apologize to our readers for noticing such ridiculous trash, under the semblance of facts, and should not, had the book not have been commented on so much by editors professing respectability, one of which—he who chewed it—boasts of twelve years' experience as an editor. Others, claiming the title of reviewers, have gravely given us their professional opinion about it, and of course "the world and the rest of mankind" are bound to believe it.

The first question that would necessarily arise is, Who is this Mrs. Ward? This question we asked of seven or eight Elders who happened to be here from Utah on their way to Europe, but not one of them knew. The only Ward that we ever knew was a Barney Ward, a mountaineer, who was baptized in the mountains; his wife is a squaw. We would not wish to accuse her of the egregious ignorance manifested in this book; otherwise no white woman could have been cognizant to such scenes as she has represented. A woman that could, according to her own showing, be the boon companion of murderers for years, who could witness infanticides and murders of the most revolting kind, and yet associate with the perpetrators of these fiendish acts, might have, according to her own showing, some cause for leaving her parents and home, and would have found a fitter place in a penitentiary than to be the wife of a Mormon Elder or any other man. She is not only a disgrece to her sex, but to humanity. As the Times states, we don't believe that it was a woman that wrote it, and of course the name with the book is fictitious. And furthermore, we don't believe it was an American; it must have been some foreigner just imported; for any school boy, twelve years old, ought to be whipped if he did not exhibit a better knowledge of both the geography of the country, or of the Indian locations, than is displayed in this precious book, not to say anything about the Mormons. The history of the Mormons is well known, as well as their various locations, emigrations, and routes; and a writer of even a novel has exhibited, as we shall show, too culpable a neglect in not informing themselves better as to historical details, and the customs and usages of the people about whom they write; a reference to any common map would have saved them from much shame which must necessarily follow their exposure. Job said, "Oh, that mine enemy would write a book!" The more such exhibitions as these are made, the better and the more extensively they are circulated; they only manifest their own folly. It is not our intention to make an exhibit of the whole; we shall show a few items that all may know, and leave the other for them to draw their own conclusions. The writer has not only withheld name, but also avoided, as much as possible, all data; sufficient, however, is given in the narrative to convict the imposture. We extract:

Page 10. Joseph Smith is described as having "dark, piercing eyes." This is false. Joseph Smith had light colored eyes; we think grey.

Page 24. "Joseph Smith was one of the earliest practisers of animal magnetism." This is false. Joseph Smith never practised nor even sanctioned mesmerism. We would here make a remark. The above are merely contradictions of statements; we pledge ourselves, however, to prove all that we shall say, if disputed by the champions of Mrs. Ward, the aforesaid editors, and at the same time challenge them for a proof of her statements. We were well acquainted with Joseph Smith, and know well his history.

A Mrs. Bradish, the principal heroine of the writer, kills two persons in the State of New York. Who were they? where were they killed? who knows anything about it? Murders of this kind don't take place without being known. Come, gentlemen, tell us who they are, and where it occurred.

Chap. VII. page 81. She leads her heroes to "the Mormon settlement in Illinois." Her history takes them from New York and lands them in Illinois. Now, unfortunately for our truthful writer and her abettors, Joseph Smith did not go from New York to Illincis, but from the State of Missouri. We were there at the time. History records it—the proof is on hand.

Page 82. "The Mormon village contained about fifty houses," and we are not told of an increase afterwards; but unfortunately this little village—Nauvoo—where Joseph Smith actually did live, was laid out five miles long on the river, and two or two and a half back from it. It was a chartered city, and had its Municipal Court, Mayor, City Council, &c., and contained upwards of ten thousand inhabitants; and the Mormons owned most of the land adjoining for twenty-five miles one way and twelve another.

Again, page 84. "To secure their further independence they determined to have a bank," and Mrs. Bradish was a "directress of the bank." The Mormons never had a bank in Illinois. Will the editors of the Mirror or the Dispatch produce some of the bills, or give the public information about them?

Page 100. "In ecclesiastical affairs, the real business of the Church was conducted by himself, (Joseph Smith,) with three assistants." This is ecclesiastical nonsense, and only another proof that the writer never either saw or knew anything about Joseph Smith, or his counselors. He had two; never three.

Page 137. Joseph Smith is shot on horseback. Joseph Smith was not shot on horse back; but in Carthage jail. We were present at the time. Where is the brains of our editors who endorse these truthful statements?

Page 146. "Two days previous to the expiration of the month ..... our company was ready for departure." We are informed that this month was a month after the death of Smith, that they departed. The Mormons left Nauvoo two years, and not one month, after the death of Joseph Smith.

Page 165. "Our guide was a young man named Harmer, who bore the title of captain, in consideration of his having once held that office in the Mormon Legion, those first pioneers of that faith, who, in the service of the United States, had explored the region of the Great Salt Lake, in their overland route to California." The Mormon Battalion, the first Mormons that ever went to California, were enlisted by Capt. Allen, of the United States army, on the Missouri river, near the present site of Bluffs City, and three hundred miles distant from Nauvoo, on the way to the Valley. Our author has a singular way of making guides. She sends a party to California, has them return, and takes one for a guide; whereas the Battalion, from which her guide was taken, was formed after they started, without a guide.

Page 166. "We numbered one hundred and twenty wagons, each wagon being drawn by four mules." We numbered perhaps ten times that many; but not one mule team that we remember. Our heroine was there, so she says, and of course must know.

Ibid. "When we arrived at St. Louis we found several other wagons waiting to join us, and after a short delay proceeded to cross the Mississippi, and strike off through the uninhabited ocean of prairie." Our new-caught green foreigner ought to have studied "Mitchell's Map for Schools" before writing this; it might have saved some shame. She leads her travelers through "rolling prairies, sparsely inhabited by white people," and from Nauvoo lands them at St. Louis, on their way to the Salt Lake. We feel ashamed of noticing such scribbling as we pass along, and we must say that we feel ashamed of the editorial cloth, to find reviewers and editors of "twelve years' standing" endorsing such stuff. Why, the Mormons were nearer St. Louis when at Nauvoo than they ever were afterwards, and when they reached the Missouri they were five hundred miles distant from St. Louis by land, and eight hundred by water. But worse and worse; from St. Louis they cross the Mississippi, on the way to the mountains. "Hold my sides, Hal." We won't contradict this, but refer our reviewers and editors to inquire of some of the ragged school boys. They then take the Santa Fe route. They passed more than two hundred miles distant from the Santa Fe route. What next?

She complains of her memory being bad, and she "forgot some of the smaller streams." Now this is really superfluous delicacy. After jumping over hundreds of miles, eating St. Louis, and swallowing the Mississippi to wash it down, then to gag at two or three small streams.

But they do after all break loose, and find themselves fairly in the wilderness; they come to a river and build a raft. "It consisted of middling sized logs, bound together by very strong ropes and chains, on which thick planks were laid."—Page 176. Query. Where did they get the thick planks in the wilderness? We are here reminded of the story of the Irishman, who, on being asked if he knew how the moles threw the dirt out of their holes, said, "Faikes and its miself that can tell you." "Well, how is it done?" "Why, you spalpeen, they commence at the bottom furst." "But how do they get there?" "Sure, and that's a question of your own asking."

Page 186. They get into among the Sioux, and into a country well-timbered, according to the narrative; they afterwards meet some Cheyennes. Now, the Sioux and Cheyenne country's are nearly destitute of timber; so much so that travelers use what is termed "Buffalo chips" for their cooking. After passthe Cheyennes and Sioux, page 207, we come to a Pawnee village. Now, unfortunately for our heroine, the Pawnee village is between two and three hundred miles from the Cheyennes; the Cheyennes ground is above that of the Pawnees. The head-quarters are from two to three hundred miles apart. The Pawnee village is near Fort Kearny; the Cheyennes near Laramie. Kearny is about two hundred and fifty miles from the Missouri river, and Laramie about five hundred miles. Yet, on the way to the Valley, we are first introduced to the Sioux, five hundred miles off; then brought two hundred and fifty miles back to the Pawnees, still pursuing our journey, and then jump over three or four hundred miles from the Pawnees to the Snakes. But we are becoming tired of this very truthful history.

Although ignorant of routes, rivers, geography, Indian localities, and of everything else written about, our heroine says she is a French scholar, and had no difficulty in talking with some Santa Fe traders. (Curious place for them.) We have a specimen of her lingual powers in the following. An Indian is made greatly to admire the bravery of an heroine, Mrs. Bradish, and in eulogizing her on her accomplishments, said, "in French, 'Squaw good shoot; Squaw good shoot.'" Was it the word squaw, or the words good shoot, that were French? Or who interpreted the Indian words into squaw good shoot? We are really getting important imformation.

Page 192. "Several of our oxen joined the buffaloes." They started with one hundred and twenty mule teams; where did the oxen come from?

They finally reach the South Pass, and cross it, leaving an Indian altar; they "passed on, and soon reached a river said to be a tributary of the Colorado; it was broad and shallow, with a full, swift current over a rocky bed."—Page 267. More fudge. The Pacific Springs, the first western water, on the Atlantic slope of the South Pass, is shallow; and the ground over which it runs for several miles litterally a quagmire. The last time we passed that way west, one of the companies horses floundered in the mud, and although we had traveled near fifty miles that day, we tied our horses up, without grass all night, rather than expose them to the danger of being mired.

We are next introduced to other rivers which our author knows as much about as the foregoing. The Little and Big Sandy are the streams next in succession, and are dull, heavy streams, having sandy beds, without rocks, and not, as the author says, "mountain torrents flowing impetuously over a rocky bed."

We have made numerous other notes; but feel sick of the trash, if any one wants to see more we refer them to the book. Suffice it to say that blunders are quite as thick, as we progress, as what we have already noticed. The various John Gilpin, Will O' the Wisp, mesmeric, and other cock and bull stories, we leave for somebody else. We think we have quoted enough to show that it is a complete sell, and that our brave editors are as desperately hoaxed as ever they were in their twelve years editorial experience. We must confess that of all the catchpennies we have ever seen, it is the most ridiculous; and our only surprise is that men should be such fools as not only to swallow the hook but chew the grub. The Dispatch has been calling lustily for help, and lo! it has come. Now gentlemen stuff yourselves we think you have enough of Mormonism for once, and this very "truthful narrative" upon sober second thought may be as "bitter in the belly as it was sweet in the mouth."

We affirm that the writer of that book, never went with Joseph Smith to Nauvoo, or Illinois; never went with Brigham Young to the valley; knows nothing about Mormonism; is ignorant of the route to Salt Lake; of western geography; of Indians localities; and is equally ignorant of the manners, customs and habits of the Mormons; and we defy the author or his abetters or the aforesaid editors, or any editors to prove to the contrary. Notwithstanding the hypocritical cant of the closing words "If any are thereby warned, my labor will not have been in vain." Yet this is the book, that Mr. Fuller says should be chewed and digested. The book that the New York Dispatch says is one of the most thrilling and self-evident truthful narratives ever written, and which numbers of the corps editorial has endorsed. O, tempores, O, mores.

In noticing the avidity with which this has been seized upon by many of the editorial fraternity, we are reminded of a man who found a parcel neatly wrapped up, in the street. He soliloquises, at first sight, "It looks like tea." Grasping it with nervous excitement, and feeling it heavy, "I hope it's tobacco. No! It may be sugar?" Examining a little more closely, and trying it by smell, he throws it down—"Dirt, by jabers."

In conclusion we suggest an idea for their protigé to be benefitted by.

The Mirror speaks of an invitation from Dr. Carnochan, to visit Randall's Island. After describing many afflicting scenes he states.

> "But the saddest scenes of all are presented in the Wards, both male and female, where the patients are paying the penalties of their own licentious follies. Although the rooms are thoroughly ventilated and the floors as clean as the deck of a man-of-war, yet the disgusting character of the disease, and its horrible manifestations, mingled with a sort of moral nausea, excited by the beastliness that induced it, makes one turn away from these "daughters of pleasure," as they are mockingly called, with a sickness at the heart that requires prompt resort to a philanthropic philosophy to overcome.
>
> "And yet it is surprising that so few of these poor creatures die at the hospitals. Dr. Carnochan informs us that during the past year out of some twenty-nine thousand cases, the proportion of deaths was only about six per cent."

Having made so poorly out about Mormonism, we would respectfully suggest another field for him to try his hand upon; one that he would be better acquainted with. Out of the twenty-nine thousand yearly, cases of licentiousness and prostitution, perhaps he might find some strange stories about broken-hearted and betrayed husbands, destitute and abused wives, miserable parents, dark scenes of betrayal, misery and guilt, decoyed innocence, bartered virtue, heartless procuresses, stool pigeons, houses of ill-fame; splendid misery, detroyed constitutions, broken hearts, with all their miserable train. This could be a story in truth, founded on facts at your own door; statistics obtained on Randall's Island, from police reports, at our fashionable hotels and splendid saloons; besides, he could be under the surveillance of his masters, the editors, who could render him much useful information on these subjects; and a knowledge of the Mormons, geography, or Western, or Indian life would not be needed.

The Ravelling Knot.

IT would take a life time to read the full details of the war, were it to progress for some years to come at its present rate. If the war is to be determined by such a relative ascendency on the part of one power as to preclude all further effort on the part of another, it would appear but a duplicate of that pyrotechnical marvel—an endless beginning. In the course of this very war, in which three powers have been arrayed against her, and a fourth been neutrally hostile, Russia has acquired a territory as large as the whole of Germany, and harbors only requiring fortresses to become new Sebastopols, threatening the Sea of Japan, and by command of the river Amur allowing her to pierce to the interior of China. Russia is wiser in her generation than any European power we know. The present is not eternally before her; she pries into the future, and with prophetic seership descries

"Forms of things and what they are."

The pigmies of selfish policy cannot realize the huge dimensions of this colossus. Whilst they are considering the confirmation of party organizations, or the adaptation of constitutions to growing intelligence and increasing popular demands, Russia, troubling herself neither with one nor the other, considers but the elements that go to form national character and the means of adapting herself thereto, by prepossessing a people in favor of her. Meanwhile the French are occupying Constantinople with enormous works that will take years to complete, and which have already impressed the Turks with the conviction that the "City of Constantinople" can never again be called their own. Strange occupiers these French! None can doubt but that the French are far less adapted to the Turks than the Russians. In fact, they can there govern only by extermination. The Turks will be gradually hunted out, and unless Russia has unlooked-for success, and provided this alliance holds out, Napolion III., in the name of the allies, will add to the glory of his crown by adding thereto the jewel of Asia, successively aspired after by all who have sought to sway the destinies of the world. The reduction of the army by Austria is a mere reduction of reserves. If Austria, as declared by one of the British ministers, has left the allies free to pursue their own policy, she possesses a similar immunity, and we may look to her alliance with Russia, and of both with Russia, on the plea of thus endeavoring to bring the war to an end, or as a rejoinder to the Western threat of wakening up the nationalities. All is now more complicated than ever. The skies are overcast, and heavier storms threaten to beat upon the nations. France is seeking the fulfilment of a gorgeous Eastern dream, and will walk through blood and ruin to achieve it. The inviolability of life is no longer considered as in question.

Missionaries to England.

WE this morning July 17, took the parting hand with Brs. Hector, C. Haight, John L. Smith, John Kay, John Scott, William S. Muir, Daniel Davis, Robert F. Neslen, and David Curtis, all missionaries to Europe, and late from Salt Lake Valley. They took passage in the magnificent packet ship Isaac Wright, of the black ball line, leaving the pier per steam tow at 10 A. M., direct to sea. We wish them a speedy and safe passage to the land of their destination, and trust that the blessings of the Almighty will be upon them, as they shall go forth on their several missions to proclaim the everlasting gospel in foreign lands.

Population of New York State.

THE census recently taken affords some strange results. Notwithstanding an immense and continuous immigation the productive powers of a population amounting in 1850 to 853,418, resident in ten of its chief cities, including New York, Brooklyn, Williamburg, Albany, Troy, Utica, Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo, Oswego, the increase is but 376,082. The question arises where can immigrants have gone to? To be sure these swell in part the accumulated numbers, and the habits and vices of large cities are fatal as well to longevity as to productiveness. The inquiry is only to be assumed by regarding the facilities of travel westward as affording so many active and continuous outlets, the speed and cheapness with which, by through tickets the individual is wheeled away, affording every encouragement not to linger on the sea coast where the means of living are easily dissipated, where work is scanty, and no helping hand is held out. Again, a large portion of the German emmigrants come with means in their possession, and these are too wise to linger long where there stock cannot be profitably invested in the pursuit of agriculture. These frequently go as far West as railways and steamboats will take them. Importers, or those connected with foreign houses, are necessarily permanent stayers. They realize large profits in a brief period, and then return to enjoy the society of la belle France, giving place to others. Thus goes the world, population ever flowing westward, as by some necessity of nature's laws, obeying the revolution of the earth, and the spiritual law of the creature.

☞ Persons wishing the destination of the paper changed will please to forward the name of the Town, County and State, to which it has been addressed, as well as of that to which they wish it sent, distinctly written.

WHAT NEXT!—A circular setting forth a new platform is actually in circulation in Buffalo, ostensibly against the American party, and is being required by foreigners and natives. These platforms, based on the imperfectly understood idea of Know Nothingism, which is not a principle but a prejudice, have got these co-operating in them into countless entanglements, promoted disunion, and sown the elements of permanent discord.

Fourth of July Oration.

IN our account of the pic-nic that we attended, we briefly alluded to the celebration of the Fourth of July, and the speeches made on the occasion. The following, delivered by Capt. ROBBINS, will not be uninteresting:

SPEECH OF ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.,
Extemporaneously Delivered at Tom's River, on the Fourth of July, 1855.

REPORTED BY THEODORE MC'KEAN.

Brethren and Friends:

I arise to make a few remarks relative to the day we celebrate. After what has already been said, I need not occupy much time with preliminaries. I need not go back to the days of Columbus and call to your minds the difficulties through which he waded, in order to carry out the design of God, in discovering this Western World! That for eight long years he petitioned at the feet of the potentates of Europe, until he obtained at the hands of Isabella the three small vessels with which he discovered this country, and to which we owe the benefits which we here enjoy. Suffice it to say, the spirit and power of Israel's God was upon him, like fire shut up in his bones until he had accomplished the design of Heaven, in bringing to light this country that was destined to be that portion of the earth on which the Kingdom of God was to be set up in the last days. This land has been an asylum for the oppressed of every nation from that time to the present; but the blessings and privileges which we now enjoy have not been obtained without much difficulty and privation on the part of our ancestors.

Great Britain, our mother country, to whom we owed allegiance, and toward whom we had only that filial affection due from a child to a parent, from time to time exacted from us extravagant taxation, in various forms, without granting that representation which should go hand in hand. Yet notwithstanding this, and other unjust requirements, the colonies had no disposition to throw off their allegience to their mother country; the ties of consanguinity and affection forbade it. But it is said there is a point in the affairs of men and nations beyond which "forbearance is no longer a virtue." That crisis came. And seventy-nine years ago this day, although comparatively weak, and to all human appearance unable to sustain such a position, they declared themselves free and independent. Then shoulder to shoulder stood the heroes of Seventy-six through seven years' hardship and fatigue, unsurpassed in the annals of history. It was the justice of their cause against overwhelming odds, that nerved them in their hour of darkness and trial, and which led them to rely for help on an arm stronger than their own. Hear the significant accents of one of their number, as he addressed his brethren at the memorable convention of delegates at Philadelphia, as follows: "Besides, sir, we shall not fight our battles alone; there is a just God that presides over the destinies of nations, who will raise up armies to fight our battles for us." Was this prediction fulfilled? It was to the very letter. Hence we hold the names of Lafayette, Degrasse, and others of our French allies, in everlasting remembrance. Under Washington, the blessed and inspired of God, through dint of perseverance and sacrifices, victory at length crowned the efforts of our fathers, and we this day enjoy, here at Tom's River, the blessings of freedom and liberty they so gloriously won.

I have briefly noticed the position of the colonies at an early day toward their venerable matron, from whose shores they came to this then wilderness country, (in the form of a Puritan band,) that they might more effectually worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences. Is there any resemblance, politically, between the position of the early Puritans toward their trans-atlantic sovereign and the Latter Day Saints toward their trans-rocky mountain parent? We think there is quite a resemblance. Did they leave thier parent country on account of their religion? So did we. Did they leave their fathers, mothers, and nearest friends, to seek an asylum in a wild Indian country, far remote from their former homes? So did we. Were they loyal to the government to which they owed their allegiance? So are we. We respect and reverence the institutions of our fathers. We love the soil on which they used to tread.

The Constitution of the United States we reverence as a rich legacy, which we feel honored in maintaining against any nation or faction that would do it violence. Demagogues and politicians may prate and prattle about the disloyalty of the Mormons, but I know from associations and experience in the midst of that people, that there is not a more loyal people to the General Government within the pale of its jurisdiction. I challenge any person to point to a State or Territory less refractory, and more forbearing, than the Territory of Utah. What Territory, I ask, belonging to our Union, trained (as they are in this Government,) to Republican principles, that would not murmur at the appointment by Executive Authority, of an entire stranger, to govern some sixty thousand permanent settlers, whose united wish was known by the department to be for another, who was American born, and whose capability and loyalty had never been impeached? But notwithstanding the Republican predilections of the citizens of Utah, so incompatible with such an appointment, they were ready with all forbearance, to submit to it.

They talk of trouble with the Mormons—the necessity of sending armies to force them to submission. I ask, when have they refused to submit to the requirements of the General Government? When and where has Utah exhibited her disloyalty? "Echo answers, where!" She never has. We, as a people, love to celebrate the Fourth day of July, as the great Anniversary with which is associated in our minds the first grand step taken by our patriotic sires, in the cause of Freedom. In us burns the same patriotic fire, and we shall never prove recreant to its admonitions.

Scattered over this broad country, are the graves of our ancestors! In every town and hamlet, are our friends and family connections! and when retired to our quiet homes beyond the Rocky Mountains, it is with no little interest and anxiety, that we have looked, and shall look, to the East from whence we came. And more especially, while the portentious clouds of party factions that hang so visibly over our nation lower, threatening her overthrow and destruction. It is not in Utah, nor yet in the various nations of the earth, no matter how powerful, that we see causes for the unpleasant forebodings we entertain. But it is at the very fountain of life. It is in those factions that would sacrifice the Federal Compact at the shrine of local interests.

But I forbear! This is an occasion unappropriate to the dark side of the picture.

Let us acknowledge the hand of God in all things, and seek to do His will, and all is well. The rustling of the tri-colored emblem of our National greatness that floats above our heads on this occasion, admonishes me of the words of the poet, with which I conclude:

"The Star-spangled banner, long may it wave, O'er the land of the free, and the home of the brave."

The Widening Vortex.

THE foreign news on hand is relatively of little moment, yet it seems to close a persevering determination on the part of the Allied powers to extend the sphere of their work, and Austria, who has so long played her game of balance of power, now leaning to this side, now to that, bids fair to be engulphed with all her nationalities in the vortex. War and destruction on the most dreadful scale is the order of the day. It is not reason but revenge animating men's hearts. Austria, now finds foes both within and without, and in any agitation ceases to be compact. The address of the French Emperor will fan the hate with which her policy is regarded.

"One year already had passed since the commencement of the war, and already France and England have saved Turkey, gained two battles, forced Russia to evacuate the Principalities, and to exhaust her forces in the defence of the Crimea. We had, moreover, in our favor the adhesion of Austria and the moral approbation of the rest of Europe.

"We restricted ourselves to ask, in the interests of Germany, the free navigation of the Danube, and a breakwater against the Russian flood which continually obstructed the mouths of that great river.

"We demanded, in the interests of Austria and of Germany, a better constitution for the Danubian Principalities, that they might serve as a barrier against these repeated invasions of the North.

"We demanded, in the interest of humanity and justice, the same guarantees for the Christians of every confession under the exclusive protection of the Sultan.

"In the interests of the Porte, as well as in those of Europe, we demanded that Russis should limit to a reasonable degree sufficient to shield her against any attack, the number of her ships in the Black Sea, a number which she could only maintain with an aggressive object.

"Well, all these propositions, which I may call magnanimous from their disinterestedness, and which were approved in principle by Austria, by Prussia, and by Russia herself, have evaporated in the Conferences."

This is the most tremendous political blow that Austria has yet received. Her policy requires that she should keep on good terms with either party. Unable any longer to hide her predilection, or even justify to the exacting West the fruit of her neutrality, she is suspected, with or without reason of intending to aid Russia as soon as the Western fleet should have withdrawn in a mighty division of territory, in which there should have been mutual gain. It is not possible, at this crisis, that the "nationalities" of Europe can slumber long. The controversy of England, the disposition of France labor alike with the Russian and Austrian Governments, and with the petty princely houses of Germany and Italy for their suppression. But the quickening of common intellengence is fast counterbalancing mere physicial pressure; mind is asserting its prerogatives, and everywhere the trumpet tones for the resurection of the spirit may be heard.

Power and Volition.

IN a synopsis made by the North American Review on the "Peraistance of Physical Laws," we have given us, in a few words, the summary of a recent work on the source and modes of action of natural motive power. In that volume, the theory of natural motive power is unfolded, assuming the entire passivity of matter. This evidently recognized principle of natural philosophy is extended to the domain of chemistry, and the material masses are supposed to be utterly inert as the masses built up from them. The idea of inherent forces of attractions and repulsions, of gravity, cohesion and chemical affinity—is discarded as wholly incompatible with the nature of matter. The component atoms of a body, it is affirmed, can no more possess the power of self-motion than the body itself. Every change—whether from rest to motion or from motion to rest—must be impressed upon them by forces from without. The only power of capability here ascribed to the atoms is that of receiving, modifying and transmitting these forces. Yet these forces receive at the hands of this theorist but the name of mechanical forces, a name deduced from effects of their exhibition and not from their character. A power like that resulting from combined magnetism and electricity and under complete control of the will, surely merits a higher cognomen then a mechanical force. Cohesion, chemical affinity and all other powers are more or less connected with it, and all qualities of matter relate to, and are variously acted on by it. We cannot find philosophy in such dictation; to progress it should be illustrative, and tell us something more than that oxidation and de-oxidation are everywhere in progress. We find here the falsest of all propositions laid down; one which may be regarded as a very natural inference from so materialistic a theory. It is this, that "man cannot originate force." We will illucidate by terms. Force is a form of power; volition not only determines its direction and extent but its character. And every form of power yet discovered in natural forces is by man wielded and controlled. The discoveries of science enforce this view. Nature is coming more and more subject to him, and new streams are daily opened out for the spontaneity of his action. The impulses he controls are yielding fruit. He so conducts a stream of electricity as to make by means of one grain of gold such a desposit of the precious metal over a vast surface of silver as a whole life-time and the labor of the most skillful hand would not suffice to produce. Power is more than this philosophy would make it—the mere diffusion of strength. It is intelligence working in varying characters and amid varying circumstances. It is the phenomena of life no longer working in darkness and in secresy.

Exploration in Africa.

Africa was not made for the mere roaming ground of savage tribes; in history, Carthage shines out with a lustre that centuries have not eclipsed, and the remembrance of its wealth and power, which were not only derived from commerce but from trade with the interior, indicates its possession of all the elements of national wealth. The settlements of Europeans, the embassies and explorations of the Governments of Great Britain and of France, the researches of those most persevering of all men—German travelers have been productive of results entirely incommensurate either with the first expectations entertained, or with the extent of country traversed, yet we know how the wealth of California was unheeded by the tens of thousands who had lived upon its soil, and how a country may be traversed and re-traversed without affording any information to the casual traveler. Africa which is the country of the fullfilment of so many prophecies, cannot long be the unknown land that it now is, and profiting by previous information we are glad to find that another expedition is to be fitted out by and under the directions of M. Brun Rollet, a Sardinian, at present in Cairo, but a resident in Khartum, where, for the last twenty years he has been engaged in mercantile pursuits. It is mercantile knowledge that is wanted at present. M. Bollet, who has been particularly successful in mercantile transactions, and in the obtaining of ivory and gum, proves to be intimately acquainted with the countries of the White River, its inhabitants and national resources. The region he is about to explore is much richer than that with which he has had dealings. The expedition goes by water, and will consists of six boats, manned by almost sixty men, all well armed. The scientific outfit and preparations have been aided by the savans of Paris and Turin, the French and Sardinian Governments have given special recommendations to the Pacha of Egypt.

When negro catchers and anti-slavery men, have done their work; and when many other interested, fanciful, political, and fanatical operations shall have had their commencement and decadence; the Lord will in due time, among other revolutions, feel after the sable sons of Ham, and "Ethiopia will stretch out her hands to God."

There is more to be done in the world than many people have dreamt of in their philosophy, and it will be accomplished without the officious interference of interested partizan and pseudo philanthropist.

A Jeu D'Esprit.

The following is flying to and fro: The poor bachelors have in fact a hard time of it. They have been ridiculed by the sex, and sometimes taxed by legislators, and now staticians deal them "the unkindest cut of all," by proving that they die earlier than married men.

The celebrated Dr. Casper, of Berlin, estimates the mortality among bachelors, between the ages of thirty and forty-five, at twenty-seven per cent: while the mortality among married men, between the same ages, is only eighteen per cent. As life advances the difference becomes even more striking. Where forty-one bachelors attain the age of 40, there are seventy-eight married men, a difference of nearly ten to one in favor of the latter. At the age of 60 there are forty-eight married men to twenty-two bachelors; at 70, eleven bachelors to twenty-seven married men; and 80, nine married men to three bachelors. No bachelor, it is said, ever lived to be a hundred.

The reason for the comparitively short life of the bachelor is obvious. Of two men, exactly similar in other respects, except that one is married and the other is not, the bachelor will have the more irregular habits. Gentlemen, when single, are twice as apt, as Dick Swiveller has it, "to pass the rosy," as when they are married; and especially to do it into what Burns calls "the wee sma' huors ayont the twal."

Ten bachelors sing "we wont go home till morning," where one married man vocalizes in the same manner.

Movement of Troops.—Expedition to the Plains.—The Van Buren (Ark.) Intelligencer of the 29th ult., says:—An expedition for the Plains left Fort Gibson, Cherokee Nation, on the 22d instant, consisting of three companies of the 7th Infantry, numbering about 230 officers and men, under the command of Lieut. Colonel P. Morrison, 7th Infantry. The other officers are Assistant Surgeon J. T. Ghiselin, United States Army; Brevet Major R. C. Gatlin; Captains Henry Little and C. A. Humber; Lieutenants T. J. C. Amory and E. O'Connor, 7th Infantry. The expedition will proceed by the most direct route to Turkey Creek, there striking the Santa Fe route; thence to Bent's Fort and Big Timbers, extending protection to emigrants on said route, cultivating friendly relations with such tribes of Indians as may be met with on those vast prairies, and inquiring into the facilities for establishing a military post somewhere on the Upper Arkansas. The expedition will probably return to Fort Gibson about the middle or last of November next.

Jonah wrote to his father, after the whale first swallowed him, stating that he had found a good opening for a young man going into the oil business—but afterwards wrote for money to bring him home, stating that he had been "sucked in."

Correspondence.

Salt Lake Correspondence from Judge Phelps.

We have received the following from our old friend Judge Phelps. It is a literary curiosity, and just like the man. Who does not know or has not heard of Judge Phelps? If they have not they are behind the age, and need enlightening on this subject. Come, Judge, let the quill wheel run and send us more of it:

Great Salt Lake City, Utah, May 1, 1855.

Dear Sir—"The Mormon," printed in the great city of New York by your good self, came to me (via California) per last mail, and being the first paper from the States in upwards of a "good while," was quite a lion among the beasts of the field and fowls of the air. One thing is certain, the Saints all pray for your success, and the devil hates holiness.

Our trials, while "Uncle Sam's" waiters camped in the city, were like fire in the leaves of a forest in a dry time, blazing for a conflagration, every time the wind blew; but God, the friend of faith, union, goodness, love, joy, perseverance, mercy, and fortitude, helped us to turn all things to his glory, and here we are, in the midst of this crooked and wicked generation, a light unto the Gentiles, and a "flaming flame" to the house of Israel.

I say, go it boys, "wooden legs are cheap;" fight away in Europe; smother wickedness in America; and brush away the cobwebs of Christianity, that the lightning bugs may have a chance to sparkle before a storm, in the gloom of midnight, while death and glory whet up their long shears to clip off the heads of all fools, and allow the children of the kingdom one holiday of a thousand years to do right; without once naming Shakspease's cowards, knaves, and simpletons, in every society, city, and hamlet, bobbing for whales, with a knotty hemlock tree for a fish pole, with a woman's and horse's hair-line, and a kingly or congressive hook, well-fitted with a buffoon, starched at college, at one end, for a lawyer, supported by an over-grown grub at the other end for a judge, whereby the whole world gets a glorious nibble, and hell a direct tax, to keep up the repairs and expenses of living in the fashion of the devil.

We had a mild winter, and good preaching; and I think I can say Zion prospers.

I shall try to help you all I can. In the days of Nauvoo, when the old quill wheel was running, I used to spin and weave something in the likeness of poetry; so I have just reeled off two or three verses for The Mormon.

May the God of the Garden of Eden bless you, and "the oil of the annointed Adam" strengthen you to overcome the world and "Cain-hannock," is my prayer. Amen.

FOR THE MORMON.

Jerusalem.

BY W. W. PHELPS.

What glorious tidings are sounding abroad,
By angels and prophets, the servants of God;
The nations are warring, the world lives in fear;
"The fig-trees are leaving, the summer is near:"
Jerusalem, O Jerusalem, then
Be wise, and, like chickens, rush under the hen!

For Jacob now is like the dew from the Lord,
To mellow the tyrants that fight for reward;
And Judah, that halted at Shiloh at first,
From Gentile oppression in triumph will burst:
Jerusalem, O Jerusalem, then
Awake ye, and build up thy temple again!

The last days have come, with their terrors and tears;
The Gentiles must fall by their swords and their spears;
For Zion now rises, the "kingdom to come,"
And Palestine beckons the Jews to come home:
Jerusalem, O Jerusalem, then
Arise in thy glory and splendor again!

From Our Utah Correspondent.

G. S. L. City, April 27, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Sir: The first number of your paper reached this city yesterday by the California mail. We like the appearance of the Mormon very well; it certainly is worthy of its illustrious name.

This is a general time of health; the weather is very fine, though rain is much needed, and if the drouth should continue the farmers will have to began almost immediately to irrigate.

The young crops of grasshoppers are so numerous in many neighborhoods as to threaten the entire destruction of vegetation.

The gates are hung on the Temple Wall, so as to entirely close up the square during the night.

The new Council House is finished, and is a very nice building.

The Iron Works' in Iron County, are in successful operation, 1700 lbs. of good iron is made from the furnace every twenty-four hours.

A company of brethren are making preparation for building a fort at Paragona, in Iron County, which was abandoned some two years ago in consequence of the Indian war.

A company is formed, and will start in a few days to make a settlement in the Vegas of the south route to California.

President Young and Kimball are on a visit to the northern settlements. Elder Lorenzo Snow is making a farm, and building a mill at Box Elder. About twenty-five families, in addition to the former settlement are also going with him.

The Presidency expect to start on a visit to the southern settlements during the month of May. The Indians are quiet and peaceable; they have elected Ar-ra-peen for their Chief in place of Walker.

Elder Hyde is making arrangements to leave in about ten days for Carson Valley, to be accompanied by A. J. Stewart, surveyor, and ten or twelve others whose names I have not learned.

Lieut. Mowry, with a detachment of the United States troops, takes the south route to California; it is reported he will be stationed at Fort Yuma, on the Colorado. Another detachment is going to California by the north route.

There are about twenty heavy wagons and teams employed in hauling rock from the quarry for the Temple, and the canal from Big Cottonwood Canon, which is intended to bring the granite for the walls of the Temple, is already in progress; Br. Fox has taken a level for it.

A beautiful row of trees has been planted around the Temple square.

The Presidents new house is moving up rapidly.

President Brigham Young, has deeded his property to the trustee in trust, amounting to $199,625,00, and many others are following in the track.

The Desert Theological Institution held its first public meeting on Wednesday evening last, the 25th inst., President Young delivering the opening address, which occupied about an hour. Yours, faithfully,

G. A. Smith.

What of Maine?

We have not heard lately from Elder Trip in Maine. What is the reason? Are they not thawed out there yet? The following from a boy, a convert of his, will show that he is alive. Come, Bro. Trip, let us hear from you. We are not so good guessers here as you are in Maine, and might make a wrong calculation if we merely concluded what you were doing, without hearing from you:

Mexico, State of Maine, July 12, 1855.

Bro. Taylor—Dear Sir: I take my pen to drop you a few lines to let you know what I think about Mormonism. Being a small boy, only fifteen years of age, I do not expect that my discourse will be very interesting to you; but perhaps I can do a little something towards building up the kingdom of God. My father and mother belong to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as well as myself; we were baptized and confirmed into the Church this spring, by Bro. E. B. Trip, and there were a number baptized at the same time; so the kingdom of God will roll forth, for the little stone that Daniel saw "cut out of the mountains without hands, will roll forth until it fills the whole earth; and it will stand forever." I know that we are persecuted by the world, but that only makes my faith the stronger in God, for he has said that he would have "a tried people," and that they should "come up through much tribulation;" so the world may scoff all they please; but what more do we want when we know that we are right, and that Christ is at our head? Now, I would say unto all the brothers and sisters, be faithful in Christ.

May the Lord bless you, Bro. Taylor, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

A. M. Eastman.

Know Nothings Improving on the Declaration of Independence.—It was given out in Cincinnati, that an expurgated edition of the Declaration of Independence would be read on the 4th, by Prof. Lippitt, at the Eighth street park. The following passage is to be omitted: "He (George III.) has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose instructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners—refusing to pass other laws to encourage their migration hither, and raising the conditions of new appropriations of lands."

Wreck of the Kinney Expedition.—Capt. Colt, of the brig C. C. Billings, arrived at this port of on Wednesday morning from Inagua, informs us that the schooner Emma, Captain Norris, which sailed hence on the 6th ult., for Kingston, Jamaica, with Col. Kinney and 25 men of the Nicaragua Expedition on board, was totally lost on the Caycos Reef, June 19. All hands were fortunately saved, and have arrived at Turks Island. The disaster occurred during thick weather. Emma was lumber loaded.—[N. Y. Herald.

There are three cotton mills in Holykoke, Mass., employing 48 males and 1035 females; and during the year ending with the 1st June, 1855, 4,267,985 pounds of cotton were consumed, 12,517,119 yards or 7.12 miles of cloth manufactured, the gross value of which was $1,161,178. Besides this, 108,000 pounds of yarn, valued at $20,000 were made. During the same time $325,000 worth of machinery was manufactured, giving employment to 300 hands. The quantity of stock used in the paper mill was 175 tons; quantity of paper manufactured 125 tons; and value of the manufactured article $50,000. Value of cotton and woolen cards manufactured $30,240, of piano and card wire $14,000, of power loom harnesses $8,000, and of power loom reeds $1,200.

The South American Republics are taking advantage of the temporary objections raised to immigration into the United States, and have now their agents in Germany, Switzerland, and elsewhere, to turn the tide of emigration into their Territories. The Government of the Argentine Republic has recently authorized a capitalist, Mr. Buschenthal, to introduce a colony which the King of the two Sicilies offers to send at his own charge.

A Telegraph Line at Auction.—The Grand Trunk Telegraph Line in Canada was put up at auction at Toronto on the 6th, and was bid in by the trustees of the company, to be sold without reserve on the 2d, of August. More rapid communication than the facilities afforded by travel, would not appear to be a desideratum with our Canadian neighbors.

Profits of Wool Growers.—The Wool cultivators of this State have derived $5,000,000 from the wool clip of this valuable raw material, already sold.

Joshua Evans, of Augusta county, Virginia, has recently come in for a fortune of $600,000, by the death of a wealthy relative in Wales.

The Weather.

We have now had excessive heat for three days in succession, and while we write there is no sign of a cessation of the warmth. Were it not for a light breeze that was occasionally wafted up from the bay, it would have been almost impossible to have withstood the heat. The following are the figures: At 7 A. M. 80 degrees, at 12 M. 93 degrees, at 3 P. M. 96 degrees, and at 6 P. M. 95 degrees. This may be very fine weather for corn and potatoes, but it is very disagreeable weather for those who live on those edibles. We have heard of several cases of sunstroke, and no doubt the mortality tables of next week will show a larger increase. Let us learn to live temperately and keep cool.

COUP DE SOLIEL.

Coroner O'Donnell held an inquest upon the body of an unknown man, who was prostrated by the heat of the sun, in Eighth avenue, near Twenty-second street, and soon afterwards expired.

Coroner Hilton held an inquest upon the body of a German named Xaxier Stuchtle. A verdict of coup de soliel was rendered by the jury. Deceased was 19 years of age.

SUN STROKES IN BROOKLYN.

A laborer named Hannis Herbert, a German, was prostrated by the heat of the sun in Bedford avenue, and died from the effects before effectual aid could be rendered.

Jacob Ritchmuller, residing on the corner of Doughty and Furman streets, was overcome by the heat and expired in consequence.

Mary Van Burke, a young woman, residing in Bedford avenue, became prostrate by overexertion, and expired.

Mary Grisenger, a child, whose parents reside at the corner of Van Brunt and Union streets, died from disorders arising from the extreme heat.

Francis Donnelly, residing in Columbia street, died from a complication of disorders, accelerated by the heat of the weather.

Coroners Redding and Hanford held inquests on the above cases, yesterday, and verdicts were rendered in accordance.

A conductor on the Flushing avenue line of cars was prostrated while engaged in changing horses at the foot of Graham avenue; and a boy in the Navy Yard was overcome by the heat. Remedies were applied in season in both cases, and they recovered.

A number of other instances of a similar nature occurred throughout the city yesterday, but the above are all that came to the notice of the Coroners as having proved fatal.

THE HEAT IN JERSEY CITY.

In the Jersey City ferry house, yesterday afternoon, the thermometer stood at 101 degrees in the shade. Those at work in exposed positions suspended labor or acted with caution, and no cases of sunstroke were reported.

WEATHER IN BALTIMORE.

Baltimore, July 19, 1855.

The weather is intensely warm. The thermometer at 11 o'clock ranged at 91 degrees, in the shade.

Baltimore, July 19—9:30 p. m.

The thermometer has ranged to-day from 94 to 96 degrees in the shade. A thunder storm sprung up this afternoon, which considerably cooled the atmosphere, but the weather is still very warm.

WEATHER IN BOSTON.

Boston, July 19—1 P. M.

This is by far the hottest day of the season. The thermometer now stands at 95 degrees in the shade.

WEATHER AT HARTFORD.

Hartford, July 19, 1855.

The weather here to-day has been extremely oppressive, the thermometer ranging at 97 degrees in the shade, or within one degree as hot as the 30th of June, which is recollected by every one in this locality to have been the hot day.

WEATHER AT CHICAGO.

Chicago, July 19, 1855.

To-day has been the hottest of the season. At four o'clock this afternoon the thermometer stood at 100 degrees in the shade.

CONTINUATION OF THE HEATED TERM.

To the Editor of the Herald:

The heat of this heated term increases in its intensity, and this day, at 3 p. m., reached 93 degrees. The lowest temperature, since 7 a. m. of the 17th was at 4 o'clock this morning—74 degrees.

On Tuesday the temperature ranged from 90 to 95 degrees seven consecutive hours; Wednesday, 90 to 96 degrees eight hours, with a perturbation on the second hour; and to-day, from 90 to 98 degrees.

We have our Australian records before us, recording temperature of 115, 118, 120, and 120 degrees maximum on four several days, and on one of those days it was at 118 degrees for nearly a whole day. We have the Arctic record also before us of 50 to 59 1-4 degrees below zero, for a cold term of four and a quarter consecutive days. The two compared together show a difference of one hundred and seventy-nine and a quarter degrees temperature between these two places. That goes beyond anything we ever have in this latitude.

E. Meriam.

Brooklyn Heights, July 19, 1855

[N. Y. Herald, July 20.

A gentleman from Saratoga county, New York, who has been traveling for three or four weeks past in the southern counties of Wisconsin and in Illinois, as far south as Peoria, states that the wheat, corn and oat fields everywhere on his route give promise of an extraordinary yield. He says the justly celebrated wheat fields of Western New York can scarcely claim the palm from those that he has seen this season in Illinois.

"There is a woman at the bottom of every mischief," said Joe.

"Yes," replied Charley, "when I used to get into any mischief my mother was at the bottom of me."

European News.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

Three Days Later from Europe.—Arrival of the Canada at Halifax.—Affairs in the Crimea Unchanged.—Markets dull and Drooping.—Consols 91 1-4.

Halifax, July 18.

The Royal Mail steamship Canada, Captain Stone, arrived here this morning. She brings her regular dates from England—the 7th inst., three days later than before received.

The news by this arrival is very meagre, and wholly unimportant, consisting mainly of details of the recent repulse of the Allies at the Malakoff and Redan.

Further evidence of mismanagement on the part of the allied General are revealed.

Affairs before Sebastopol were without the least change, and there was no indication of any new movement.

Their is no political news of moment from any part of Europe.

ACCOUNTS FROM THE CRIMEA, ETC.

Lord Raglan was buried on the 3d of July, with all the pomp which circumstances permitted.

There are rumors that Pelissier is about to be superseded.

Since the repulse of the 18th June, the Allies have been strengthening their advances against the Malakoff, and Pelissier's latest dispatch, dated July 4, says his works are progressing satisfactorily.

Gen. Simpson telegraphed on the 4th that there was nothing new since his last account.

Mr. Stow, the Commissioner sent by the London Times to the Crimea, to administer the balance of the hospital fund, sick from over exertion, and "routine" was excluded from the very hospitals he was aiding. He was carried in a scorching sun to the church at Balaklava, where he died a victim to official inhumanity.

The Turco-British contingent force, now numbering 6,000 men, is in camp near Domusdere.

Careful estimates show that this war has already cost half a million of lives, and yet no decisive battles have taken place.

A dispatch from Berlin, dated July 4th, states that the town of Nystadt, at the entrance of the Gulf of Bothnia, has been bombarded and destroyed.

Russian accounts, under date of June 19, say the allied flotilla of 180 guns fired for eight hours against the batteries at the mouth of the Narva, without effect, and then withdrew to Seskar Island.

French letters of June 25th, say, that the army was full of confidence. The approaches were pushing forward to the Malakoff Tower, and a French battery of 30 guns was nearly completed, in front of the Careening Bay, to keep off the Russian ships, their fire having caused much loss on the 18th.

Vienna papers say that Gortschakoff had sent for 24,000 more men, as he had reinforced Liprandi's army with another division.

The Turks and Sardinians, under Omer Pasha and Gen. Marmora, have made excursions in the lateral valleys of the Tchernaya, without meeting resistance.

Numerous works of art captured from the Kertch Museum and from Gen. Wrangel's private collection, are on the way to Paris.

June 20.—The allies made a descent on Kotka Island, destroyed the telegraph, and burnt the government stores.

June 21.—Some of the allied steamers took soundings in Nystadt Roads, while others fired some hours on Port Revel without doing any material injury.

June 22 and 23.—Occasional shots were exchanged between gunboats employed in shore and the Revel batteries.

July 5.—The bulk of the allied squadron was off Cronstadt.

The Journal of St. Petersburg, publishes a correspondence respecting the recent affair at Hango, stating that the flag of truce was not visible, and accusing the English of making improper uses of flags of truce generally.

ENGLAND.

The business before Parliament was not of an important nature.

Messrs. Roebuck and Duncombe had asked for a committee of inquiry into the alleged brutal conduct of the police at the Hyde Park demonstration against the Sunday trading bill, but were refused.

On Friday night Mr. Milner Gibson asked the government for an explanation as to Lord John Russell's recent conduct at Vienna, in stating, among other things, that Great Britain never contemplated a restoration of Poland and Hungary. Messrs. Cobden, Roebuck and D'Israeli all attacked Lord John, after which the matter was dropped.

General Peel was to move the previous question Mr. Roebuck's vote of censure.

Lord Elgin, it is said, will be appointed Postmaster General.

The magnificent iron paddle wheel steamship Persia, of 3,600 tons, and 1,600 horse power, was launched in the Clyde on the 3d of July. She will be ready to take her place in the Cunard line in October next.

M. Peterson, the Russian Secretary of Legation at Lisbon, was recently discovered on board an English steamer returning from Southampton to Lisbon, he having been on a secret mission to France and England. The American Minister to Portugal, they say, recognized him.

FRANCE.

On the 5th of July, the Legislature voted the loan of 750,000,000 francs. In addition to this loan, an increase of taxation is proposed, namely, one-third increase of duty on all spirits; ten per cent on railway passengers and a new war "decimo" of indirect taxation, it is expected, will produce seventy millions of francs per annum.

The Emperor's speech has been variously commented on, but on the whole is regarded favorably. The hit at Austria is considered as well merited. It is reported that the Austrian Minister has asked for an explanation.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious; and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city; because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commençant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute sa simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immergé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence. ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

WE shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL

FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.
The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review o it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.
The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

Home, Sweet, Sweet Home,

AS SUNG BY WILLIAM C. DUNBAR.

The faithless may dream of a far distant land,
Where the gold sparkles bright, on a fair sunny strand;
But the spirit of wealth, like a phantom will roam
Till they're lured far away, from the Saints' lovely home!
Home, home, sweet, sweet home—
There's no place on earth, like our own mountain home!

Ah, their friends they will think of in hopeless despair,
When the shade of their day-dream 's dissolved in air,
And the spirit is fled, that in days past said "come,"
Will leave them in sorrow, far, far from their home.
Home, home, sweet, sweet home—
Ah, who would give gold-bartered wealth for their home!

We've wealth in our cornfields, the gold mines can't give;
And health in the water, and air breeze to live;
Then who would exchange for a king's palaced dome,
With his minions and power, our own peaceful home?
Home, home, sweet, sweet home—
With friends, wives, and children, our own mountain home!

Then let us still live, where the fountain of love
Flows with life giving Truth, from the mansions above;
In "Ephraim's fat valleys," where fear will ne'er gloam!
The day-star of hope, of her glory to come!!
Home, home, sweet, sweet home—
Ah, who would exchange for this world, their home?

Religion of the Indians.

An aged friend has requested the publication of the following statement of a talk that was held between a Missionary, and a council of Indians some years ago. We believe the article in whole, or in part, was once published in the "Trumpet"; but it is worthy of repeated perusal. The Missionary's name was Cram; and he afterwards lived in Rockingham county, N. H.

A few years ago, a number of principal chiefs and others of the Six Nations of Indians, assembled at Buffalo Creek, in the State of New York, at the peculiar request of a gentleman missionary. The missionary being furnished with an interpretor, and accompanied by the United States' agent for Indian affairs, met the Indians in council, when the following talk took place:

Missionary. My friends, I am thankful for the opportunity afforded us of uniting together at this time. I had a desire to see you, and inquire into your state and welfare; for this purpose I have traveled a great distance, being sent by your old friends, the Boston Missionary Society.

You will recollect they formerly sent missionaries among you to instruct you in religion, and labor for your good, although they have not heard from you for a long time, yet they have not forgotton their brothers of the Six Nations, and are still anxious to do you good.

Brothers, I have not come to get your lands or your money, but to enlighten your minds, and instruct you how to worship the Great Spirit, agreeable to his will—to preach to you the gospel of his Son Jesus Christ.

There is but one religion, and but one way to serve God; and if you do not embrace the right way, you cannot be happy hereafter. You have never worshipped the Great Spirit in a manner acceptable to him, but have all your lives been in great error and darkness. To endeavor to remove these errors, and open your eyes so that ye might see clearly, is my business with you.

Brothers, I wish to talk to you as one friend talks with another; and if you have any objections to receive the religion which we preach, I wish you to make them, and I will endeavor to satisfy your minds, and remove these objections.

Brothers, I want you to speak your minds freely, for I wish to reason with you on the subject, and, if possible, remove all doubts from your minds. The subject is an important one, and it is of consequence that you give it an early attention, while the offer is made to you. Your friends, the Boston Missionary Society, will continue to send good and faithful ministers to instruct and strengthen you in religion, if, on your part, you are willing to receive them.

Brothers, since I have been in this part of the country, I have visited some of your small villages, and talked with your people. They appear willing to receive instruction; but as they look up to you as their elder brothers in council, they want first to know your opinion on the subject.

You have now heard what I have to say at present; I therefore hope you will take it into consideration, and give me an answer before I leave the place.

So far the Missionary. Now let us hear the reply made by the Indians. There is much truth and moral beauty in it. They wished to wait and see what effect the Missionary's religion might have on those white men who had embraced it, before they should embrace it. They believed in the love that the Great Spirit bore them. All the blessings they enjoyed they considered as coming from his hand; and it is a beautiful thought of the chief who spake—"all this God had done for his red children, because he LOVED THEM." The following is the Indians' reply:

After about two hours consultation among themselves, the chief arose and spoke as follows:

Friend and Brother, It was the will of the Great Spirit that we should meet together this day. He orders all things, and has given us a fine day for our council. He has taken his garment from before the sun, and caused it to shine with brightness upon us; our eyes are opened and we see clearly, and our ears are unstopped, that we have been able to hear distinctly the words you have spoken. For all these favors we thank the Great Spirit, and Him only.

Brother, this council fire was kindled by you. It was at your request that we came together at this time. We have listened with attention to what you have said. You request us to speak our minds freely. This gives us great joy, for we now consider that we stand upright before you, and can speak what we think. All have heard your voice, and all speak to you now as one man. Our minds are agreed.

Brother, you say you want an answer to your talk before you leave the place. It is right that you should have one as you are a great distance from home and we do not wish to detain you; but we will first look back a little, and tell you what our fathers have told us, and what we have heard from the white people.

Brother, listen to what we say. There was a time when our forefathers owned this island. Their seats extended from the rising to the setting sun. The Great Spirit had made it for the use of the Indians. He had created the buffalo, the deer, and other animals for food; had made the bear and the beaver, whose skins served us for clothing. He has scattered them over the country, and taught us how to take them. He had caused the earth to produce corn for bread. All this he had done for his red children, becaue he loved them. If we had some disputes about our hunting ground, they were generally settled without the shedding of much blood. But an evil day came upon us,—your forefathers crossed the great water, and landed on this island. Their numbers were small, but they found friends, and not enemies. They told us they had fled from their own country for fear of wicked men, and had come here to enjoy their religion. They asked for a small seat; we took pity on them, granting their request, and they sat down among us. We gave them corn and meat; they gave us poison in return (alluding to ardent spirit)! The white people had now found our country; tidings were carried back, and more came among us; yet we did not fear them, for we took them to be friends. They called us brother—we believed them, and gave them a larger seat. At length their numbers had greatly increased. They wanted more land,—they wanted our country! Our eyes were opened, and our minds became uneasy. War took place—Indians were hired to fight against Indians! and many of our people were destroyed. They also introduced strong liquor among us. It was strong and powerful, and has slain thousands.

Brother, Our seats were once large, and yours were small. You have now become a great people, and we have scarcely a place left to spread our blankets. You have got our country, but are not satisfied; you want to force your religion upon us.

Brother, Continue to listen. You say that you are sent to instruct us how to worship the Great Spirit agreeably to his mind; and that if we do not take hold of the religion which you preach, we shall be unhappy hereafter. You say that you are right and we are wrong; but how do we know this to be true? We understand your religion is written in a book. If it was intended for us as well as you, why has not the Great Spirit given it to us; and not only to us, but why did he not give to our forefathers the knowledge of that book, and the means of understanding it rightly? We only know what you tell us about it. How shall we know when to believe, being so often deceived by the white people?

Brother, You say there is but one way to worship and serve the Great Spirit,—if there is but one religion, why do you white people differ so much about it? Why not all agree, as you can all read the book?

Brother, we do not understand these things. We are told that your religion was given to your forefathers, and has been handed down from father to son. We also have a religion which the Great Spirit gave to our fathers, and has been handed down to us, and we worship accordingly. It teaches us to be thankful for all the favors we receive, and to love each other and be united. We never quarrel about religion.

Brother, The Great Spirit made us all; but he made a difference between his white and red children. He has given us different complexions and different customs. To you he has discovered the arts,—to us they have been kept out of sight. We know these things to be true; and, since he has made us so different in other respects, why may we not conclude he has given us a different religion, according to our understandings? The Great Spirit does right. He knows what is best for his children: we are satisfied.

Brother, We are told that you had been preaching to the white people in this place. These people are our neighbors,—we will therefore wait a little, and see what effect your preaching has upon them. If we find that it does them good, makes them honest, makes them love each other, and less disposed to cheat Indians, we will then consider of what you have said.

Brother, You have now heard our answer to your talk, and this is all we have to say at present. As we are going to part, we will rise and take you by the hand, and hope the Great Spirit will protect you on your journey, and return you safe to your friends.

As the Indians began to approach Mr. ——, he rose hastily from his seat, and replied that he could not take them by the hand; there was no fellowship between the religion of God and the works of the devil. This being interpreted to the Indians, they smiled and retired in a peaceable manner.—[Trumpet and Universalist Magazine, Boston, Philadelphia and Hartford, Saturday, December 14, 1844.

Mr. Dodge's Arrival in Madrid.

It is well known that very many ill-informed people in Europe believe the Americans are all Indians, or to use a term more appropriate at the present time, all "natives." The following jeu d' esprit, translated from The Paris Charivari, announcing the arrival of the American Minister at Madrid, is founded on that popular error:

Mr. Dodge is the representative of the United States at Madrid. He is the successor of the fierce Mr. Soule, who has left such lugubrious reminiscences in Spain. The inhabitants of Madrid, who know all they have to dread from the invasive American demagougy, were impatient to know what sort of a man this Mr. Dodge was, and whether his habits of business promised anything good. Some people expected so. Innocent illusion, which was soon dissipated before reality.

It was Friday last, the 15th of June, that Mr. Dodge made his entry into the capital of Spain. The electric telegraph has hastened to announce this event to those Paris journals whose speciality it is to watch over American affairs.

Mr. Dodge was mounted, bare-backed, on a wild prairie horse of the species called mustangs. He carried a rifle slung behind him, and wore in his belt a six shooter revolver on one side and a scalping knife on the other. In his right hand he brandished a tomahawk, uttering at the same time fierce cries The secretaries of the embassy, the attaches, and all the personnel followed in a similar equipment. One of the domestics, a gigantic Kentuckian, carried a banner on which was inscribed "Cuban annexation." The whole uttered such shouts on their way, that it might have been said the city was taken by assault by a band of Indians. In an instant the curious who had been attracted by the cortege dispersed, seized with fright. Everywhere the shops and doors were closed. It was even proposed to beat the rappel to summon the National Guard. The Embassador and his suite laughed in their sleeves at the terror which they caused, and to add to it they commenced to yell the war cry of the Apaches.

Arrived at the hotel, Mr. Dodge dismounted for a time. An hour afterward he remounted his horse to proceed to the palace to present his credentials to the Queen. He was at that time completely dressed as an Indian. Under pretext of having his beard dressed, he had his face bedaubed with paint used by the Apache Indians when they are preparing to set out on the war track. His hair, raised on the top of his head, and bound by a ribbon, formed a sort of plume, pretty much like a furniture duster. From his nostrils hung two large gold rings. A half dozen old wigs were attached to his girdle. Mr. Dodge, with that pleasantry peculiar to Americans, exhibited these as scalps taken from the enemy in battle. But no one was duped by this burlesque, no less odious than ridiculous. It is understood that under this circumstance, he had not deemed it proper to part with his tomahawk and revolver. His chief secretary accompanied him, in like accoutrements.

When they presented themselves at the palace gate the Swiss refused to let them pass. Mr. Dodge, without any other explanation, drew his revolver from his belt and fired at the Swiss. Luckily the poor fellow was not hit, but he let fall his halbert and fled as quick as his legs could carry him. Mr. Dodge hurried to pick up the halbert, and, furnished with this trophy, he penetrated into the apartments, flourishing it with a victorious air. A master of ceremonies met him.

Sir, he cried out, indignantly, what do you want, and where are you going in a dress so unpresentable?

I am the Embassador of the United States, and I come to present my credentials.

But this revolver—this tomahawk—this halbert?

I have acquired it in conquest from your Swiss, who objected to my passing.

And this half-dozen of perruques which I see at your girdle?

Perruque yourself! These are scalps, spoils of the enemies whom I have overthrown in the war path. Don't annoy me, I advise you, and felicitate yourself on being bald.

But think, Mr. Embassador, that etiquette, custom, do not permit—

Everything is permitted to an Envoy of the United States. Come, open the door without any more delay.

The Master of Ceremonies was afraid to embroil his Government with that of Washington. He introduced the Embassador, sighing and raising his arms to Heaven.

Unhappy Spain! he murmured.

Here the telegraphic dispatch ends. But the Journal des Debats will soon publish an authentic and very detailed version of the scene which took place between the Queen and Mr. Dodge. It is only too probable that the latter will show himself more reverential than O'Donnell and Espartero in their famous visit to obtain the royal sanction to the law of amortization. All that is at present known is, that Mr. Dodge refused, on leaving, to return the halbert to the Swiss, and that he brought it to his hotel. I intend, he said, to annex this object, thereby making a coarse allusion to the annexation of Cuba.—[N. Y. Daily News.

Ignorance.

Never be ashamed of confessing your ignorance; for the wisest man upon earth is ignorant of many things, inasmuch as that which he knows is a mere nothing in comparison with what he does not know. There cannot be a greater folly in the world, than to suppose to know every thing. Even editors don't know every thing.

How shall we Retaliate?

The course pursued by the legislature of Massachusetts, in the most unanimous adoption of a law whose ostensible purpose is the nulification of the fugitive slave bill, undoubtedly calls upon the legislature of the Southern States to resort to every constitutional means to retaliate upon the offenders the insult and injury. We say constitutional means, because, while the Union lasts and while our representatives swear to support that sacred instrument, no man can presume to touch or invade it in a single clause. The members of the legislature of Massachusetts may violate their oaths every day; the Northern members of Congress, in the capitol of the nation, may forswear themselves, but we, in the South, should not permit the most signal outrages upon our rights to excite us to unconstitutional action. What course, then, shall we pursue? If we declare that our courts shall not be open to citizens of Massachusetts to recover their debts against our citizens, they could resort to the Federal Courts and accomplish their purpose just as well. If we declare that no citizen of Massachusetts shall carry on trade within our limits, we violate the Constitution, which provides that the citizens of one State shall, on removing to another State, be entitled to all the privileges of a citizen of the latter. We know, however, of no clause in the Constitution which prevents the law-making power of Kentucky from forbidding the sale, within the State, of all articles of Massachusetts' growth, production, or manufacture. Such a law, wisely drawn and rightly enforced, would be an effectual blow struck at Massachusetts' labor and capital. It would touch the pocket nerve of the State, and would vibrate throughout every "pretty artery" of the body politic. It would wake up very member of it from his dream of unconstitutional power, exercised against the rights of the South, to a consciousness that his own position is not impregnable, and that he himself is accessible to hostile attacks. If our property is to be taken away, we must retort the injury or be despised. Human nature is constituted that if you permit a man to strike you on one cheek without resistance, he will be tempted to strike you on the other side also. And though some strict constructionists of scriptural language believe that non-resistance is the duty of private individuals, none but Quakers contend that the precept was intended to apply to States. A nation that will live in peace must always be prepared for war, or it becomes the victim of every warlike and unscrupulous government. Six months will transpire before the meeting of our legislature, and in the meantime it is our candid opinion that our citizens should hold this matter in consideration, so that their representatives, when they assemble, may be prepared to take such steps to countervail the action of Massachusetts, as may be at once effectual and constitutional. We know that such a course may be calculated to aggravate the ill-feeling which now exists between the Northern and Southern section of the Union, but we are forced to pursue it. We would be at peace with all the world, more especially with those who acknowledge a common government and Constitution with ourselves, and a common ancestry, but we cannot submit in silence to insult and injury.—[Henderson (Ky.) Courier.

Barnum's Show of Handsome Women.

Barnum's success with his baby show has prompted him to an enterprise of a holder nature, that of getting up a show of handsome women. He proposes two hundred premiums, amounting to five thousand dollars, to be presented to the handsomest women in America—or rather to the handsomest who may be willing to enter into this competition.

The ladies, however are not to come to be gazed at, but their friends are to send to Mr. Barnum at the Museum, their likenesses, taken either by the photographic process, before the 15th of October. These likenesses are to be laid before the public at the Museum, where the visitors may have an opportunity of inspecting them, and expressing by depositing a ballot in a box provided for the purpose, an opinion of their various pretensions of beauty. The prizes are to awarded according to the number of suffrages which each beauty receives from the public. The highest prizes a thousand dollars—there is one of three hundred, one of two hundred, one of one hundred and fifty, six of one hundred, ninety of twenty dollars each, and one hundred of ten dollars each. The likenesses of those who receive the ten highest prizes, are to be engraved and published in the French "World's Book of Beauty;" the successful competitors being first invited to sit at Barnum's expense, to the best artist in their neighboorhood for their portraits.

This time the showman makes an appeal to a feeling stronger perhaps than even maternal vanity. Silly women will send their likenesses; the sillier they are the more certain they will be to engage in the competition. After all, however, the handsomest faces in reality do not always appear best in the daguerreotype or photograph, and this will be the consolation of those who fail to secure a premium.

To prevent the intrusion of that class who would be most ready to engage in a rivalry of this kind, "no likenesses will be received from disreputable persons," and it is added, that if any such be discovered they will be rejected. This will hardly, however, prevent them from joining in the competition, under some disguse or other.—[N. Y. Post.

The Dog of the Regiment.

A letter from the camp before Sebastopol tells the following anecdote: Pierre is an ugly dog from the Pyrenees, who has made the campaigns of Italy and Africa with the Regiment. In this latter country he was useful in discovering Arab ambuscades, and rendered such important services that he has since been looked upon as an old comrade. Pierre will go through the manual exercise for you, if you wish, in his equiletted uniform, of which he is proud as a peacock.

Lately, the Colonel gave orders that all dogs should be expelled from the quarters. What a misfortune! To lose Pierre would be to lose everything! With him would depart all the remembrances and joys of the regiment. But there was no help for it. They dressed Pierre in his finest uniform; made out and signed a leave of absence with an account of his services, which was enclosed in a tin box, and suspended at his neck; gave him an embrace, and a last pull at his remnant of tail, and he departed. But he is evidently grieved; his step becomes slower and slower; till suddenly an idea seems to strike him, and he turns, and goes directly to the quarters of the major, and stations himself on his hind legs at the door. A brigadier opens the box, and carries the contents to the major, who cannot refrain from laughing. He calls him in, gives him a bowl of soup, makes out an order authorizing him to remain, signs it, and encloses it in the box.

Pierre departs joyfully, and retires barking and dancing to his quarters, till he loses off both his equalettes and his box. Some one opens it, and finds the leave to remain. He is reinstated in all his rights and privileges, goes to the kitchen after his soup, as usual, and is put in the orders of the day, in which every body is forbidden to do him any injury.—[Translated from the French for the Musical World.

A Dog's Affection for his Master.

Mr. O. M. Hopkins, late of Scottsburgh, who died in January last, had a small and sprightly Terrier, named "Nig," of which he was very fond. After the death of his master, Nig grew melancholy. Nothing the family could do seemed to amuse him. He could not be enticed from the side of his mistress, but would follow her about everywhere, grave and sedate, as though actually thinking of his dead master. One day a closet containing his master's clothing was opened. No sooner did Nig discover the garments, than he frisked about almost frantic with delight, evidently expecting his master to appear. When the poor animal discovered his error, he testified his disappointment by piteous and mournful howlings. In May last, poor Nig grew more melancholy than ever. All attempts to induce him to leave the house were unavailing, until one day his mistress went to visit the grave of her husband. Then he followed, and on arriving at the mound commenced digging and moaning, testifying his grief in the most affecting manner. From that time he could not be enticed to leave the grave, but stayed day and night, till he starved to death. He was found there, stretched on the earth, cold stiff.—[Danville Herald.

Harry Sampson Obtains Revenge.

Mr. Snarl resides in Forsyth street. Mr. Snarl is an old bachelor, with an Irish girl for a housekeeper. Snarl lives in good style, but has some queer notions. He dislikes dogs above all things, organ-grinders and beggars not excepted.

Snarl's next door neighbor is Harry Sampson. Now, Harry is the very opposite of old Snarl. He sets a high value on a dog, and thinks there is only one article equal to a Newfoundlander, and that's a—woman.

Harry has several specimens of the canine race. The other evening they got up a howling match because the moon became eclipsed. They commenced about ten o'clock and kept it up till the sun got an inch and a half above Williamsburg.

This so annoyed Mr. Snarl that he had Harry jerked up "for a nuisance" and fined $10. Harry paid the money, but resolved on revenge. The next morning the following advertisement appeared in the Herald:

WANTED—At Forsyth street, two Bull Dogs and four Spaniel Pups. For full blooded dogs the highest price will be paid. Call between 4 and 6 P. M. JAMES SNARL.

We need not say that the advertisement was inserted by Harry. His reason for making the calls between four and six P. M., was because Mr. Snarl was always out at that hour, taking an airing round the Battery.

At the hour specified, dogs and pups might have been seen going up the Bowery to Grand, to Forsyth, and up Forsyth to the mansion occupied by Mr. Snarl.

The first person that pulled the door-bell was a butcher boy from Center Market, with a pair of bull dogs that would "tear h—l out of a tiger." Maggie answered the bell, when the following colloquy took place:

"Does Mr. Snarl live here?"

"He does. Why do you ax?"

"I've got some dogs for him."

"Dogs for Mr. Snarl—mother of Moses, did you ever; you've mistook the door."

"Devil a bit of it—read that."

Here Syksie took out the morning Herald and showed Maggie the advertisement. Maggie was thunderstruck, still there was "no denying the advertisement." She accordingly told Syksie to go into the back yard "wid the dogs," and await the return of Mr. Snarl. Syksie did so. In about two minutes Maggie was again summoned by the door bell.

"What do you want?"

"Mr. Snarl—I've got them dogs he wanted?"

"You have—well then, go into the back yard wid the other blackguard."

No. 2 followed No. 1; No. 2 was soon followed by No. 3, who was succeeded by lots 5, 6, and 7. By half-past five the back yard contained twenty-one bull dogs and fourteen spaniels. The former got up a misunderstanding, and by the time Mr. Snarl arrived, seven spaniels had been placed hors du combat, while a brindle bull dog from Fulton Market was going through his third fight with "a yaller terrier" from Mott street.

Mr. Snarl reached home a few miuutes before six. Maggie opened the door, and burst out as follows:

"For the love of the Lord go back and stop 'em. They are steing one another up, and if not choked off will devour the cestern. Since the days of Crummell I've not seen such hullabaloo entirely."

Snarl "went back"—Snarl looked into the yard and would have sworn, but he could not find oaths of sufficient power to do justice to his feelings. When we left, Mr. Snarl was emptying the "back yard" with an ax-helve. The next morning Harry Simpson complained of him for having a "dog fight" on his premises. Snarl was fined twenty-five dollars—fifteen dollars for having "such a fight," and ten dollars for being "an old hypocrite." It is unnecessary for us to say that Harry slept better that night than any night since the war with Mexico.—[N. Y. Dutchman.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1855.

What is Mormonism?

THE above is a question that has been asked by many, and frequently pondered over by men of reflection, as it has presented itself to the world. Mormonism is emphatically of American origin, so far as the name is concerned, and so far as men, outsiders, have any knowledge of its origin. It is, however, a revelation from the heavens to man, introducing a new dispensation to the human family, viz.: the everlasting Gospel, which has been corrupted, transformed and changed. It is the religion that Adam, Enoch, Noah, Melchizedec, Abraham, Lot, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Jesus and the Apostles had on the continent of Asia; and that Lehi, Nephi, Alma, Moroni, Mormon and a host of others had on this continent. It has its origin from God, and is merely, at present, introductory to the fruition of the hopes of those men of God, who, though believing, died "in faith," without the possession, "having seen the promise afar off. It is the living, breathing, energetic, intelligent power; instead of the dead, withered, lifeless, inanimate body or form. It introduces man to a knowledge of himself, shows him his relationship to his fellow man, to the world, to saints, angels, spirits, and to God. It unfolds his origin and destiny, and unlocks the dark, impenetrable future; it teaches how to live and die, and live again; it is the science of life; the knowledge of the present and future; the Heavens unveiled, and eternity laid open.

Standing upon its broad platform, encircled by the mantle of truth, the man of God, by faith, peers into the future, withdraws the curtains of eternity, unveils the mystery of the heavens, and through the dark vista of unnumbered years, behold the purposes of the great Elohiem, as they roll forth in all their majesty and power and glory. Thus standing upon a narrow neck of space, and beholding the past, present, and the future, he sees himself an eternal being claiming an affinity with God, a son of God, a spark of Deity struck from the fire of his eternal blaze. He looks upon the world and man, in all their various phases, knows his true interests, and with intelligence imparted by his Father Celestial, he comprehends their origin and destiny. Such was the religion of the aforesaid worthies; it was not an idle fable; they knew in whom they believed, and knowing, filled with the spirit of prophecy and revelation, "they spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost." Such also is Mormonism. It is no vain faith, no trite hackneyed shavelings or priestly canting creed, that would hang man's destiny over a yawning gulf with a fragile, brittle thread, and threaten him with fiery liquid flames, pitchforks, gridirons, serpents, and eternal fires, to frighten him to fear a God whom they describe, the which he cannot love. His is intelligence, lit up by God and followed out, will be expansive as the world and spread through space; his law is the law of love, his rule the rule of right to all. He loves his neighbor and he does him good; he loves his God and therefore worships him; he sees the power of truth, which like the light, or God, spreads through all space, illuminates all worlds, and penetrates where men or angels, God or spheres are known; he clings to it; truth is his helmet, buckler, shield, his rock, defence; his all in time and in eternity. Men call him a fool because he cannot be directed by their folly, nor follow in their erratic, truculent wake; but while they are grasping at shadows, he lays hold of the substance; while they are content with a ricketty, sprawling religion, fashionable for time, but having nothing to do with eternity, and smother the highest, noblest principles of man, he dare acknowledge God, and acknowledging him, he dare obey him, and confess that faith which God has given to him. He grasps at all truths, human and divine; he has no darling dogma to sustain or favorite creed to uphold; he has nothing to lose but error; nothing to gain but truth. He digs, labors, and searches for it as for hidden treasure; and while others are content with chaff and husks of straw, he seizes on the kernel, substance, the gist of all that's good, and clings to all that will ennoble and exalt the human family.

Such was the religion of the ancients, both upon the continents of Asia and America; and the everlasting Gospel made known in the last days is nothing more nor less than the ancient religion restored. It is the commencement of the "restitution of all things, spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world was." It is the bringing back of ancient, eternal principles, whereby men can know God as they know him formerly; not a vague fantasy, not a simple form, but a living reality. Its doctrines, its ordinances, its principles, its priesthood, are from above, revealed from the heavens, and yet strictly in conformity with all former revelations. It has not been, it cannot be successfully controverted, either in its divine authenticity, its doctrines, ordinances or priesthood. It is adapted to the wants of the human family, to the world morally, socially, religiously and politically. It is not a sickly, sentimental, effeminate plaything; not a ghostly, spiritual, sing-song, ethereal dream, but a living, sober, matter-of-fact reality, adapted to body and spirit, to earth and heaven, to time and eternity. It enters into all the ramifications of life. It does not adopt itself to the philosophy, politics, creeds and opinions of men, but fashions them in its divine mould. It cannot be twisted into the multitudinous latitudinarian principles of a degenerate world; but lifts all that are in the world, who will be subject to its precepts, to its own ennobling, exalted and dignified standard. It searches all truth, and grasps at all intelligence; it is the revealed living and abiding will of God to man; a connection between the heavens and the earth; it is nature, philosophy, heavens and earth, time and eternity united; it is the philosophy of the heavens and the earth, of God, and angels, and saints. Did ancient men of God revel in the truth—so do we; did they have revelations and visions—so do we; did they prophesy—so do we; did God communicate with them—he does with us; did they prophesy of "the restitution of all things,"—we say it is at our doors; did they prophecy of a Kingdom of God—we are helping to build it up; had they the ministering of angels—so have we; had they prophets, apostles, pastors, teachers and evangelists—so have we; had they the spirit of prophecy and revelation—so have we; did they look for the second advent and glorious appearance of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ—so do we; did they expect that God would purge the wicked out of the earth and introduce a reign of righteousness—so do we; did they look for Jesus and the saints to reign on the earth—so do we. We are in fact looking for all things that they did; seeking to know all things that they knew, and to bring to pass all things that they prophesied of, the great consummation of which is the restitution of all things; and men may lie and rant and rave, they cannot frustrate the designs of God, nor stop the progress of eternal truth one moment—its course is onward, ONWARD, ONWARD, and it defies opposition.

Mormonism is bold, fearless and independent; based upon the principles of eternal truth, it is as far above the whining, canting, expedient religion of the present day, as the religion of Elijah was superior to that of the courtly, time-serving, fashionable religion of the prophets of Baal, in the days of that bold, daring and venerated man. Singly and alone, he dared the combined phalanx of the bowing, cringing, popular religionists of his day. So Mormonism stands forth a living enigma to the nations of the earth, defying the combined energy and talent of the present canting, whining, wishy-washy, hypocritical and religious age; and when the cringing hirelings shall have bawled and ranted as did Baal's priests, unnoticed and unknown by their deaf, absent, "Unknown God," Mormonism will stand forth in bold relief, and although rude and uncouth in its camel's hair habiliments and leathern girdle, sans divinity, sans orthodoxy, and sans piety—as religionists have it—conscious of the omnipotence of truth, and relying upon the promises of Jehovah, it will step forth before assembled hostile hosts, and in the sight of an astonished world will cry, "Where is the Lord God of Elijah!" Priestcraft will wither like Jonah's gourd, when touched by the sacrificing celestial flame; pseudo politicians and philosophers will hide their heads; the omnipotent power of eternal truth will stand unshathed in the view of gathering hosts, and the nations will know that God rules in the heavens, and that Mormonism is not a vague phantasy and wild chimera, but the greatest boon that could be conferred upon man; the offspring of heaven, the gift of the Gods, a celestial treasure, an earthly, heavenly inheritance, a living, abiding and eternal reality.

False Prophets.

The present events transpiring on the continent of Europe and on the remotest portions of Asia, cannot but mark an era quite worthy of ancient prophecy; and under this conviction quite a number of men in different communions are arrogating to themselves the power of so rendering the words of ancient writers as to construe all current events to their own purposes, and to indicate destruction to all who will not conform with their own puny notions. Thus the Catholic launches out his denunciations against the Protestant, and sees the fulfilment of events in the destruction of London and its inhabitants, and all its wickedness; whilst Protestants, fully up to the mark in their prejudices, see only Rome, which is to be consumed by the volcanic elements lying beneath and around her. There appears to be plenty of this hot warfare going on—fanaticism grows warmer and hatred more bitter. These disputants should be sent to the theatre of war; they should be sent with infernal machines to Rome; they should bring in another Guy Fawkes to London; in fact, with such faith in their own prophecies, they should be made to contribute towards their fulfilment, and if at the same time they unhappily should be blown up, why their pretensions would be dissipated with them.

The Pacific Railroad.

SOME time ago we published an article, explanatory of our views, on the most feasible route for the Pacific Railroad. A communication will be found in another column from a gentleman, J. D. McCrockwell, who resides in Sergeants Bluffs City, anidmadverting on our views in relation to what we call the Mormon Route. He thinks the Railroad ought to go by Dubuque, Sergeant Bluffs City, thence west up the Ni-obrarah river to the Black hills, within fifteen miles of Fort Laramie.

Now this may be a good route, we don't know, nor do we know who does. The writer of the article does not say that he has traveled it; we are free to admit that according to the map it is the straightest route; but again it will not be denied that a map-route is one thing, and a feasible Railroad another; when this route is surveyed and an official report made, as of the other, then we shall be better prepared to give an opinion. We did not particularise in our article; we spoke in general terms, as to the main route, leaving the details, and peculiar localities for others to attend to. Concerning the route up the Platte we know it to be feasible, having travelled it several times; but whether the road shall go by Dubuque, Rock Island, Burlington on the Mississippi; by Serjeant Bluffs, Council Bluffs, or St. Josephs on the Missouri, must be decided by those most interested. We extract the following from The Mormon:

"First as to directness. San Francisco is destined to be the Great Metropolis of our Western coast; its present advancement in population, agriculture, trade, commerce, and above all its magnificent bay, render it unequalled, on the Pacific coast. The parallel of San Francisco is about one degree south of St. Louis, passes through Missouri, the south ends of Illinois and Indiana, north of Kentucky and through the centre of Virginia; by looking at a map any one would be convinced that it would not be to the interest of any of the States, for two hundred miles south of this line, to go round by Texas; and for all the States north, it would be out of the question. Again, the main arteries of communication by Railroad go north of this; add to this the Ohio and its tributaries, the Missouri and Illinois rivers, as well as the lakes, all tend to this route, nothing can be more demonstrative on this point, than a view of the vast number of Railroads covering the Eastern and Western States like a great network, all of which demand an outlet, a great leading arteris to the Pacific, not round by Texas and back to San Francisco, but on the direct legitimate channels of trade; when we calmly investigate the subject, the preponderance of this route is overwhelming."

* * * * * *

"Pass from Pennsylvania, on a Southern branch, to Cincinnati, and there is a Railroad in progress, going direct to St. Louis; passing that Westward, up the Missouri, on what is called the Pacific Railroad, and you strike off almost directly West. The same will apply to Baltimore and Washington. If a little farther North, you go through Pittsburgh, Columbus, Indianapolis, and Terrahaute, to Alton, and then again up the Pacific from St. Louis.

"Taking a more Northerly route from New York or Boston, to Albany, by Buffalo, Cleveland, Michigan City, Chicago, and so on to Peru, Rock Island, or Burlington; thence, as in contemplation, to Iowa City, Bluff City, and up the Platte river, to join the St. Louis Pacific Railroad."

We presume the details of the route will in a great measure be determined by the energy and wealth of the stockholders and directors of the contested roads.

More Kidnapping.

THE Philadelphia North American, relates the following. A few more such acts will open the eyes of the Cubans, and their ardor for annexation to the United States will be somewhat abated. It is rather a poor return for patriotism, barreling and expatriation to be robbed by the people who are your professed friends, and at whose instigation you have suffered all these evils.

ANOTHER SLAVE EXCITEMENT.—We had another "slave rescue" yesterday morning. Not long ago, a young Cuban gentleman, the son of a wealthy planter in the "gem of the Antilles," was arrested by order of his government, upon the charge of sending an order to Springfield, Mass., for 500 muskets. The young man was imprisoned. But through the connivance of some officials, and the aid of his father, he contrived to escape in a cask! He was placed in a cask, which was closed, and thus rolled to the sea shore. Here the brig General Taylor, from Cardenas for this port, was, by previous arrangement, moored for his reception. The young Cuban was taken aboard, with a negro servant, aged 18 years, given him by his father. The brig sailed, and on Saturday reached this port, and was moored at South street wharf.

The young Cuban took lodgings at one of our principal hotels. Yesterday morning, the captain of the General Taylor took the negro to convey him to his master, who wanted him for a body servant. On the wharf, a party of negroes met the captain and the slave, and told the latter he was free. But the Cuban negro did not understand them. Several white men came to the aid of the captain, and a scuffle ensued. Finally, the negroes triumphed, and carried away their Cuban friend, since which he has not been heard from.

Trouble in Kentucky.

We gave yesterday a letter from a Richmond (Ky.) paper, dated July 2d, in which it was mentioned that, in consequence of a mob of pro-slavery men having prevented the Rev. John G. Fee from preaching, Cassius M. Clay had publicly announced his intention of going to the scene of disturbance, and enforcing the freedom of speech; and that a large number of persons volunteered to accompany him, armed, for the same purpose. In the Cincinnati Gazette, received by yesterday's mail, we find a letter from Mr. Clay, dated the 19th, addressed to the editors of that paper, apparently written under great excitement. In giving it the Gazette says:

"At the time of writing, he was preparing to leave home for Dripping Springs, there to make an effort to establish the freedom of speech. He would go armed, and sustained by a pretty formidable force, and he expected to be met by armed representatives from five counties. Clay resolved that Fee should be permitted to speak, or if put down, it should be over his dead body. There was the most intense excitement in the county. Houses had been deserted, and negroes thrown into jail."—[N. Y. Evening Express.

From later accounts, Messrs. Clay and Fee kept their appointment and were listened to, and there was no riot.

The Maine Law.

THIS law, so far at least as New York is concerned bids fair to be a nultity; it has been vigorously opposed from its first enactment. A league has been entered into by the liquor dealers of New York, meetings held, resolutions passed, and money subscribed for the purpose of its defeat. At the Special Sessions of the 17th, Recorder Smith, delivered a decision in the cases of Dowel and Smith charged with selling liquor contrary to the prohibitory law, to the effect that "imported liquors can be sold in any quantities or in any way." This decision will, of course, be a great damper in the enforcement of the law, which in effect has been nothing more than a farce to the present time.

The Know-Nothing Movement.

This movement, which sprang into existence with such threatening aspects, has already resulted in the disorganization of its abettors. It has not, however, lost through this means its vital force. It has, on the contrary, become attached to every form of political opinion previously held by those who rallied to it as a common standard, and has become in this diluted form an agent more powerful because in the community. It possesses both for the American and the foreigner a deadening tendency, and virtually lays a palsied hand on all enterprise and activity. Carried to its ultimate, it is little less than an absolute negation of all the acknowledged elements of civilization. It inclines to a repetition of the war of races, to bring man in his outer age relations, back to the condition of roving tribes, and would finally resolve itself into castes as the Hindoos. We suppose their appellation Hindoos is derived from this. Commerce knows nothing of know nothingism. The ventures of the merchant are not determined by nationalities; railway stock may be subscribed to in Hamburgh as well as in New York, and a Frenchman or Hollander made welcome at the Board of Directors as a native. This know nothingism, so greatly boasted of, is an impotent assertion of self-sufficiency. If good for anything, it should be carried out far beyond political bounds. Natives alone should trade; natives alone speculate; natives alone hold real estate; natives alone be suffered to drink intoxicating liquors. The action of know-nothingism is founded on a perverted principle of human nature; on the character of those who having gained for themselves certain advantages of whatever character, find a certain satisfaction in getting the same withheld from others, though they themselves thereby would be rendered none the poorer. This is the very reverse of charity, which seeks to extend the blessings which the Creator has bestowed, and which human industry has gathered.

"Far as the breeze can bear, the billows foam," know-nothingism would reduce the world to the condition of the indwellers of Thompson's Castle of Idleness—it would remove all incentives to human action, and would reduce man simply to a vegetative state. The prejudice from which it springs is dangerous to individuals as well as communities. It may as well seperate state from state as country from country. The stream of one's own village should as well serve for a dividing ridge to all the amenities of life and all communication, as the river of the St. Lawrence or the Atlantic. One's own family could, so far as the arguments of know-nothingism go, be qualified in isolating itself from its neighbors, proclaiming independence of the United States, and being its own civil, political and judicial world.

Then, as a climax, the members of such a family might stand apart from one another. The repining prejudice that makes up this wretched ism will disclose itself in more bitter fruits than its adherents now suspect. Not only do they cut themselves off from the sympathy of foreigners, and show themselves insincere in all previous impressions, but destroy all the best arguments for republicanism, by turning themselves into spoilsmen by controlling other men's property and means.

Americans have the right to "vote themselves a farm," but not to vote away other people's right of legislating, and themselves holding all the offices of emolument as well as trust.

Could Know Nothingism be seen in all its true light, it would be hated as well as feared even by its advocates. Men do not like to be thought knaves in their hearts, and will do much out of love of appreciation. Know Nothingism would undo the work of commerce and of industry for hundreds of years, and would turn back the march of nations. The flattering unction it presents is deathly. Science shuns it. Investigation turns away from it, for the revelations of its character are revolting.

There are no doubt many abuses of the franchise by foreigners; pauperism and other evils justly to be complained of; but these ought to be met in a proper manner and be regulated and controlled by wise and judicious laws, and not by proscription, by introducing national factions or castes, nor by the repudiation of liberté, egalité, fraternité, or the great bulwarks of republicanism and American feedom.

Treaty with the Sandwich Islands.

THE Treaty which the United States has entered into with the authorities of the Sandwhich Islands, is chiefly important as giving the most extreme Consular jurisdiction to its Agents there, which will prevent such men as Meyers and others from landing there with impunity. The agricultural products of the Sandwich Islands have been quickly absorbed by the wants of the Pacific States; within the few past years they have afforded some of the most inviting ground for agricultural labor.

Mexico.

FROM the southern mail of the 24th, we learn that affairs are in rather a critical position, in Northern and North Eastern Mexico, the revolutionists on the line of the Rio Grande have commenced military operations, on a very extensive scale. The Texian papers state, that it is the plan of the revolutionists to carve out a new Republic from the three states of Tamalipas, Neuvoo Leon, and Cohahuila, and then to procure annexation to the United States.

DUTIES OF A MAIL AGENT.—By recent instructions from the Post Office Department, it appears to be the duty of a Mail-route Agent to receive letters after the mail has closed, and way-letters pre-paid by stamps and stamped envelopes; to mail and post said letters, and direct them to the proper office for delivery and distribution, and to report a list of all such letters to the contract office.

ELDER HYDE.—For the last two or three weeks, our well-informed editors have had him in St. Louis, looking after ten or twelve new wives: the last California news places him at Placerville, California, without any. If Elder Hyde was only a little more ethereal, he might perhaps move by telegraph a la mode spirituelle; but he is rather too rubicund in his fleshy estate to move so quick, especially with the encumbrance of so many new wives.

WE lately received a communication from our friend and neighbor Elder Edward Stephenson, who has just returned from a mission to Giberalter. The letter refers principally to his voyage across the Atlantic in the "Chimberazo," and his further progress on the Ohio en route to St. Louis; having the presidency of the company, he speaks of the incidents of their voyage; their prosperity, general health, &c. It would have been very interesting if received in time; but having been detained to this late date and the general news already published, it has lost its interest. We wish Elder Stephenson a pleasant trip across the plains, and a happy rest in the bosom of his family from the arduous labors devolving upon him during his late mission.

WE received a letter from Col. D. M. Thomas, of San Bernardino, of May 28th, from which we extract the following:

There are some Elders, and a few families from the upper country; on their way to Salt Lake, the names of the Elders are Mc Bride, R. N. Alred, Nathan Tanner, Elder West, from India, Elders Farrer and Bigler, from the Sandwich Islands.

We have a time of good health and peace, our wheat crops have been materially injured by the rust, and smut; there will not probably be more made than the inhabitants of the place will consume; money continues very scarce and consequently it is said to be hard times; a gold mine has been discovered about sixty miles from this place but we have not ascertained the richness of it, some few Saints have moved here from about San Francisco, with a view of settling here for a short time.

Br. Ludington is on his way home from Hong Kong, China; we are looking for Br. C. C. Rich in from the Lake every day, you may expect a like communication every month, which if not interesting in words may be in funds.

June 11th, since writing the above Gen. C. C. Rich has arrived. The grasshoppers were destroying the crops in Salt Lake, Br. G. Q. Cannon is on his way to San Francisco to take charge of the press at that place. Br. Lyman is sick; the most of our wheat is destroyed by the rust, &c. I wish you success.

Yours, &c., D. M. THOMAS.

One Week Later from Europe.

ARRIVAL OF THE ATLANTIC.

THE U. S. Mail steamship Atlantic, Captain West, arrived at this port on the evening of she 25th, bringing Liverpool news up to the 14th inst. By this arrival we learn but little of importance since our last. We give a few items.

On Monday the 16th, Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton was to move that a ministry containing Lord John Russell is unworty of confidence. The public expect that Lord Palmerston must either throw over Russell, dissolve Parliament, or resign.

Sebastopol had again been subjected to two days heavy fire, but without effect.

The besiegers were erecting immense works against the Malakoff and Redan, and the besieged were erecting equally formidable earthworks behind those defenses.

Trifling operations in the Baltic are reported.

The British Parliament is to be prorogued on the 20th of August.

Letters from the Crimea to the 29th ult. have arrived. The wounds received on the 18th were cleaner than those in previous engagements. The armistic for burying the dead lasted two hours.

The cemetery remains in our possession, and was being fortified in spite of a heavy fire. There can be no doubt that our troops could have got into the town, in the rear of the Redan, from the houses, on the 18th, had they been strong enough to advance from the cemetery.

It is now shrewdly suspected that inside the Redan there is another very strong work—a kind of Star Fort of earth, with unshaken batteries: and it is certain that inside the Malakoff there are several lines of battery which have never been unmasked.

There was some talk of a spy being taken or rather discovered in a sub-interpreter to our commissariat, who confessed he was in communication with the Russians and revealed our attack to them. He will be shot if this be true.

The rain on the 23d was very acceptable, but did some damage. General Estcourt's death was much regretted. His wife and a relative were present when he died. We had lent the French 1532 pounds of shot. The railway was temporarily stopped by the effect of the rain. The repairs would take ten days. Some of the navvies were behaving very badly. The Croat insurrection was suppressed. The fault was their absurdly high pay which made them independent and impudent.

The losses of the land transport corps by sickness were 50 men in one fortnight, of whom 25 were English and 25 native drivers. In its present state it cannot supply all the wants of the army, we could not even advance a small body of troops without risk of starvation.

COAST OF THE UNITED STATES.—The Coast Survey estimate the northern Atlantic coast, inclusive of Maryland, at 6,150 miles; southern Atlantic, from Maryland to the Capes of Florida, 6,200 miles; the Gulf coast, 5,754—total, south Atlantic and Gulf, 11,953 miles; total Pacific, from boundary of San Diego to the mouth of Fraser's river, 3,251 miles.

Truth and Error.

ALL Truth is infinite. It hath no shore
Or soundings. Far as spreads the spiritual sight
So far is it perceived, and though to some
Most dim, and in its outline dubious,
To others gifted with more faith, whose power
Comes from the central source, it burns intense—
A glorious revelation pointing out
The course of human destiny. These speak
And prophecy is heard. What is to be
Looms from the deep of ages and unites
With the reviving past. History at once
Becomes a living lesson. Every age
And every race contribute but to build
The perfect temple to which all shall come.
Ever advance these to the rays of truth,
Ever ascend those to the sphere of God.
Yet baffled error strives for mastery
With tenfold earnestness, briefer her reign,
And entering into the bright armory,
Of pure and perfect truth, she seizes hold
By foul perversion of its mysteries,
And thousands reaching to the opening light
Are baffled by two visions, one so fair,
So luring that the very spirit sinks
Before its fascination and becomes
Subdued without the will; the other robed
In plentitude of grace, waiting the hour
Of full acknowledgment and welcome sweet.
O mighty science! thou art hastening on
The glorious reign of truth; thou dost unseal
The secrets that were lost, by which the seers
Spoke to the spirit world; and dost disclose
The veins of earth and to its centre reach,
Weighing the planets with the glorious sun,
And pointing to the centre round which speeds
The mighty universe; and yet withal,
Is truth but made more simple, she revolves
The complex to the elemental form,
Baffled no longer by the empty shapes
Of splendid contradictions springing out
Of Fancy's combination; in our sight
The spiritual dawns, and all around is light.

Popular Sovereignty and the Mormons.

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

MUCH is said at the present day about popular sovereignty: whatever political scheme is set on foot, this popular cognomen must be attached, to insure it success. It is common to place this in the van, in blazing capitals, that its full weight and import may be impressed upon the people, then to hook on to its trail as many different schemes, bills and resolutions as are originated in the chimerical brain of party cliques. It seems to be made by politicians a kind of sugar coating, by which, however nauseating the pill, it is made to "roll as a sweet morsel beneath the tongue." It brings to my mind the anecdote about the lower Mississippi alligators, which it is said lie in the cane-brake, with the upper jaw thrown back, to give a certain kind of fly ingress, of which they are very fond. It occasionally happens, however, that a toad hops into the trap—the monster shuts his huge jaws together, and with one gulp, all goes down for flies. This mixing of such a number of incongruities under one head, has given rise in the fruitful imagination of Col. T. H. Benton, to the name of "Omnibus." Were I to name it, I should call it Packet, which not only conveys the idea of a passenger carrier, but of every kind of ware that is brought to market.

Popular Sovereignty is in reality, a Republican principle! and directly in keeping with the genius of our institutions. It places, as its name indicates, the right to control and govern in the hands of the people, and makes all officers of government the people's servants! or, in other words, the people are the authority, and through the medium of the ballot-box, agents are appointed by and for the people to execute that authority. An agent, or representative so appointed, is "the people" to all intents and purposes in a condensed form, and the people are responsible for the acts of their Representative. This is popular sovereignty when carried out, but when used as a passport for something of an opposite tendency, it is perverted, and the people, who are usually more honest than their representatives, are deceived. Such is not unfrequently the case. Indeed, so frequently has this principle been perverted, and the term illegitimately appropriated, that many have an aversion to it, as it associates in their minds other principles than those that really belong to it.

There is another form of popular sovereignty known in newly settled countries, as squatter sovereignty, and applies more particularly to those who settle on lands not yet in market, as pre-emptors. It is these squatters who make the roads and bridges, build the fences, cultivate the earth, and do all those things necessary to make what they expect to be their future home, comfortable. The General Government has encouraged this, and from time to time has held out inducements to actual settlers, such as pre-emptions, land grants, &c. The inhabitants of Oregon, New Mexico, Utah and others, have settled their respective Territories on this principle. Their territorial sovereignty is complete so far as it does not conflict with the universal sovereignty of all the States combined, or which is equivalent the organic act. There are many principles pertaining to government, that are left entirely to the people in their several localities. The people of Oregon have a right to legislate that involuntary servitude, or slavery shall be one of the institutions of her government, while New Mexico, has the same right through her popular representation, to say that slavery shall not exist within her jurisdiction. Some States and Territories have laws imprisoning citizens for debt, while others have no such law; some hold capital punishment as a statute, while others have abolished it; some have passed homestead laws, others have not; different States have different laws with regard to marriage, some requiring that the intention of parties to be married shall be published a certain length of time previous to marriage, while others require no publication.

These are rights which the different States have never ceded to the General Government, but have reserved to themselves! Consequently there has not been, neither, could there be, consistently, universal laws touching these matters. For the General Government to say that slavery shall be instituted in Massachusetts, or that it shall be prohibited in South Carolina, would be Anti-Republican. The same if it should compel every man in Massachusetts (where there are a number of Shakers whose religion forbids marriage) to have a wife; or the inhabitants of Utah, (whose religion allows many) to have none. I have seen with no little astonishment, how readily some professedly knowing editors have committed themselves in the following, and similar language. "The Mormons ought not to be permitted to carry on their poligamy against the laws and constitution of our country." What laws I ask? if Congress has ever legislated on the subject, I have yet to learn it. And as to the constitution, the only point that can be brought to bear upon poligamy, or the plurality of wives in Utah, is the clause that guaranties the rights of different religious denominations! and inasmuch as the plurality of wives is a religious or ecclesiastical institution, the constitution is pledged for its protection.

So far, then, from its being unconstitutional, it has the popular sovereignty voice, through the federal compact, to sustain it against its enemies, without a counteracting clause. The argument that is advanced by some, that Utah should not be admitted into the Union as a State, because her institutions differ from others of the States, is entirely fallacious, for there are no two States precisely alike in their laws or institutions; and if it so happens that they have all passed laws in their individual sovereign capacities prohibiting the plurality of wives, they have done it on their own volition, and are responsible to none but themselves. They may think polygamy a bad institution, having an immoral tendency, &c. Utah thinks otherwise, and believes that monogomy, or the proscriptive one wife law, is one of the principal causes of the immense immorality and laciviousness among the sexes in the different States; and she is confident, that in a comparison of her morals with any other State or territory, she has far the advantage, and is a good example to any State or territory that might follow it. Whether Utah has passed territorial laws regulating matrimony, is immaterial. If she has not, it has not been because of its unconstitutionality. The sovereign act of Congress, by which she was organized a territory, of course does not touch this point. Her right to legislate on any matter is curtailed only so far as the laws of the General Government, including the organic act, determine. If any are fearful that Utah will sell herself, (through her popular or squatter sovereignty,) to immorality, by instituting polygamy, the only effectual remedy if any, that I can see for them by which to avoid it, is to go and settle in her midst, in such numbers as to change the character of her popular sovereignty. By so doing, there is yet a chance to save her from that yawning gulf of immorality into which they imagine she must eventually precipitate herself politically, as they say she has already religiously. The influence of a few politicians, and a few missionaries sent to that country in season, say before it is admitted into the Union, which to all appearance will not be long, may be of incalculable benefit in this particular. I am fully satisfied that if they are gentlemen, they will be treated with all due respect as such by the citizens of that country, notwithstanding the awful reports we accasionally hear about the Mormons.

THE LATE LOCOMOTIVE EXPLOSION.—Some particulars haue been received of the explosion of the locomotive John Smith, at Milton, Vt., on the Vermont and Canada Railroad, on Thursday afternoon last. The train consisted of two passenger cars, with from seventy-five to one hundred passengers, and was going at the time at the rate of from thirty to thirty-five miles per hour. When the explosion took place the engine was thrown down an embankment, and the cars were forced from the track, running a considerable distance before their speed was checked. Only two persons were killed, Mr. Richard R. Bush, of Burlington, the conductor, and the engineer, whose name is French, of Northfield, Vermont. The fireman, also belonging in Northfield, had a leg and arm broken, and was otherwise severely injured, and probably will not survive. The only other person injured was a boy, who was in a baggage car, who was bruised in head and face by some of the fragments of the boiler. The passengers in this train reached this city in safety last evening.—Boston Traveller, Saturday evening.

HENRY CLAY'S son, James B. Clay, made a speech against the Know Nothings at Lexington, Ky., as opposed to the spirit of the Revolution, to the teachings of Washington, Jefferson, Madison, &c. He was "received with great enthusiasm, and heard with great interest." He advised the Whigs of Kentucky to abjure the secret society.

A COMPANY of Germans, about four years since, purchased a tract of 20,000 acres on the south-eastern slope of the Blue Ridge in South Carolina, and established the town of Walhalla. They now number over a thousand inhabitants, and constitute a fine and thriving town, an example of the power of intelligence.

A BARBER, named Charles Pfauz, committed suicide at Tom's river, Ocean county, N. J., on Saturday last, by cutting his throat with a razor. Deceased was a German by birth. He had told some of his friends that he was dissatisfied and tired of life, and that he intended to commit the act, which he at last did, almost severing his head from his body.

CERTIFICATE TO PASSENGER VESSELS.—The certificates hitherto given by Port Collectors and others as to the legal capacity of vessels for the carriage of passengers, have been pronounced by the Treasury Department illegal. The responsibility in such case, rests with the owners.

RIGHTS OF CONSULS.—The Government has issued a Circular affirming that Consuls are not Diplomatic Agents, are not exempt from arrest, and may be compelled to give testimony as witnesses in court.

Correspondence.

Correspondence from Wales.

The following letter from an old friend, Capt. Dan. Jones, Editor of the Udgorn Scion, a Welsh Mormon periodical, will be read with interest by many of his numerous friends both in this and other countries. We shall be glad to get the information of which he speaks in relation to the White Indians, and to publish as many communications as he thinks proper to send. Concerning the Udgorn Scion, if any of the Welsh brethren in this country, or their friends, wish to to get Capt. Dan's paper or other Welsh books, they can forward the money and address to this office, which we will forward to him forthwith. We don't know the price, but suppose the paper will be about the same as the Millenial Star, the terms of which will be found in the Mormon. To say anything either about the paper or Capt. Jones would be superfluous; they are too well known.

UDGORN SCION OFFICE,
Swansea, June 26th, 1855.

PRESIDENT TAYLOR:

Dear Brother—An unvarnished U. S. Captain, in reply to the interrogation of a Court Martial, why he sailed into port without replying to the salute of the Fort, filed twenty reasons. "The first is," said he, "because a sea, shipped in a late gale, had filled the magazine so that I had not one charge of dry powder left, and the second is—"Hold! hold! enough!" cried all hands—"reserve the nineteen for another time." Is mine an analogous case? * * * * * *

I have forgotten that I had drawn a long face—a loud groan, and tried my best to look, feel and act clerical—reverently, I mean, for nothing else is fashionable here; and oh! what an orthodoxical, logical, sublime episode I was going to write for The Mormon; for fear you would, in your hurry, do as I do sometimes—stick it in as it is. * * * *

But what little Mormonism I glean, and the ever humming away of your favorite song which you wrote me:

"There's a good time coming, boys, Wait a little longer,"

is remodelling the Neptuneism in me, so that there is hope of my becoming somebody yet. Well, I'll try again—hum—O, yes; the Mormon!—the bold, the true, the great, the "merry Mormon." 'Tis a very welcome weekly visitor to gladden the hearts of many a group as they surround the social hearth, in many parts of Wales. In fact, my appetite is whetted up for it, as regular as for my dinner. It's well filled columns are so well spiced and highly seasoned, that it's flavor is as sweet when uncorked here, as when bottled up there; sea air don't affect it at all, and you may warrant it with safety in frigid as well as torrid zones. 'Tis a Mormon all over, and will talk Mormon fashion the world over, so that he who reads it, if he has a soul, will be bound to say, "Well, if that is Mormonism, I am a Mormon too." Its voluminous vignette, historiographic of the past; of the ominous present, and the momentous future, chronologizes the "eternity" of our little orb; and its "busy bees and hives," from the twinkling of the first rays of "light" on its infant vision, until encircled by the halo of its ruling Star of the West—the bright harbinger of its eternal day—all at a glance stare us in the face, and daguerreotype themselves in the mind. Truth, justice, virtue, humanity, Heaven and all its hosts, need the service of such a "Mormon" to advocate their cause against the belchings forth of his Majesty's "iron horse"—the Press. May none but "Mormons" stride his saddle, and make his brave sinews sweat in defence of Mormonism. O, for ten thousand such horses to snort out volumes of burning lava, to consume the influence of their present calumnious jockeys—their mouths volcanic craters—their neighing like peals of thunder, to drown the croakings of myriad lying editors and hireling priests, and beneath their adamantine hoofs to be trod to dust he who maliciously and designedly vilifies, and pours out his hellish spleens against Mormonism. Would that every spear of grass had a thousand tongues to tell the blackness of the hearts, and the luciferic propensities of the souls of those who invent and cater their malicious lies against an innocent, and God-serving people. Yet, if it is so pleasing to them to lie, as 'tis to a whole-souled Mormon to tell truths—eternal truths, may they enjoy their little season to glut their souls on their own eternal diet; the besom of truth will eventually sweep them to their kennels, as the hoary frost sweeps the mosquitoes in a fell swoop. But again, I've forgotten myself; getting too clerical now!

So far from expecting, in your conspicuous position—having the news of the wide world brought with the speed of lightning before your eyes; being on the theatre of action and the world's thrashing-floor—will you expect anything new, or very great, from this little fragment of the "footstool;" yet, if that be any pleasure to hear, you are dearly remembered here by many; often spoken of and prayed for, and the good seed sown by you is still irrigated by the dews of Heaven, and bids fair to bring fruit that will ripen in eternity. I know of one archive where your memory is held sacred through deeds of valor from your "Chaplainship"—in the adventures of the "Maid of Iowa" to re-kidnap her favorite Prophet from the hands of ruffians—a chase of a thousand miles of mob strewn lines; through the tragical scenes of Carthage, and your subsequent visits to my native hills, all conspire to kindle in the soul a flame of love for truth and its brave advocates, which neither an ocean of brine nor of time can extinguish.

Perhaps you expect me to say something of the howabouts of Mormonism in Wales, whereas I am expecting you hear about all that is worth telling from the emigrating Saints you see there; however, something new does turn up here occasionally; we have but one common foe in fact, and that is old Boz, only he has so many hirelings—you know who I mean!—and they are his "reapers and binders," but, inasmuch as he has no "barn," he needs no "gatherers"—very convenient to let them be with the stubble you know; well, these have bound up their sheaves so tight with cast-iron bands, and screwed them up with lying "jack screws," until it is almost impossible to pull out one whist unless you break it in pieces. Awful tight binding they make of it, and the more so the better the poor creatures like it. I sometimes fancy that could the old Boz be made to call his reapers and binders to some other field awhile, we would soon sing the "Harvest Home;" if it was not for them we would have but little to do—but 'tis as it is, and perhaps it is all right.

While on the one hand the wailings of the down-trodden, poverty stricken and priest-ridden mass—the voices of plagues, fevers and death, commingling with the barking of the "dogs of war," as they tear the nations to pieces, chaunt the funeral requiem of Babylon the Great, and tend only to enrage them for the onslaught; every ukase that is issued from the royal court, is echoed from the West, and is heralded throughout the world, gives new life and vigor to the lovers of truth. Every hero that wins a laurel—every acquisition to the kingdom that will survive all others, and every voice which echoes in the breeze through the News, the Mormon, the Luminary, our own favorite Star, or, wherever it proceeds from, so it is for rending asunder the fetters of the human mind and to set man a thinking, only tends to stimulate to assimulation, energies for the strife, and incites onward to the victory of truth over falsehood—the emancipation of a world. This is truly an eventful era—a day of war; Heaven has marshalled her hosts for the battle; truth the weapon; it must, and will conquer, and I pity the blindness of him who don't see it.

I learn by one of your late issues that you have, in referring to a tribe of White Indians inhabiting the Sierra Nevada, said, that "you have never seen any satisfactory accounts that America was discovered by the Welsh anterior to its discovery by Columbus." I will, therefore, endeavor the first convenience to proselyte you to the faith, believing I have ample proofs to convince any Mormon that Madoi Ab Owain Gwynedd colonized it in the twelfth century.

I am very glad to get the Mormon as it comes; I will remit to Liverpool, or as you please, and as there are so many thousands of Welsh all about you, and doubtless some Welsh "Mormons," will you suggest some way that I can be of benefit to them, either in blowing the "Trumpet" through pamphlets, or in any other way. Poor folks, I should like to "disgrace" a few thousands of them with Mormonism. Our numbers now in Wales, after all the emigration, does not exceed 5,000 I think, but still gaining. You will see my catalogue published with Pres. Richards; should you fancy the stock, I shall take much pleasure in filling your order. Some scores have went there this Spring, who commenced taking the current vol. of Udgorn here, and they expressed a wish to continue it there, could a suitable agency be established. With that hint, I will leave the rest for your superior wisdom to dictate, if you please!

As I have failed this time to hatch up anything worth representing in your columns, the "leek" which ornaments your vignette, and as you are considerable of a Welshman as well as a Frenchman, I beg to submit you the inclosed statements of the first principles for your correction of wrong, if not they are about as leaky as I feel myself. You have probably learnt something through the papers of the bobbery the priests tried to kick up here; the inclosed hand-bill was the home stroke to the clan, and the re-action has enshrouded them in their own shame; the catspaw, Hepburn, after the priests here spent about £20 to hatch up his lies into a book, got him up a memorial and a steel engraving for a frontispiece, for preaching the "Funeral Sermon of Mormonism;" but before the hermophradite got birth, he kicked up his heels, turned over the platters, and after braying through the streets against all the short-eared "jacks," fled before—and left Mormonism more ripe than ever.

In conclusion: May the wisdom and power of the Author of Mormonism enable you to disseminate light and truth; to disabuse the public mind, and demonstrate it in its own true character, despite all the efforts of your libellous and corrupt contemporaries to the contrary; qualify you to fulfill all the responsible duties of your high and holy calling with pleasure to yourself, and all the good your liberal heart desires to mankind, and may your Mormon, with a voice like thunder—a two-edged sword in an Almighty hand, and a heart as true and brave as truth itself, defend the "honey bee," and prostrate all the foes of our own dear "Deseret," is the heart's desire of your ever true and affectionate co-working "bee," and of all the "gwenyn Cymreig."

D. JONES.

Correspondence from Upper Canada.

SHAKESPEARE, Perth Co., June 6th, 1855.

Dear Brother Taylor:

I wrote to you when I was in London in March last, on the receipt of the 4th number of the Mormon, the only one I ever received!

I was at Canhoro, in Huldimand Co., in, or near the end of April last, and met in Council with Elders Sly and Gustin, in the house of Elder Abel Parker. The health of my two coadjutors on the Canadian Mission is very delicate indeed.

I left the minutes of our Council, with Elder Gustin to post to G. A. Smith, G. S. L. City. It shows that 12 have been added by baptism, and about 12 or 14 more who acknowledge the Mormon cause of Utah, though I could say—they are more inclined to farming, building and merchandizing here, than of immigrating westward. In consideration of my said Brethren's health, it was concluded that they proceed homewards, over the Rocky mountains, as soon as they can procure the wherewith to go.

I am told by a brother Bennet of this place, that he met Bro. Sly and others from Canhoro, at Paris, C. W., on their way to the Valley of the Mountains, about a week ago.

I now request your Council as to the propriety of my continuance here alone! or whether I could not, be of more service in Britain or in Jersey—for a season, previous to returning to Utah, or back to Canada again, as circumstances opened up. I have some relatives in London! but you are aware, 'tis written: "that a man's greatest enemies are those of his own household." The Saviour could not perform many mighty works (among his own, who received him not) because of their unbelief!

I am glad when the post arrives with the Mormon, and the St. Louis Luminary, which fills me with thanksgiving to my Heavenly Father, that His work whereunto He hath set His hand, "again the second time to recover the remnants of His people," scattered wide, all o'er the Globe, are returning like doves to their windows, to cause the wilderness and the solitary places to gladden—yea, to bud and blossom as the rose! It is no less cheerful to see the names of many of my Brethren, with whom I have oft had sweet counsel, enrolled in the Emigration lists in your valuable vehicles of intelligence: may heaven prosper the work of your hands, and those of our Brethren engaged in similar warfare; until every knee shall bow, and every (vituperous) tongue shall confess, that Jesus, The Mighty King of Saints has fulfilled His Promise (Heb: xii: 25–29), and hath spoken from the Heavens and "Restored that which he took not away"—even His Everlasting Gospel of the Kingdom—by the means he once used to bring Israel up out of the land of Egypt; as saith Prophet (Isa: xi: 11–16) which was by the ministry of an holy Angel, and the Calling and inauguration of a Prophet, to organize his Church, preparatory to their going into the wilderness (Exod: iii: Isa: 35 1–6: xii: 18–19), to remove thrones, and things that are tottering, that the things that cannot be shaken may remain. "Therefore, John (Rev. 14: 6–8) beheld a mighty Angel flying in the midst of Heaven, having the Everlasting Gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth; and to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, saying: Fear God, and give glory to Him, for the hour of His judgment (on Babylon) has come," (or, begins). And that the remnants of His People should be also led into the Wilderness, in the latter days (Ezek: xx: 33–45) and other inspired testimonies elicits. I remain your Servant in bonds of the Everlasting Gospel Covenant, GEO. P. WAUGH.

ELDER WAUGH is at liberty to go where he may be led by the spirit of the Lord.

If he will send us his place of destination, we will forward The Mormon.

From Our Kansas Correspondent.

ATCHISON, K. T., July 8, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

SINCE writing to you last, but little of importance to your readers has transpired in Atchison. The Saints are rolling off; two companies have left during the last week, Elder Ballantyne's and Elder Sechrist's—and another train is expected to start in 3 or 4 days; this train will take out church property, also Gov. B. Young's boiler and machinery for his steamboat; we are looking for it to arrive every hour, as the boat that has it on is, and has been within twenty-five miles of this place since yesterday morning. She will be here in a day or two, if nothing happens, and then the church train will leave for the plains. Elder Milo, Andrus is still here; he seems to be endowed with superhuman strength of body and mind, and wades into the business with a will; he does more business than any man in or around Atchison. Elder Daniel Spencer is here, having arrived yesterday, on the Polar Star, from St. Louis. Elder McGaw is still here; he is the acting Bishop for this region of country, Elder E. Snow is expected up in a few days. Elder Wm. Rust arrived a few days since with two families of Saints from Pennsylvania; they intend stopping over until next spring; Elder Rust tells me that there will be more on this fall from Pennsylvania. Come along, provisions are plenty and tolerable cheap; every thing is plenty, devils too, in human shape not excepted, and the more priesthood the closer to their dens they will keep.

The Kansas Legislature is in session; Johnson is President of the Council, and Dr. J. H. Stringfellow, editor of the Squatter Sovereign, Speaker of the House.

The Legislature, like all political Legislatures, is doing but little, as yet; but you may expect them to chew their lead into long balls for the Abs. and Frees., during the sixty days sitting.

Atchison is improving slowly, on account of lumber; only 4 houses put up in the last week. The River has been in fine floating order, but is now falling rapidly.

The health of the companies as reported by those arriving here from the Lake is good except Elder Blair's company; several cases of cholera had appeared in that company. Elder Sechrist, the captain of the 2d company died, between here and Karney, from fatigue in hunting cattle.

The prospect for crops is remarkably good, at present; but I learn that large fields of wheat, with the chaff and blades all off, has been left standing in Missouri; from the fact that the least motion of the stock caused the wheat to part from it, and go into the ground. They want some of the boys from Deseret to glean, or, at least, to learn them how to take care of that that the Lord gives them.

This letter is scattering; but, as the Parson said, "Scattering shot kills the most birds;" I must close it. I am Yours, Truly,

TRAVELER.

From Our California Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 30, 1855.

Dear Uncle: As the steamer leaves this morning, I take the present opportunity of writing you a few lines, as a commencement to my correspondence from California.

I arrived here on Sunday last, with my wife, and two brethren, Bros. Joseph Bull and M. F. Wilkie, who were sent to labor with me. We came by the Southern route, or old Spanish trail, as it is called, to San Bernardino. We left Great Salt Lake City on the 10th of May, and travelled south to Cedar City in company with President B. Young, who, with Presidents Kimball and Grant, and several of the Twelve, was making his annual trip to the Southern settlements. Our trip was a very pleasant one, and it was gratifying to see the spirit of cheerfulness which the Saints manifested in view of the destruction of their wheat crop by the grasshoppers.

In San Bernardino the wheat crop is almost entirely spoiled by the rust, and some asserted when we were there, that there would scarcely be enough harvested to seed as large an amount of ground as they had in wheat this year. In this upper country, especially east of this place, the grasshoppers are devouring every green thing, and the prospect is that wheat will be very high in this State this season.

Times are hard in this country, there is a universal complaint on all hands, and many do not know what to do. Banks are failing, and the people are losing confidence in all such institutions; the staunchest and those that were reckoned the safest men in the country, have failed, causing many to lose the hoardings of years.

When I arrived here I found that Bro. Parley had left for the Valley, and was out at the San Jose Mission preparing to start with a portion of the company early on Monday morning. I, immediately after landing, started for San Jose Mission, and had the pleasure of finding Bro. Parley there, and was able to get all the necessary information in relation to the situation of affairs in this country.

Looking at things naturally, the prospect is not very bright for the establishment of a press, but I feel determined, by the help of the Lord, to do all I can towards it, and to accomplish the object of my mission. I expect Bro. O. Hyde here in a few days, having heard that he is on this side of the mountains; he and Bro. Heywood were in Sacramento yesterday.

You must excuse the shortness of my letter—I expect to write a longer letter and more satisfactory news by the next mail. I desire your prayers that I may fill my missiou honorably before the Lord. All were well when I left home; Harriet's health was improving. Elizabeth and the Saints here join in love with me to you, George, Angus and all the brethren. I remain, as ever,

Your affectionate Nephew,

GEORGE.

From Sergeant Bluff City.

SERGEANT BLUFF CITY, IOWA,
June 8th, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

SIR—I observed a communication from your paper, in the Council Bluff Bugle, headed "The Pacific Railroad." In that communication the writer seems to be informed on almost all the routes, and speaks my mind in relation to Major Stephens route, the Benton route, and I might say also in relation to all other routes, except what he states in relation to the Mormon or South Pass route, and on that route, he, it appears, is not fully informed; on the routes that converge and form the Pacific route from St. Louis and thence west he is correct; but on the routes that converge from New York, or Boston, to Albany by Buffalo, and to Chicago; here, he seems to be in an error; and by reference to a map of the United States, you will bear me out in my correction. He turns the track south to Burlington, a distance of more than a degree, out of the natural course it should travel; the correct route is to Dubuque, and thence to Fort Dodge, and Sergeant Bluff City. Dubuque is about forty miles north of Chicago, and Fort Dodge is three miles north of Dubuque, and Austanville six miles south of Fort Dodge, and New Ida, two miles south of Austanville, and Sergeant Bluff City is four miles north of New Ida, or four miles south of Dubuque. So you see from Dubuque, the present terminus of the Chicago and Galena Railroad, we have a direct route to this place, (Sergeant Bluff City,) and from here the road will run direct west to DaKota City, and thence to Hebron, the former resting place of some of the Mormons in their pilgrimage west, and to the Ralo Pass, in the Bralo Mountains or Landbutes at the Snake Fork Keha Paka Branch of the Neobrasab, or Runing Water River; thence up the Keho Paka to the Black Hills, within fifteen miles of Fort Laramie, and thence to the South Pass. And in connection with this rout the roads from Rock Island, Burlington, &c., to Council Bluff, they very properly connect themselves by a road up the Valley of the Platte, making one grand trunk from Fort Laramie west, with its three grand branches, one from DaKota City, N. T., (immediately opposite this city,) and one from Omaha City, N. T., (opposite Council Bluff,) and one from Kansas, the terminus of the St. Louis road, and I am of an opinion the branch from this place west, will present inducements more than either of the other branches; first, the shortness of the route and the shortness of the distance, as by this route; Fort Laramie is not more than six hundred and fifty miles from Dubuque, nearer than any other place on the Mississippi by two hundred miles; and this road passes through a heavy pine forest, and running water, and the largest and best farming district in Nebraska. And I would invite eastern capitalists to examine this route, and also I would invite emigration to settle along this line, and especially at Sergeant Bluff City, Iowa, DaKota City, and Hebron, N. T., we wish more population, as our country is new, but first rate, and we are not choice, only we want honest and industrious persons, Mormons, Catholics, Protestants, Democrats, Whigs, and a few Know Nothings, but no Do Nothings.

Yours, &c., J. D. M. CROCKWELL.

Papers generally please copy.

California.

THE steamship Star of the West arrived at this port on the 24th, and brought with her the immense sum of one million of dollars.

From the Alta California, June 30.

The Land Ordinance, which has been before the Common Council of this city for some months, has passed both Boards and has been approved by the Mayor. The ordinance provides for the quieting of land claims in San Francisco, the city relinquishing her title to all lands under the Pueblo claim to the actual occupants. A vast deal of expensive litigation is hereby saved the city, and the settlers upon certain lands will live in greater security.

The Dashing Wave has landed more cars, tenders and machinery for the Sacramento Valley Railroad. The enterprise is fast arriving at a state of completion.

The Democratic Primary Election, held in this city on the 17th inst., resulted in the election of the entire Bigler ticket for the State Convention, to be held at Sacramento on the 27th June.

The weather in San Francisco has been mild and sunny for the past ten days, while at times excessive heat has been experienced.

Business has been lively, and we have no more heavy failures or defalcation to recount.

From all quarters disastrous accounts are received of the grasshoppers. In Carson Valley it is feared the entire grain crop will be destroyed, while in the vicinity of Sacramento, and at Hook Farm, the residence of Gen. Sutter, everything green had disappeared in their march.

ARRIVAL OF ORSON HYDE AND COMPANY AND COL. STEPTOE AND COMPANY AT CARSON VALLEY.—The Sacramento Union publishes a telegraphic dispatch from Placerville, announcing the arrival at that place from Salt Lake, of Hon. J. P. Stiles, Associate Justice of Utah, J. L. Heyward, U. S. Marshal of Utah, and Orson Hyde.

Col. Steptoe and command will remain at Carson Valley about ten days, to recruit, previous to crossing the mountains. Mr. Hyde says that the last report gives him many more wives than he really has, and none came over with him.

During the past week, the most excessive heat has been experienced throughout the interior of California. In Sacramento, the mercury has reached to an unusual height. In Sonora 180 deg; in Columbia 108 and Mokelumne Hill 102 deg. In most places the heat has been such as to prevent work in the mines, excepting at morning and evening.

LAND CLAIMS IN CALIFORNIA.—Judge Hoffman, U. S. District Court, has decided that the Freemont decision was not made on peculiar or exceptionable grounds, but was intended to apply generally to grants made under the Colonization Laws. Under its ruling no colonization grant can be rejected for indefiniteness of boundaries or the failure to perform the condition of settlement and cultivation. A motion to modify the decree so as to limit the claim to vacant lands, was denied.

FROM THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—A banking charter to Page, Bacon & Co., had passed one branch of the Hawaiian Legislature, and was pending in the other. It gave them an exclusive right to transact an exchange and banking business for 20 years.

FROM SANTA FE.—St. Louis, July 25. Col. Fonteroy and company had pursued a lot of Utah Indians to the head waters of the Kansas; when he overtook them, killed forty, took five prisoners, thirty horses, and a lot of camp equipage.

From the Alta California.

Two Weeks Later from the South—Later from Utah.

BY PACIFIC EXPRESS COMPANY.

The steamer Sea Bird, Capt. Haley, arrived at this port yesterday morning, bringing us Los Angeles papers of the 20th, San Diego of the 16th, Santa Barbara of the 21st, and Monterey of the 23d inst.

A company of dragoons, under command of Lieut. Mowry, accompanied by Lieut. Chandler, arrived at Los Angeles on the 20th. They are en route for Fort Tejon, and have about 80 horses. Col. Steptoe, with the remainder of the troops, have taken the northern route.

The military road through Utah has been completed and accepted by the professor.

The crops throughout Utah have been almost totally destroyed by grasshoppers, and the farmers have commenced putting in another crop.

The Mormons are about establishing a settlement at Las Vegas, which will be of great convenience to travellers on this route.

There had been no eastern mail received at Salt Lake City since March, and the government officials now receive their correspondence via California.

Gen. Rich and party, from Salt Lake City, arrived at San Bernardino on the 17th inst. Sanford's train was met at the Vegas Springs, all well and prospering. Sanford informed Gen. Rich of the murder of a white man, whose name was supposed to be Thompson. He was from Kentucky, and had lived at Sacramento with Dr. Hunter and Merchant Osborne. He was shot through the heart by an arrow. Indians are supposed to be the murderers.

COL. STEPTOE.—We learn that Col. Steptoe did not resign as was stated, the Governorship of Utah Territory. He has informed the Administration at Washington that he will act as Governor provided that when his term is out or he is displaced he shall be reinstated in the army. He is now awaiting the reply of the President, which is being taken to him by express from this way to Carson Valley. On receiving the reply, if it is favorable, Col. Steptoe will immediately return to Salt Lake and continue the administration of the government.

The thermometer for some time has been ranging at from 112 deg. to 115 deg. in the shade, at the Colorado.

MORE GOLD EXCITEMENT.—An excitement has been prevailing among the Mormon brethren at San Bernardino, from discoveries lately made of gold deposits in the San Bernardino mountains. Several parties of the Faithful were out prospecting.—[San Diego Herald.

WE hope the above is not true; we would rather hear of an iron, coal, wood, lead, wheat, corn, or any other mine being found than a gold mine.

From all parts of California as well as from Utah, reports are that the destruction by grasshoppers is immense.

DEFEAT AND DESPERSION OF THE WALKER EXPEDITION.—It is stated that Col. Walker's invading party had an engagement with the Government troops near San Juan Del Sur, by whom they were defeated and despersed, and that a number of the revolutionists had been killed and wounded.

KANSAS.—"Outrages continue. The seat of Government is sought to be removed to a location which would place it directly under the influence of a mob."

SLAVE CONVENTION.—There is to be a State Convention of Missouri slave holders—a new feature in Western politics.

RECIPROCITY DUTIES.—Amount of duties refunded is estimated at half a million of dollars.

HEAT.—We have had the thermometer up to 98 degrees.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

A list of the prices of staple articles, of several of the Eastern and Western Cities, will be inserted, as well as the price current of Utah and California.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World. J. T.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaitraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? Ou devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés!" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit!" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection!" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ!" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.!" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.!" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophéties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaitre Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les ecès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votro lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

And as we have traveled over the road several times, and know from experience the wants of those seeking a home in the West, we have sought with diligence, at the several points for outfitting, the various and best kind of establishments, and as the spring opens shall fill our business columns with advertisements, for the convenience and direction of Emigrants in making their purchases, &c.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.
This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.
The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.
The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

FOR THE MORMON.

Hide and Seek.

BY ESTHER BAILEY.

I'm going to play at hide and seek,
Although it's nearly obsolete:
Come boys and girls, join in with me,
We'll spend our time most gloriously.

I'm going to hide far, far away,
And call hoop! hoop! come, come away;
I'll roam o'er mountain, hill, and dale,
Until I find the hiding vale.

So you can seek until you find,
The footmarks I shall leave behind;
They'll look like Mormons'—very plain:
Now try to find them if you can.

I'll hide, I'll hide, because I fear,
The clouds o'erspread, a storm is near;
There's famine, strife, and bloody war,
Near to the threshold of our door.

I'll hide, I'll hide, with many more,
Who seek to make their garments pure,
And have their tabernacles clean,
Fit for the Lord to enter in.

For Christ will come on earth again,
And with His Saints and Angels reign;
He'll cleanse this earth on which we dwell,
From putrifaction, sin, and hell.

Men, like hyenas in our day,
Seek as the forest beasts for prey,
Are daily thirsting for the blood
Of prophets, call'd and sent of God.

Nor will they rest until they've found,
One little chosen spot of ground;
Far in the west they've heard that we Serve God, as men did anciently.

I'll hide, I'll hide, where I can find
Saints who are of one heart and mind;
I'll follow out the Mormon plan,
And seek salvation while I can.

REMARKS

BY PRESIDENT BRIGHAM YOUNG,

Tabernacle, May 27, 1855.

REPORTED BY G. D. WATT.

I AM happy in the privilege of meeting with you this afternoon. You will recollect that I told you, before I left this place a few weeks since, that I should go and come in safety. We have had a prosperous and pleasant journey, have met with the Saints, and their hearts were cheered, and their feelings made glad with comfort and consolation. Quite a number of the brethren proposed going with us, as we passed through the settlements, for the grasshoppers had taken all their crops, and as they had no farming to see to they wished to go with us and take a ride. Those who went, returned perfectly satisfied with their excursion.

I believe all the settlements we have passed through are satisfied with regard to the Lord's dealing with this people; and I wish to add, to what has already been said, that it becomes our duty to use all possible diligence and every proper means to sustain ourselves. We have yet ample time for planting and sowing; let us improve it, and use that ability which God has given us to provide sustenance, and then let the result rest in His hands, and feel perfectly satisfied.

This people have to learn that the Lord is God, that he rules among the armies of heaven, and does his pleasure among the inhabitants of the earth. They have to be brought to the test, as much so as were the children of Israel when the Egyptians were in their rear, when mountains were on either side, and the Red Sea was before them, with no human prospect for avoiding destruction, yet the Lord brought them salvation. This people have got to trust in Him, and learn that he will be with his people, and provide for his saints, and defend them against their enemies and watch over them as a mother watches over her tender infant. We have got to learn the ways of the Lord. If it is necessary for the Lord to rain down manna from heaven, he has the same power to do it, the same power to feed his people in the latter days, that he had in the former days. It is far easier for Him to feed the saints from heaven, than it is for them to raise grain in the common way. Still it is our duty to be active and diligent in doing everything we can to sustain ourselves, to build up His kingdom, to defend ourselves against our enemies, to lay our plans wisely, and to prosecute every method that can be devised to establish the kingdom of God on the earth, and to sanctify and prepare ourselves to dwell in his presence. Yet, after all this, if the Lord should not help —if he should not lend his aid to our endeavors, all our labors will prove in vain. This the great majority of mankind do not understand. He has made it obligatory upon them to act, to do their part; yet if he was to neglect his part, or withold his assistance, our labors would prove abortive. We must learn that it is God who gives the increase, or rather, it is his mercy over the people, whether saints or sinners, that sustains them in life. All Latter Day Saints have got to learn these facts, and it matters but little how we learn them.

If the people are anxious to learn the ways of the Lord, if they wish to see the hand of God made manifest, if they wish to have the visions and revelations of Jesus Christ given in profusion, perhaps the Lord is now using the very means to bring them to that point where they will be obliged to seek Him for themselves. They have been besought by day and by night, and from year to year, to humble themselves before the Lord, to live their religion, and to walk in the light of eternity. They have been plead with to live so that they can know the mind and will of the Lord for themselves, and for that which they preside over, at the same time, not to be too anxious for the Lord to give revelation, and make himself known, but rather to be very anxious and very tenacious to improve upon what He has already given, this is our duty.

Now I may say to the saints you need not be discouraged, we have yet plenty of time to raise good crops. If it is the Lord's will that we raise crops to sustain ourselves, it will be all right, and if it is his will that the devourer eat up the products of our labor, it is all right, and it will deliver and preserve us from a greater evil. For one, if weeping would have done any good, I have seen months and months, in this city, when I could have wept like a whipt child to see the awful stupidity of the people in not realizing the blessings bestowed upon them in grain; I could have wept to see this people trample on the mercies of their benefactor in bestowing the fruits of the earth upon them in such plenty. If the Lord is now disposed to learn us a lesson, and make us thereby wise men and wise women, and prudent in all our ways, all I have to say is, amen, it is all right. When chastisements come, let them be what they may, let us always be willing and ready to kiss the rod, and reverence the hand that administers it, acknowledging the hand of God in all things.

As I have already observed, it is our duty to do all we can to sustain ourselves, trusting in God to give the increase, and then be satisfied. So far as I am concerned, I intend to plant and sow, not only in the month of May, but in the month of June, and in the month of July, and I will continue my labors to raise what is necessary to sustain life, as long as the season lasts; and if I raise nothing I shall be just as well satisfied as though I raised an abundance, at least I ought to be. If the people will take this course, it will reconcile them to the providences of the Almighty.

I am happy and thankful to be able to say, as far as I have received information in the midst of this people called Latter Day Saints, that there is certainly an improvement in their understanding, and an advancement in their knowledge of the things of God. A good spirit prevails, and contentment, peace and joy seem to pervade the bosoms of those who walk humbly before God. Yet, whenever we go to meet with the saints we can say, as it was said in olden times, satan is there also. We find the works and power of the enemy, we find that in the midst of the kingdom of God, or in other words, in the net that was cast forth to gather the people, there are good and bad. So it will be, until the time comes to gather the good and throw away the bad, which is not now. But in regard to those who desire to be saints, and who try to be saints, I can say there is an increase in their knowledge, in their faith, and in their understanding. And now I wish more particularly to see an increase of resignation to the will of God, of doing everything that is possible to build up this kingdom, and of submitting themselves and all their affairs into his hand; and I wish to see this done cheerfully, and a patient waiting for the result of his providences.

There are two subjects which I now wish to speak upon. The coal beds which we visited in Sanpete, I think can be made available for fuel, even in this place, at perhaps half or two thirds of the expense of our present method of procuring fuel, for our home fires, for the public works, smith shops, etc. I will say to the brethren here, that I expect the brethren in San Pete will soon send the terms upon which they will deliver coal in this city, and when they do so I shall wish to know whether any person in this city will encourage the business. If we turn our attention to coal for fuel, we can easily store away a winter's stock in our cellars and turn the key upon it, and this will actually make some men practically honest, whereas if your wood pile is out of doors they may continue to be dishonest. I speak now of the practice of dishonest people, not of their intent. If we can get men to practice honesty, virtue, and holiness, I am fully of the faith that they will become righteous in their intentions—that the time will come when the Lord will bless them, and make them in reality righteous men and women.

Shall we encourage the coal trade or not? Shall we encourage the opening of a mine, and have coal brought to this market? It would no doubt be disagreeable at first to the Americans, or to the majority of them, but people who have lived from their youth by a coal fire admire it. Its use is accompanied with some dust, but I will offset that inconvenience with one to which we are subjected when burning wood; then our houses are often infested with spiders, bugs, ants, and other insects, which has always been a great annoyance to me. I have often almost dreaded to bring an armful of wood into the house, lest such insects should drop from it. True, these are small items, but I will tell you one thing with regard to life, it is the small inconveniences which are interwoven with our existence that mar the peace of mankind, more than the greater afflictions, disappointments, and perplexities men meet with as they pass along in this probation. But enough on this topic, for the present.

We have visited the Iron works in Cedar City, Iron county, and as far as I am capable of judging, I will say, that the brethren have done as well as men could possibly do, considering their impoverished circumstances and the inconveniences they have had to labor under. They have probably progressed better than any other people would upon the face of the earth. They are without sufficient capital to rapidly accomplish so great a work, and many are without suitable clothing, and almost destitute of bedding, and other things necessary to supply the common comforts of life for themselves and families. Although they have been thus destitute, yet in the midst of all that, they have progressed almost equal to men of capital in the older states.

I am not familiarly acquainted with the fluxing or separating the mettle from the ore, but those who understand building furnaces and their operations, are aware that it is very injurious for a large and expensive furnace to blow out, as they call it, hence policy requires the blast to be continued as long as possible. I have learned of late, from men of experience in these matters, why it is desirable to continue the heat, it is because no furnace can be heated up for two or three weeks and then blow out, or stop, without risk of spoiling the furnace, or destroying its lining; and it frequently so injures the furnace that it has to be rebuilt, or at least, a portion of it. Hence when it costs from one to five thousand dollars to prepare a furnace to bear a long blast, it is a great loss to any company to have it blow out in a short time.

Our brethren who have been operating in Iron county, have a very fine furnace, but they are so weak handed as not to be able to continue the blast over fourteen days, and I have learned that they want help. This is the main object of my speaking upon this subject, and my mind inclines in favor of their having it, and I want to see whether the brethren will turn out with their teams and help them. The Church has done much for them, and we are still intending to aid. Our last winter's operations have helped them; the Territory took two shares, and the Trustee in Trust two; still they are not able to carry on the business profitably. Iron we need, and iron we must have. We cannot well do without it, and have it we must, if we have to send to England for it. We have an abundance of the best quality of iron ore. A trial furnace was made and kept hot for sixteen days, and produced as good pig mettle as can be found in the world, this they puddled and brought forth excellent iron. I believe the castings made from the pigs will be superior to any in the world. I repeat that iron we must have, and we are right on the threshold of obtaining it; we have our feet on the step, and our hand holds the latch of the door that leads to the possession of this invaluable material.

From the time I first went to Iron county until now, I had thought that perhaps the brethren were dilatory—my feelings were tried, I would not say, however, that I had suspicions pertaining to the doings of the Iron Company there; but let that be as it may, it is all right with me now, the iron we must have. From the time I went to San Pete, and saw that beautiful coal bed averaging eight feet thick, with their stony strata of nine, five, and three inches, which probably will give out, and learned that iron ore was close by the coal bed, I took into consideration the distance from Cedar City to this place, and the distance from here to San Pete. When I had weighed all the circumstances my mind balanced in favor of the works at Cedar City for the present; and if I can get brethren to join me I will send one or two teams myself, with teamsters. We want fifteen good teams, with men with them who are willing to take hold and quarry out the ore and the coal, and get wood, and lime, or anything else that is wanted. Twenty or twenty-five men, besides these teamsters, are wanted, and we wish to send them now, in the fore part of the season. If we will do this, and we can if we have a mind to, I suppose that in two or three weeks after they arrive there, the blast furnace can be kept running for several months, or until they are obliged to stop in consequence of the deficiency of water.

There is a large stream of water there, but it is a singular stream, sometimes it will sweep across the flat carrying down rocks that would weigh perhaps twenty or thirty tons, and appear as though it would sweep everything before it; and when the cold weather comes, and you would naturally think that you were going to have water to turn a mill wheel, or to create a blast for the furnace, and every use for which it might be needed, in one freezing night it will be closed up, insomuch that there will not be enough to water a horse.

That is a singular feature, but it is the way it operates. The brethren are now making an engine so that they can continue their blast through the winter. If any are disposed to forward this work, I call upon them to lend their aid, to send the men and teams, and we can have the iron.

The distance from here to the iron works is about 290 miles. This should not deter us from bringing iron from there, though it could be quicker come at if iron works were established at San Pete, which is not much over 100 miles from here. I have this to say, if any of the brethren feel disposed (and as the grasshoppers have taken their crops, and they have not much to do) to go there, I think it would be a good course to pursue. There is plenty of grain there; I could have bought wheat, I do not know but thousands of bushels, at a dollar per bushel; but as sure as you send men there it will be raised to three dollars; that is incorrect policy, and, as Jesus said, the children of this world are wiser than the children of light.

I have asked this people not to sell their grain, but preserve it to a day of need, but sell it they would. I have then said, will you sell it for a dollar and a quarter per bushel, and let that be the standing price? "No, we will have two dollars per bushel for it." I then said, well brethren, will you keep it at two dollars and not sell it to the gentiles cheaper than that? "No, I will not, but I will have no more than a dollar and a quarter of a gentile." This is a great mistake in the dealings of the people one with another.

I will bring my remarks to a close on this subject. I have had a very pleasant ride through the southern settlements, and in a much shorter time than usual; this was due to the good weather, and the improvements in the roads. We had very pleasant weather, and a very good time. We started from Parowan, which is two hundred and fifty-one miles from here, on the morning of the 22d, traveled thirty seven miles and turned out our animals. They, however, would not graze, but went to playing, and the brethren said, let us drive further next day. We drove fifty miles next day, and on the day following sixty; yesterday I took supper in Springville, and took breakfast to-day in Great Salt City, distance sixty miles from Springville. We camped out as much as possible, which was good for our health.

If the people should conclude to take short excursions with their families, except the smallest children, it would be much to their comfort, and would cheer them up, and I really have some idea of adopting the plan. Though you know what they say about me in the east; should I take my ninety wives, and their children, with carriages and wagons enough to convey them, it would make such a vacuum here, and so many others would wish to go, that there would be no Salt Lake City. I think I will take a few of them, but I dare not take the whole, for if I did they would then know how many wives I have got, and that would not do.

I have visited the different settlements many times, and have invited everybody to go. I now give a standing invitation again; I wish everybody to go that can go without interfering with their business at home. I invite everybody. I am soon going north to explore in the mountains, and I invite you to go. Take your wives, but not your babies, unless you take a cradle along to keep them quiet.

The out door air is what the people need for health, it is good for them to camp out. Close houses are injurious to the health; if our houses were every one of them leveled to the ground, and we were obliged to live in our wagons and tents, the people would be healthier, from year to year, than they are now. Good houses are comfortable and very convenient, and please our feelings, and are tolerably healthful when properly ventilated. Let us do as Bro. Kimball recommends, that is, if we cannot raise grain, raise houses, and build the best houses we can think of. If you wish to build a house, build as good a one as you can imagine. Some men have not faith to do this. As to means, they have it in their own arm, in their bones and sinews. A great many think and say that they cannot do it: you know cannot never did accomplish much in this world. I never require five dollars to begin to build a house worth five thousand. I do not know that I ever had that much to begin to build with, and I have built a great may houses, both for myself and for others. I have never built two houses alike, and I do not expect to in time or eternity, but I mean to improve every time I begin. Build the best houses you can imagine; and above all things else let this people be faithful to their God, and their religion, keep their vows and covenants, and walk humbly before him, that we may receive the blessings we anticipate, which may God grant, for Christ's sake:—Amen.

What Hope Did.

It stole on its pinions of snow to the bed of disease; and the sufferer's frown became a smile, the emblem of peace and endurance.

It went to the house of mourning—and from the lips of sorrow there came sweet and cheerful songs.

It laid its head upon the arm of the poor, which was stretched forth at the command of unholy impulse, and saved him from disgrace and ruin.

It dwelt like a living thing in the bosom of the mother, whose son tarried long after the promised time of his coming, and saved her desolation, and the "care that killeth."

It hovered about the head of the youth who had become the Ishmael of society; and led him on to works which even his enemies praised.

It snatched the maiden from the jaws of death and went with an old man to Heaven.

No—hope, my good brother. Have it. Reckon it on your side. Wrestle with it that it may not depart. It may lessen your pains. Life is hard enough at best, but Hope shall lead you over its mountains, and sustain you amid its billows. Part with all beside—but keep thy hope.

Hydrophobia.

"It is said that in every instance where a person is bitten by a mad dog, small pustules make their appearance sooner or later on the under tide of the tongue, but generally in from six to nine days. These pustules must be opened with a sharp-pointed instrument, as they are too tough to break of themselves; and the matter must be discharged and spit out, or it will be reabsorbed, which reabsorption is said to cause the paroxysms termed hydrophobia. The above is the substance of a communication which appeared in the New Orleans Tropic some years since, from the pen of a Southern physician, who says: "In 1832 I was called to visit a negro woman who had been bitten by a mad dog, and by pursuing the treatment here laid down, I was successful in curing her. This course is the same that was recommended by Prof. Marochitti of Moscow, in 1820, aad proved effectual, and my first intimation of this mode was from an English magazine published forty years ago, containing a communication from a gentleman recently returned from Tartary, where mad dogs are common and this method of treatment usual and successful."

Worth Knowing.

One pound of green copperas (costing seven cents) dissolved in one quart of water and poured down a privy, will effectually concentrate and destroy the foulest smells. For water closets on board ships and steamboats, about hotels and other places, there is nothing so nice to cleanse and purify those places, as simple green copperas, dissolved; and for sick rooms, it may be placed under the bed in anything which will hold water, and thus render a hospital or other places of the sick free from unpleasant smells. For butcher's stalls, fishmarkets, slaughter houses, sinks, and wherever there are putrid and offensive gasses, dissolve copperas and sprinkle it about, and in a very few days the "bad smell" will pass away. If a cat, rat or mouse dies about the house and sends forth an offensive gas, place some dissolved copperas in a cup or jar anywhere within "smelling distance," and the cure is sure. I have known a stock of goods which were nearly spoiled by a skunk under a store, to be cleaned and restored by simple sprinkling dissolved copperas about the floor.

A Mixture for Washing Clothes.

In Berlin, the washerwomen are said to use a mixture of two ounces of turpentine and a quarter of an ounce of spirits of sal ammoniac, well mixed together. The mixture is put into a bucket of water, in which half a pound of soap has been dissolved. Into this mixture the dirty clothes are immersed during the night, and the next day washed. The most dirty cloth is perfectly free of all dirt, and after two rinsings in fresh water, the cloth has not the least smell of turpentine. The cloth does not require so much rubbing, and fine linen is much longer preserved by it.

An Intoxicated Soldier Tied and Gagged—Death of the Victim.

From the Baltimore Republican of July 12, we have an account of a Louis Loup, a private soldier at Fort McHenry, being most brutally whipped and gagged to death. It would seem that he had excited the ire of his sergeant while in a state of intoxication, who knocked him down upon a platform and beat him severely, and then put him into the guard house among the prisoners, where he beat him most unmercifully, leaving a large pool of blood where Loup lay. About one o'clock this morning, Morrow, the Sergeant of the Guard, had Loup, who was dreadfully lacerated and presenting a most horrid sight, and unable to stand, tied up to the flag-staff. On having his hands tied up, poor Loup cried out in most pitiful and heart-rending tones, "O, Shargent! O, Shargent!—O, More! O, More! let me down!—O, Shargent! O, More!—O, don't!—do let me down—let me down!" But his entreaties were of no avail. The anger of the cruel sergeant could not be softened. He seized quite a large stick of wood, and placed it in Loup's mouth to silence his cries. The poor soldier remained thus tied up and gagged until three o'clock this morning, when he was taken down a corpse.

International Extradition of Fugitives from Justice.

The United States have treaties stipulating the mutual extradition of fugitives from justice with—

1. Great Britain, for murder, piracy, arson, robbery, forgery, utterance of forged paper.

2. Hawaltan Islands, for same crimes above enumerated.

3. France, for murder, attempt to commit murder, rape, forgery, arson, embezzlement by public officers, robbery, burglary.

4. Prussia, Bavaria, Hanover, Saxony, Wurtemburg, Electoral Hesse, Ducal Hesse, Saxe-Wetmar-Eisenach, Saxe-Sciningra, Saxe-Attenburgh, Saxe-Cobnig-Goths, Brunswick, Anholt Dessau, Anholt Bernburg, Nassau, Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, Schwarzburg-Soudershausen, Waldeck, the two Reuss, Lippe, Schaumburg Lippe, Hesse Hamburg, Brennen, Mecklenburg Strelitz and Mecklenburg Schweain.

The course of proceedure to obtain extradition in the United States is for the foreign minister to exhibit to the President, through the Secretary of State, proper evidence of the institution of process in the case by the judicial authorities of the foreign country; upon which the President gives permission to the foreign goverement to bring the case before some proper magistrate of the United States; upon a proper hearing and examination before whom, and his certificates of the criminality of the accused, extradition is ordered by the President, through the Secretary of State.

Death Caused by a Corpse.

In a farm-house near Liberty, Missouri, the mistress of the house became ill one morning, having, according to symptoms, received an attack of cholera. Her husband had left the house at daybreak, and her only daughter, who was then with her, sent for a physician. After a few hours the latter arrived, but was already met at the door and received by the sobbing girl, with the cry, "she is dead!" He was conducted into the room where the corpse lay, examined it, and directed the daughter not to allow the interment until twenty-four hours had elapsed. He had scarcely done so when the corpes nodded significantly. The daughter saw this motion, and was so horrified that she fell down dead on the spot. It is a well known fact that persons who die of cholera retain the warmth of the blood for a long time, frequently alarming bystanders by contraction of the muscles.—[N. Y. Times.

Taking the Census.

The Albany Knickerbocker, gives the following experience of one of the marshals in that city, who called upon a gentleman from Germany, residing in Broad street:

"Who lives here?"

"Yaw."

"What's your name?"

"Sharmany, on der Rhine."

"What's your father's name?"

"Nix for staw."

"When did you arrive in Albany?"

"Mit a steamboats."

"Got any children?"

"Yaw—two barrels mit krout."

"How long have you resided in this house?"

"Two rooms and der basments."

"Who owns the building?"

"I pays noting. Hanse pays der same twice a month."

"Where did you live last year?"

"Across der red store as you come up mit der market in your right hand, perhind der pump vhat pelongs to der blacksmid shops."

The marshal having entered all this, made up his mind that he would push ahead and examine Hanse, who lives up stairs "mit der bannisters." We shall note his success at an early day.

A wag entered a store in London, some years ago, which had for its sign, "The Two Baboons," and addressing himself to the proprietor, said:—"I wish to see your partner." "I have no partner, sir." "I beg your pardon, sir, and hope you'll excuse the mistake." "Oh, there's no harm done; but what made you think there were two of us?" "Your sign—The Two Baboons."

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUG. 4, 1855.

Longevity.

In the prophetic description of the regenerated earth, we have the announcement that the old men will fill up the measure of their days, and join in the dance with the young men and maids. A London journalist remarking on this, says appositely: "They will be wise then; they will not have wasted themselves either in excess of eating or drinking, or of mental or bodily labor; they will have studied health as well as wealth, and discovered what the true art of living really is." A fine illustration of the above prophetic passage is in the remark of Phillip Carnaro, a centenarian, who applied himself to the secret of health, and confessed, when in his ninety-fifth year, that he was as healthy, merry and happy as if he were but twenty-five. To be sure, Carnaro had not, like most men, heavy labor of a manual or intellectual character to perform, but yet he considered the labor of digestion as a thing to be counted on, and gave his body as little to do in that particular as possible. The assertion of Buffon, that the man who does not die of accidental causes, reaches everywhere the age of ninety or a hundred years, was wrong in the use of the word accidental. There are men who, with malice prepense, set about perseveringly to shorten their lives. John Haller confessed that man might live not less than two centuries; he came nearer the truth, for this supposition took account of all the means that might be employed to that end. The animals, who commonly live according to the laws of their nature, have a prescribed time. But who shall account of the brief average of human life, as compared with the lengthened term that certain individuals leading even an artificial life arrive at, without resorting for explanation to causes within control. From the artificial life led by past generations, it may be impossible for those who would be relieved from conventional trammels, to throw off altogether the hereditary transmitted influences that militate against longevity. But each generation might outlive the preceding one, until, finally, the maximum was obtained.

Buffon attributed the longevity reached by man in the antediluvian period, by affirming that the earth, being less solid and compact, there was a proportionate absence of consistency in what it produced, rendering the bony structure more inclined to the cartilaginous. A writer supporting this view remarks: "Age is evidently a drying up of the texture of the body—a hardening of its parts. This growing result of time is perceptible throughout the frame. The bones of youth are soft, and the flesh of youth is juicy. Even the very plumpness and hardness of young flesh is but the imprisonment of juice. This juiceness is youth—its converse is age; and it is seen everywhere—from the skin to the bone. The very amount of age is determined by it. Fat hides it a little, but fat is not juice, and therefore it wants energy, it wants elasticity, it is easily tired, and has very little restorative power. It is, therefore, older than leanness. It is a sort of concealed age. Fat people are older than they seem to be, and the exercise they take to keep down their fat, is wasting to their strength."

It has been facetiously said, that "instinct is weak in man; and he may live thirty or forty years, before he discovers by reason what a cat learns by instinct in a month." It were well if science, now contributing so largely to the destruction of men, were concentered in this subject—the art of prolonging life.

Necessity, indeed, may compel this application, for in the apparently inevitable spreading of the European war, the means of life by the withdrawment of labor from agriculture, and the destruction or locking up of grain in inaccessible localities, must fearfully ruinate it.

It is said that already half the population of Paris are reduced to actual privation by the excessive price of all kinds of food.

When bread has been made from saw-dust, and a rich soup from bones, the latter being subjected to the action of steam in a closed iron boiler, it is time that the nutriment to be found in other than those ordinarily resorted to, were discovered. The fullness of the earth is sufficient for all God's creatures; these have but to obey the laws of life and being, and render available the resources placed by science within their reach, to flourish like the palm tree, which, after a hundred years has passed over it, is found to have all the freshness and all the vigor of youth. We may add, as a statistical fact, that the average duration of human life throughout the world is 33 years, but this is on the calculation that one-quarter die previous to the age of seven years; one-half before reaching seventeen.

After all the speculations, however, of philanthropists and philosophers on the above subject, the real cause of longevity will be found in a return to first, primitive principles, and a restoration of corrupt man and a corrupted earth to their original pristine excellency and purity. These little puerile principles and theories are all well enough to amuse people with, but where is the remedy? It is true the scripture says "the days of a man shall become as the days of a tree;" that a child shall die a hundred years old;" but these things can only be brought about in connection with the renewed man and a "renewed earth," wherein dwelleth righteousness. It was not as Buffon states, that the antedeluvians lived longer on account of the then "porosity of the earth," but that man's system was more pure and unadulterated; he was nearer the original stock; his body had not become so impregnated and debilitated with disease, the consequence of lasciviousness, debauchery and corruption. There had not then been so many plagues entailed upon man, the consequence of transgression; nor did the earth, although cursed for man's sake, emit so much impure miasma or deadly effluvia as at present; producing malaria, fever, ague, cholera, and all the other plagues that infest the earth. Man forsook God; by doing so his body became gradually debilitated by his own corruptions; the withdrawing of the spirit of God, and God's judgments on man and the earth, until, from the stout man of six, seven, eight and nine hundred years, he has descended to the shortened, puerile, pigmy, delicate thing of thirty on an average. The question now is, what will bring him back? Nothing but the restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world was." Man must first find out God, and finding him, return to him, and seeking, obtain wisdom from him, not individually, but nationally; this wisdom must be practically applied, not in one little reform only, but in all things, in virtue, sobriety, chastity, morality, religion, politics, the body spirit; the whole man, nations and the earth must be regenerated. The world must come under the tuition of God, "as it is written they shall all be taught of God," and not only taught, but be obedient to his laws; and as these laws and his wisdom are more congenial to the wants of man than their own folly, health, strength, life and years will increase, until man's "days shall be as the days of a tree;" man and the earth return to their original position, and all things be restored. This we think will be much more effectual than Philip Carnaro's theory, or that of John Haller Buffon, or than any of our present modern reformers Owen, Fourier, Cabot; than socialism, teetotalism, or any of our present partial reforms.

A Mission for the Dispatch.

THE New York Sunday Dispatch, after again endorsing the celebrated Jack the Giant Killer book, edited by the alias Mrs. Ward, thinks and gives his opinion very sagely, that somebody ought to be sent to watch the Mormons, and find out some of their evils. They don't need any secret spies in New York; they are found out without watching. Like the Dispatch, they exhibit themselves. Since the settlement of the Mormons in the valley, perhaps no less than two or three hundred thousand people have passed through Utah, thousands of them going a distance of 300 miles among the settlements. But the wily Mormons, somehow or other, manage to elude their vigilance; of course it is easy for a population of forty or fifty thousand to hide their iniquity. We move that this sapient editor be appointed by the President as minister plenipotentiary to examine into the conduct of the Mormons; that he takes his favorite author Mrs. Ward for a guide, and Mr. Fuller for his Sancho Panza; that as he passes through the country he have full powers to enlist the Cheyenne Indians to help to pass through the country of the Pawnees; that in passing through among the Snakes, Crows, and Blackfeet, he may be taught to lie more ingeniously than he can at present. On his arriving at the South Pass, Mrs. Ward would conduct him in safety both over the hard rocky bottom of the Pacific Spring's rushing stream, as well as the gushing mountain torrents of the Big and Little Sandies; and that on his return (if such an auspicious event ever happens to the country,) he may give a full, true, and particular account of his voyages, valor, hair-breadth escapes, Quixotic encounters, &c.; and that he be rewarded with a commission as fourth corporal in the Carson League for his self-denial, patriotism and bravery, and his persevering assiduity in ferreting out and exposing this pandemonium of iniquity.

He would in all probability find a nation of Lilliputians, who would furnish him materials to bind this monster Mormonism as it lays asleep in the mountains.

A House Divided Against Itself.

It appears that Palmerston still retains his place. This is not to be construed into a feeling of confidence or an indication that he is the man to pilot England out of her troubles. The Peace Party is daily gaining ground. Those who have watched the re-active influence of the fierce and sanguinary struggle going on on the outskirts of Sebastopol, may easily imagine the social and political ruptures which a much longer continuance of war would bring about. Still, no immediate change is at present visible. Austria, by a reduction of her army, endeavors to prevent the untimely exhaustion of her resources, and commerce, including even that of Russia, has not greatly departed from her accustomed course. Yet the war tells with dire force on all communities. Already a depression is perceptible in many branches of industry, and differently from the history of former wars, the public abroad are quite ready to listen to unpleasant suggestions as to their cause. The cloud small as a man's hand, threatens, if the present course of British statesmanship is persevered in, to cover the whole horizon, and engulph a whole continent in war and bloodshed. No man is to be found abroad who possesses sanguine expectations in regard to this war. There is not one dreary prophecy as to its effects which has failed to be realized. No statesman dare indulge even a poetic figure in speaking of it.

We have to deal with fact—hard fact. Distress prevails to an extent which is not the less because it is doubted and denied. The policy pursued has certainly given rise to considerable differences of opinion. By the revelations of Lord John Russell, we find that even in the same cabinet there was no concurrence, that throughout, in the Aberdeen as in the Palmerston Ministry, the exemptive government, exercising such an important influence on the course of the war, have been utterly confounded amidst transpiring events. That which gives peace to England, as a commercial country, will alone be worthy to receive unqualified approbation. Diplomacy can attain to this peace; but can that peace have security without war and its material guarantees? This is the problem which events alone can unravel.

Methodist Preachers in 1839, vs. Methodist Preachers in 1855.

To the Editors of the Chicago Dem. Press:

I hasten to inform you of another mob in Platte County. The Methodist Church North had an appointment for quarterly meeting near Forley. The presiding elder, preachers and congregation had assembled and concluded the morning service, and were proceeding, when a mob of about eighty armed men made their appearance. The congregation, it being warm, were seated in the shade in front of the house, and the preachers were inside. When Dr. Walker led the mob to the door where Rev. Mr. Moore was preaching, and seizing him, Mr. Morris drew his revolver and cocked it, when some one caught his arm and took it from him. The mob then rushed on him, yelling, "Hang him! shoot him!" Some in the congregation interceded for him, and after a long parley they consented to let him go, under a pledge to leave and not preach any more till they gave him permission. The rest of the preachers escaped during the disturbance, and the congregation broke up and dispersed. The preachers were all armed with revolvers. They are aware of the threats daily made against them. The mob brought tar and feathers and hemp along with them. The excitement is great. These humble and pious ministers of religion will be driven out, and utter lawlessness prevail.

In haste, TRAVELLER.

Platte County, Mo., June 30, 1855.

These "humble and pious men" are now reaping the fruits of the seed that was so diligently sown by some of their humble and pious brethren, in Caldwell, Dewit and Davis counties, in Missouri, in 1839. We happened to be travelling to Far West, Caldwell Co., Mo., when stopping at a friend's house in Dewit, an armed mob of 150 men came down upon the inhabitants of that village, then about 24 in number; for a pretext they brought the Sheriff along with them, with the avowed purpose of serving a process upon a Mr. Hinckle, a Mormon, thinking he would resist, but for the real purpose of mobbing the people. Mr. Hinckle submitted to the process, which baffled in a measure the designs of the mob. To obviate all difficulty, however, two humble and pious men, Sessiel Woods and Abbot Hancock, the one a Baptist and the other a Presbyterian minister, of Carrolton, Carrol Co., Mo., led the mob on, who were kept in check by the Mormons from committing any particular outrage at that time. They, however, after firing off their guns, and showing other demonstrations of pious hostility, passed resolutions, pledging themselves to "return in two days, and if the Mormons were not gone, to burn their houses and throw their goods into the Missouri river." This they religiously observed.

A MR. BOGARD, a humble and pious Methodist preacher, headed a mob with which he burned houses, destroyed property and life, and committed some of the grossest outrages that ever disgraced humanity. Having got his hand in with the Mormons, he commenced on others, and shot a man who was not a Mormon. This, of course, was neither pious nor religious, and could not be tolerated. He left and preached his way to Texas, where the people, no doubt, would be very much edified with his piety. These circumstances took place in the neighborhood of this late disgraceful affair. We believe that a Methodist preacher was the ringleader of that band of ruffians that murdered Joseph and Hyrum Smith, in Carthage jail. The Methodist papers have been the foremost among the pious journals in seeking by false representation to bring persecution upon the Mormons; whether they were all pious people that were led by these pious, humble leaders, we of course don't know. Perhaps, after all, there is a retributive justice that may even reach the cases of pious humble people. They have opened the flood-gates; the waters rise higher than they bargained for; "they have sown the wind, they reap the whirlwind." They have raised a tempest that threatens their own bark. We think with the Scriptures—"With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure you meet, it shall be measured to you again."

Locusts, Grasshoppers and Crickets.

The Herald of last Saturday has a long article on the above subject, and thinks that the Mormons will have to starve, or move, either to the islands of the sea, or mix up with the people of the United States.

Now, as it regards starving, that is out of the question. They have been starved and lost and destroyed so often, that they have got used to it. Concerning a journey to the Pacific islands, they most assuredly won't go till they get ready; and as it regards his last proposition, with all their alleged impurities, they would be afraid of being contaminated by the Gentiles. We certainly felt a little surprised that a man of his unblemished morals should propose their coming here to inoculate the virtuous people of the States with their polygamic heresies. No, no, Mr. Bennett! the Mormons won't come; they would rather fight grasshoppers than Gentiles. The grasshoppers only take the bread—the Gentiles take bread, houses, lands and character. But it is a judgment; be it so; "Judgment first begins at the House of God." If so, when the wicked and ungodly have their share, the Herald and others will have to look out.

Utah.

WE have received the Deseret News of June 6th. One week later than we gave before. We learn from it the present prospect for crops is rather gloomy, they have been replanting and sowing and using every exertion to secure crops, with what success remains to be seen. We extract from the Deseret News.

HOME ITEMS.

In places the grasshoppers increase in destructiveness as they increase in size, and, besides their allies the crickets, the locusts are reported as hatching out quite numerously at the eastern base of the west mountains. Should the three classes of kindred devourers league against the present efforts of re-sowing and replanting fields and gardens, and destroying them, the crops will not only be very late, but will stand a slim chance of coming to maturity.

Wheat and flour are becoming rather scarce, though a few are still selling at $6 a hundred, in small quantities to accommodate the brethren, and among those honorable and considerate dealers in produce it may not be amiss to mention the firm of Hyde & Price.

The following minutes of a Conference held in San Bernardino, will be interesting to many.

FROM MINUTES BY R. R. HOPKINS.

A Conference was held in San Bernardino on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of April, 1855, at which the First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Presiding Patriarch were unanimously sustained, and also the following local authorities: Amasa Lyman and Charles C. Rich, Presidents of the Church in Southern California. David Seely, President of the Stake at San Bernardino, and his counselors, Samuel Rolfe and Simeon Andrews. Theodore Turley, Jefferson Hunt, B. F. Taylor, Charles Crisman, William Matthews, Joseph Matthews, Sidney Tanner, Daniel M. Thomas, Andrew Lytle, William J. Cox, Alfred Bebee, J. H. Rollins, members of the High Council. William Crosby, Presiding Bishop, and his counselors, Albert W. Collins and Robert M. Smith. Nathan Tinney, Bishop of San Bernardino Ward, and his counselors, Orlando H. Carter and John S. Harris. Richard R. Hopkins, Recorder of the Stake. Daniel M. Thomas, Historian of the Stake.

The sacrament was administered during the afternoon of the 8th. During the conference 13 were re-baptized; the weather was pleasant, and the attendance general. Adjourned to the 6th of next September.

PAROWAN.

[From Elder W. Woodruff's Journal.]

May 21st, elders John P. Hall, Charles Hall, Priddy Meeks, Horace M. Alexander, Samuel Gould, and Elijah Elmer were chosen to fill vacancies in the High Council at Parowan, and were set apart to that office under the hands of elders J. M. Grant, W. Woodruff, and J. C. L. Smith.

ARRIVAL.

The Hon. John M. Bernhisel, late Delegate from Utah, arrived on the 5th inst., in good health and spirits, and highly gratified with the privilege of again greeting his family and friends, and enjoying the rest and quiet of his peaceful mountain home.

WE learn from the Luminary, of July 21, that "President Erastus Snow left for Atchinson and the Plains, on the Polar Star, Tuesday evening last." Professor Spencer the present Editor says "that he has ordered his supper to be prepared on the evening of the 8th of December next, at his usual boarding house." Now we think that supper will go cold, or somebody else will eat it. We could have believed the statement if he had appointed the time to eat his supper at home; but this coming back in such a hurry won't go down. We think that when friend Snow gets home, he will find so much more of the snowy element, the affinity will be so strong that he can't leave. We'll engage to pay for all the supper he eats, and wine he drinks, that night, at St. Louis.

Mob Justice.

A man by the name of David F. Maybery, who had been tried, found guilty, and condemned by the Court at Janesville, Ill., for the wanton murder of Andrew Alger, was taken from the hands of the officers, dragged through the streets by a rope, and hung in the public square.

IN Gosport, Va., on the 1st inst., there were three new cases of yellow fever and three deaths. In Norfolk there were six new cases, but no deaths.

FOR THE MORMON.

Family Government.

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

ALL governments from family to National should avoid the extremes of tyranny on the one hand, and a careless, indifferent looseness, on the other; extremes in all things are dangerous and unhealthy—while the medium is the more safe and healthy position.

A man may exercise his prerogative of authority in that arbitrary manner, that shall annihilate all feelings of love or respect, which is so necessary between governor and governed, to ensure successful government. On the other hand, he may fail to command becoming respect, by allowing others the prerogative that belongs to himself. This is not unfrequently the case in family government; the man, whose rightful prerogative it is to govern his family, resigns it into the hands of his wife, who in turn is not unfrequently governed more or less, by her children. Such is not in accordance with the laws of Nature, or of Nature's God. There is a time, season, and place for all things; and "order is heaven's first law."

The grand starting point of all government is family or patriarchal—and such is the government of heaven. Paternity holds a natural, unalienable right to govern to the utmost extent of its offspring. The son that does not conform to the requirements of his father, is called in holy writ an alien, and not a son. Abraham, the great patriarch, was made such, because the Lord saw in him that integrity and firmness, necessary to rule his house in righteousness. Behold, here is wisdom! if Abraham was exalted by God to an exalted position, because of his ability to govern his household, what kind of a position will those be called to, who suffer their household to rule them? "Surely your turning of things up side down shall be esteemed as the potters' clay." I am grieved when I see the order of heaven perverted as I almost daily and hourly do, in these things. I sometimes become indignant, and it is with much difficulty that I am enabled to suppress my feelings. Under these feelings, I have been led to say within myself, either let me live and train up my offspring as becometh a man of God, always commanding that respect due to a father, or let me pass beyond the vail, and never live to witness the indignities that some have had to encounter. I may be over-sensative on this point, but these are my feelings, and they are the result of serious and repeated reflections.

There is principle associated with this that may not always appear at first sight. "Honour thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long upon the earth," says the Lord through Moses.

The above plainly teaches that an adherence to family discipline is conducive to longevity; a fact that I believe can be demonstrated and maintained philosophically, as well as scripturally. Anarchy and confusion feed an epidemic—order and discipline starve it. But I am digressing; I have briefly referred to the extremes, Tyranny and Anarchy, and recommended the medium as the most consistent course. It is not essential that a man rule his family as with a rod of iron, to enable him to maintain that authority that he considers to be his right—not with voluminous and boisterous words and frequent stripes, but a steady, straightforward, consistent course, with an eye single to the good of all within his jurisdiction. Let him have confidence in his own ability, and inspire his family with the same confidence, by never deceiving in any matter, and always being consistent with himself.

Dishonesty in man or woman in the family relation, destroys confidence, and is an ingredient with which no family government can be happily and successfully perpetuated.

A harsh reprimand to others can never be made a proper substitute for the inconsistencies of oneself. It is a custom with some persons to charge whatever difficulty may occur, to some one, though the person charged may be no more, nor even so much to blame as themselves. It reminds me of the "old woman" who had acquired a habit of this kind, to the extent that whatever unfavorable occurred, would exclaim, instantly, "I told you so." One of her sons, feeling a little musical on one occasion, in order to have a little fun at her expense, ran suddenly into the house, exclaiming, "Mother! mother! the cow has eat up the grindstone!" "I told you so!" said she, not giving herself time to reflect, "you should have put it into the barn."

Such pictures are frequently presented before us in life, though not always quite so highwrought. Both fathers and mothers are apt to accuse their children of misdemeanors too hastily, and afterwards find themselves mistaken and have to retract. Better take a little more time to investigate at the start.

Parents should never promise anything to children, without fulfilling strictly that promise, whether it be a present from a toy shop, or a flagellation, as the case may be; the principle is the same in either, and both are necessary at times; the latter, however, much less frequently than the former, where a well-regulated policy is pursued.

Children are philosophers; and I have frequently been amused at the liberal construction they will put upon the laws of their parents, and when called in question, the native eloquence with which they would maintain that portion that favored their position.

Children should never be punished for accidents, nor ever go unpunished for open, wilful rebellion.

Every member of a family should regard scrupulously the rights of the others, for although on a smaller scale, they are as sacred and important in their sphere, as those of an Imperial potentate.

A volume might be filled with hints like the preceding, which are correct according to my judgment; but short of that wisdom and intelligence which cometh from God through his holy Spirit, no man, or set of men in any capacity, are capable of governing with any degree of perfection. Landmarks, lighthouses, and buoys are quite necessary and essential guides to the mariner, but the greatest essential, and that which is indispensable, is judgment and skill in the mariner himself. Let fathers and mothers have the "fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom," obtain and retain the gift of the Holy Ghost, which the Gospel vouchsafes to the obedient, and they have a teacher that needs not to be taught—they need not to borrow from another's cistern, but have in "themselves a well of water springing up unto everlasting life."

FOR THE MORMON.

A Glance at Australia.

AT this moment, when Australia is undergoing a thorough political, commercial and social revolution, it may be worth taking a thorough bird's-eye view of her. Pressing through the thin and vapory haze of the Pacific, we catch its interminable ranges of quaintly fashioned hills, some clothed with wood, and others rising bleak and bare and rugged; abundant vegetation in proximity to the evidences of volcanic action. Harbors that might float the navies of the world, engirt by lofty cliffs, and cities perched on promontories, trimmed off by sweeping bays and picturesque headlands, with handsome villas dotting the woods here and there—such is the sea appearance of Australia when first beheld. Passing into the interior, we first encounter places resembling very much little manufacturing English towns, the houses, even to their very bricks and dissimilar appearance to one another as they stand in rows, having quite an English aspect. Advancing, we catch sight of the great chain of mountains, traversing in broken masses the whole extent of the English coast, sending spurs out on either side of it, which diverge into the interior or slope boldly down towards the sea. It is declared that the submarine continuation of the chain can be distinctly recognised as it crosses the Torres Straits, in a line of granite islands which extends as far as the coast of New Guinea. Ascending Mount Kosciusko, 6,800 feet above the level of the sea, let us imagine ourselves looking out, with bird's-eye view, over this veritable continent. The interior range of mountains, after pursuing its course from zone to zone, is beheld sinking into a vast sandy plain, where investigation terminates, and over which prevails a deep and brooding silence. Besides one river, rising in these Australian Alps, and flowing through a lake into the sea, we look in vain for others of any magnitude. Swampy patches of ground, natural depressions of the surface filled with rain, are the apologies for lakes. But there is produced a compensation in the breezes that along the eastern slope sweep in from the sea, and shade is abundantly offered in the thick, umbrageous foliage of the forest trees, interspersed with the graceful acacia and the slender palm tree. Every variety of feathered warbler abounds. We look for colonists and find them in companies at distant intervals, chiefly devoted to agricultural and pastoral pursuits. Herds of cattle range amid the low brushwood, and at the proper time sheep-shearing goes on blithely. Looking more closely, we behold railways forming around these tortuous ridges, railways which by their rapidity and the facilities they offer for the conveyance of stock to market, immeasurably enhance its value, whilst adding largely to that of the land. On rocky ridges, by deep precipices, ravines and gulleys, it pushes on its way, clearing a passage by many a tortuous winding for itself. Some precipitous roads have been transformed into gently sloping declivities, by cutting off the tops of mountains and flinging them into the valley beneath, levelling on a most tremendous scale.

Away through the defiles of the Blue Mountains, we arrive at our first great inland Australian town, made up of hotels, beer shops and public offices; exhausted coal mines, wood cut down, no shelter from sun or wind; and yet we may chance to have lighted on the central point of attraction for artisans, mechanics and shepherds. Convicts rich and affluent abound, mixing with other citizens on 'Change, but debarred communion at other periods. Occasionally an aborigine, with glossy curls of black hair, sable skin, head thrown back, step firm, and chivalrous bearing, glides amidst the throng. He is treacherous and cruel and bloodthirsty in disposition, will burn down the crops of his benefactor, destroy his property, and even have no objections to kill, cook and eat him. They are continually engaged in predatory excursions, after one of which hundreds of sheep are likely to be found missing. It is the smell of roast mutton that commonly guides the pursuers, who generally recover a portion of the stock, and consisting usually of convicts, have hearts which allow them without remorse to inflict the most terrible retributions.

The Summer months in Australia, it is to be remembered, are December, January and February. All then is lifeless in the capital. No attempt in Australia at getting up appearances; no aristocracy; no hereditary loungers; no dowagers on jointures; industry, skill and capital are the qualifications of success. No fox hunting, although attempts have been made to establish it, owing to the large tracts of dense forest and the wide flats of dense sandy soil, where no scent would lie. The thing was tried, but hounds were lost, game was scarce, and in lieu of the legitimate object, the dogs would turn on whatever turned up, sometimes a fat sheep.

Chiefest amid excitements stands that of gold digging, a duplication in its effects of what is beheld in California. It so happened that it was a gentleman from California, who had been there on an unsuccessful search for gold, who discovered those in Australia, struck by the apparent similarity of rocks and strata on his farm. The secret spread, and bushmen, stockmen, shepherds, clerks, drovers, laborers and adventurers flocked in forthwith. Merchants profited by raising productions to an exhorbitant height, and Government, with only 400 men in the district, found itself in a "fix." The Colonial Government, it is well known, asserted its right to a royalty, obtained it, and then surrendered it.

The newly-discovered fields still supply a rich harvest, though it is somewhat singular that the geologic formation of the country in which these are situated differs entirely from that of the scene of the earlier discoveries. The hills are formed of mica slate, without the presence of any quartz veins. Notwithstanding the salubrity of the climate, the traces of strong mental excitement are said to be visible in all the diggers.

The limits of Australian wealth it is not easy to define. The effect this must ultimately have on the relations of Australia with the parent country, appear already pressing. The restrictions of the Land and Emigration Commissioners have had a most prejudicial effect, and whilst unskilful mechanics, bushmen and stockmen, or shepherds, can each earn their five dollars a day, stalwart hands, able to work in legitimate callings, refuse to because the inducements are not of sufficient cogency. Every one flocks to the diggings, and trade languishes. The price of land should be diminished, and its fee simple, on the easiest terms, held out as a bait.

Such is Australia. A revolution has been prophesied, but Government concession may delay it, and the discovery of still larger and more promising gold fields will tend to continue the present artificial state of society. Already, it appears by later advices, that in Australia as at London, the mob have triumphed, and there is an instructive and significant passage in a letter of one of the acquitted rioters, that reveals more than anything else the true state of things, when it is remembered he was acquitted by his own countrymen, to throw off the license laws.

"There are two things," he says, "connected with the late outbreak, which I deeply regret. The first is, that we should have been forced to take up arms at all; and the second is, that when we were compelled to take the field in our own defence, we were unable, through the want of arms, ammunition, and a little organization, to inflict on the real authors of the outbreak the punishment they so richly deserved."

FOR THE MORMON.

Civilization and Barbarism?

CIVILIZATION is a wide term, and one capable of various interpretations. Every people assume to possess it in its highest attained development; understanding this in its connection with their own organization and institutions. Yet each has affirmed that what is directly antagonistic to its notions is barbarian; he who lives in houses affirms the man barbarous that lives in tents, and as though the latter, in adapting himself to the requirements of climate, did not as well consult the laws of his being, as he who, in an inclement climate, and conforming himself to artificial customs, and surrounded by strict social enactments, such as exclude all idea of free individual action, is never master of himself. We will find the merchant, moping for hours upon hours over the books of his counting-house, and wearing out his life as rapidly as possible in his own selfish interests, attributing barbarism, should he chance to pitch on the subject, to the eastern tribes, who wander from one encampment to another, ever communing with nature in her beauty, magnificence and glory. And what does Gov. Young say in his address of the 27th of May:

"The out-door air is what the people need for health; it is good for them to camp out. Close houses are injurious to the health; if our houses were every one of them levelled to the ground, and we were obliged to live in our wagons and tents, the people would be healthier, from year to year, than they are now. Good houses are comfortable and very convenient, and please our feelings, and are tolerably healthy when properly ventilated."

Happily with more knowledge of eastern countries, these prejudices are gradually disappearing, and the history of that repeatedly and by general consent, most "savage" sort of place called New Zealand, supplies facts, which rightly weighed, would remove its last vestiges, by proving that the elements of good and of improvement are in every people. There is nothing in the history of colonial enterprise more striking than the result of European relations with the beautiful islands of New Zealand. It is the testimony of a British writer, that the English have there come in contact with a race "worthy"—this is the term used—to share with themselves one of the fairest portions of the world. There are certainly few instances on record of a people, invaded and dispossessed of their territory, beaten at every point by the triumphs of modern warfare, consenting at last to share its territory with the victors, and practically acquiescing with what goes under the name of civilization. In Eastern countries which have been the theatre of conquest, followed by colonization, the question of supremacy of race is soon disposed of, by the European settler dwindling down, after a generation or two has passed away, infinitely inferior to that of the aborigines. Even in countries of a milder climate, such as northern Africa, the spread of civilization was only partial, and was soon overcome by influences indigenous to the country. The natives of this country have baffled all efforts to improve their condition, and neither the aborigines of Australia or Van Dieman's Land have cared to undergo the process of regeneration according to the sample forwarded them. It has been reserved for the New Zealand people to afford evidence of their appreciating the benefits of civilization. Now, had, what went by the name of "ferocity"—which, so determinedly evinced for many years, made the shores of the country inaccessible, been understood, it would have been found to contain all those elements of greatness with which the Saxon race are so richly endowed. Since the period of the invasion of England by Julius Cæsar history affords no parallel instance of 150,000 inhabitants scattered over a wide area of country, setting at defiance civilized troops furnished with all the appliances of warfare. But the result proved how erroneous was the assumption that the assailants had ignorant savages to contend against. In those tattood aborigines men found officers of consummate skill, and soldiers of a bravery and a discipline in no wise inferior to that of the finest European troops. In the use of the rifle in the art of stockade fortification, the New Zealander proved himself a match. They were found capable of conducting a war patiently, and on the most scientific principles. In the frequent encounters with troops they proved themselves such admirable tactitians that all efforts failed in bringing matters to a final issue; while careful of the lives of their own followers, they never attempted uselessly to shed the lives of their opponents. The fine able-bodied race of people springing up are the best evidences that the great elements of national advancement exist in all hearts, and need only favoring circumstances for their development.

Kansas Legislature.

This body assembled at Pawnee, in pursuance of the Governor's Proclamation, on the 2d of July. The two Houses convened at 12 o'clock, M.

Of the Council, Thomas Johnson was elected President; R. R. Rees, President pro tem.; John A. Halderman, Chief Clerk; Charles H. Grover, Assistant Clerk; and Wm. Godfrey, Door Keeper.

Of the House, J. H. Stringfellow was elected Speaker; Joseph Anderson, Speaker pro tem.; J. M. Lysle, Chief Clerk; John Martin, Assistant Clerk; T. J. B. Cramer, Sergeant-at-Arms.

The Governor's Message was presented and read. On the same day an act was passed by both Houses, entitled "An act declaring the place for holding the session of the Legislative Assembly, and for other purposes;" which was as follows:

"Be it enacted by the Governor and Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Kansas, as follows, to wit:

"Section 1. Until the seat of Government is located by law, the session of the Legislative Assembly shall be held at the 'Shawnee Manual Labor School,' in the Territory of Kansas.

"Sec. 2. Until the seat of Government is located as above specified, the Governor and Secretary of State shall respectively keep their offices at the Shawnee Manual Labor School in said Territory of Kansas.

"Sec. 3. So soon as this act shall take effect, the Council and House of Representatives shall have power by a concurrent resolution, to adjourn its present session and hold the remainder of such session at said Shawnee Manual Labor School, and upon such adjournment it shall be the duty of the Governor and Secretary of State, respectively, immediately to remove their offices to said Shawnee Manual Labor School.

"This act to take effect from and after its passage."

The bill was sent to the Governor, who returned it on Friday, the 6th, with his veto. It was then considered and passed over his head, by a majority of two-thirds in both Houses. And at one o'clock on that day, both Houses adjourned, by resolution, to meet on Monday, the 16th inst., at the "Shawnee Manual Labor School." Many resolutions were offered, notices given, and bills presented, among which was one by Major Richardson, providing a remedy against the abduction of slaves, which was read twice.

It will be seen from the proceedings, that the pro-slavery party has a large majority in both Houses, and that the Governor is powerless.

The following is one of the bills presented to the Council:

Thursday, July 5.—Mr. Richardson introduced a bill providing if any person shall entice, decoy, or carry away out of the Territory, any slave, with intent to effect the freedom of slavery, shall be adjudged guilty of grand larceny, and on conviction shall suffer death.

It also provides that any person convicted of aiding in enticing a slave for the above purpose, shall suffer death.

Also the same penalty is attached to those who shall be convicted of enticing or decoying a slave from any State or Territory into this Territory.

Referred to the Committee on Judiciary.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

St. Louis, July 57.—Major Andrew McDonald, member of the Council in Kansas, formerly of Virginia, was yesterday appointed bearer of the memorial to President Pierce, requesting Governor Reeder's removal.—[N. Y. Express.

Removal of Governor Reeder, and appointment of John L. Dawson, Governor of Kansas.—Washington, July 29, 1855.—The President has appointed Hon. John L. Dawson, of Pennsylvania, Governor of Kansas, in place of Hon. A. H. Reeder, removed. Mr. Dawson was an effective member of the last Congress, and voted for the Nebraska-Kansas bill. He is also known as a strenuous advocate of the policy of giving homesteads to actual settlers, and introduced a bill for that purpose, which passed the House of Representatives, but failed to obtain the sanction of the Senate.

Christian Clause, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., testifies to having drank sixty glasses of lager-bier, each glass holding a pint, in a single day, without being intoxicated. This was given as evidence on a liquor trial to show that lager-bier was not intoxicating. If Mr. Clause did not get drunk by such swilling, he is certainly a hard-drinking Christian.

The Washington Union says that the American officers sent to the Crimea, Major Mordecai and Capt. McClelland, were splendidly and hospitably entertained at Berlin, by the Russian Minister, and at Warsaw, by Prince Paskievitch; and they had accepted of an invitation to visit the Emperor, at St. Petersburg.

Hurrah!—The Dalmation Observer gives the following explanation of the etymology of the word hurrah:—"This word is pure Sclavonian, and belongs to the primitive idea that every man that dies heroically for his country goes straight to Heaven (Hu-raj—to Paradise.)

Correspondence.

From an English Correspondent.

Bedfordshire Conference,
July 2, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Dear Brother—Having a desire to bear an humble testimony to the truth, through the columns of The Mormon, I take my pen in hand to communicate the same, hoping it may come to the notice of many of those who knew me in my native land, who as yet know not God, though in possession of much of the wisdom and knowledge of this world, and many who profess to be "ministers of Christ."

Three years ago I was making my way across the plains, for California, in a company of about one hundred, of which I was the chaplain, as a minister of the "Methodist Episcopal Church of the North, Ohio Conference, Elgra District, America." At this time I had never heard an Elder of Israel preach, i. e. a "Mormon Elder," nor seen any of their books; but had heard a great deal said against them by the different sects of the day. At the same time there was something which testified to my understanding that the "Mormons" were a good people; but there was so much said against the "Latter Day Saints," that the testimony of that portion of the "Holy Spirit" which is given to every man to profit by, was not adhered to as much as it otherwise should; and this I believe to be the case with many both in Europe and America, who, when the veil of ignorance, superstition, and tradition is raised from the horizon of their intellectual world, and the pure principles of the "Gospel of the Kingdom" is presented to their view by the "Mormon" Elders, and the agency of the Holy Spirit, which always attend the teachings of the Elders of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," as well as it did Peter, James, and John, and others of the servants of God, in the days when Jesus was on this earth, then they will come out of the same, as many have, and are doing, from time to time, in the different nations of the earth and the islands of the sea, by receiving the ordinances of the Gospel from those having authority, not of man, but from God; and thus will they continue to do until all the honest in heart in the world have heard, obeyed, and gathered upon the "promised land."

On the evening of the 23d of July, 1852, we rolled into the Great Salt Lake Valley. No sooner had I entered the same than sensations of peace and the spirit of home pervaded my soul, which I felt from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet, which attracted my attention, and caused me to wonder with astonishment at such an experience among a people which were said to be so depraved; and as I reflected for a few moments those former divine impressions came fresh to my mind, and the testimony of the Holy Spirit was great in favor of the people called "Mormons."

As I entered the great city, and associated with them in attending their celebration of the 24th of July, (the day the pioneers entered the valley,) and in public worship on Sunday, the 25th, my joy in them and the Holy Spirit was greatly increased; for I found them to be a pure, zealous people, such as the Lord said he would raise up unto himself in the last days. The celebration was the best I ever attended—best speeches, best productions of music, and the best order—no swearing, no drunkards, no places of resort where lewdness of any kind could be practiced—the spirit of union and peace pervaded the whole; every one was cheerful and happy, and their great joy was in the knowledge of God and the Gospel of the Kingdom, which Jesus said must be preached to all the world for a testimony, which the Mormon Elders are now proclaiming in the different nations of the earth and upon the islands of the sea, "without purse or scrip." Having spent a short time investigating, I became convinced, beyond a doubt, that verily the Church of Jesus Christ was re-organized upon the earth, with its apostles, prophets, patriarchs, elders, bishops, priests, teachers, deacons, &c., and enjoying all the gifts of the Holy Ghost as the Church did when first organized on this earth in the days of Jesus; such as casting out devils, healing the sick, speaking in tongues, and interpreting tongues, wisdom, knowledge, discernment of spirits, &c., which order of things was restored to the earth about twenty-five years ago by an "angel," which the Apostle John saw in his prophetic vision while on the Isle of Patmos.—Rev. 14—6. Being convinced that the Mormons, or Latter Day Saints, possessed the only true principles of eternal life, and that they were and are the only true people of God, by their fruits, good reason, and a cloud of witnesses, together with the testimony of the Holy Spirit, I went forth cheerfully into the waters of baptism with one who not only had authority to preach the Gospel, but to baptize proper candidates "for the remission of their sins," and I received the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying of hands as those saints did in the days of Paul, (Acts, 19th chap., 5th and 6th verses,) and many others, both in ancient and latter days. Thus my mind was enlightened, the visions of eternity were spread out before me, and my joy was great in the knowledge of God and his Son Jesus Christ, which the Scriptures say is eternal life. Verily, I did not know Him before, neither does any of the "Methodists," nor do any of the sects and parties of the day know Him, i. e. God; for they all deny Him, saying that He, i. e. God, has neither body, parts, nor passions. But this is not the description our ancient fathers give of Him, who knew Him, and conversed with Him face to face; walked with Him, ate and drank with Him.—Genesis, 18th chap., from the 1st to the 8th verse; Exodus, 33d chap., from the 17th to the 23d verse. Again we have an account of Moses and seventy of the Elders of Israel going up into the mount to see the Lord, in the 24th chap. of Exodus, from the 1st to the 12th verse. Again we learn that Jesus was the "express image of His Father's person," in the 1st chap. of Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews 2d and 3d verses. Who that is acquainted with the Scriptures don't know that Jesus had a body, and was the express image of His Father, who also has a body, and, if a body, parts; and as "God is angry with the wicked every day," and loves those who work righteousness, it is quite easy for us to know that He has passions; but all these are pure and holy, being governed by pure and eternal principles, by the Lord's acting within keeping of His light and knowledge; thus His power is omnipotent, and thus His perfection; and this is the perfection that is meant, where Paul says, "be ye perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect," i. e. always do the very best we know how, perfectly acting within keeping of our light and knowledge, which we can do by the aid of the Holy Spirit, and by which means we will "grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ." The knowledge and power of God is so great that it is felt throughout the world; but the world knows not how; they see the effects of His power, but they know not how it is displayed no more than they can see the wind or tell from "whence it comes or where it goes;" they know not that it is the power of His eternal priesthood, that the heavens and the earth was made and are governed; but thanks be to God, who, in these last days, has revealed himself unto us, through the administration of His servants, the "angels."

Having entered through the door into the fold of Christ, my interests at once were all blended with the sheep of the fold, or the people of God, and my joy increased daily in the knowledge of God and His people, and the principles of eternal life. And who could but rejoice, knowing that the Kingdom of God was restored to the earth? having become a citizen of the same by obeying the laws of initiation, i. e. faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gifts of the Holy Ghost; and knowing that a channel of communication is opened up between God and man, through which we receive constant intelligence; which channel is the Holy Priesthood, which was the hope of the ancient saints, and which is our "hope both true and steadfast entering into that within the vail."

I spent about one year with the people of God in "Zion," (Great Salt Lake City,) and on the 7th day of April, 1854, was called of God through His servants, the prophets, to take a mission to England without purse or scrip; thus I was brought to the Saviour's test of worthyness; for, says He, they that cannot "forsake father and mother, wives and children, houses and land, gold and silver, &c., for His sake, and the Gospel's, is not worthy of Him." To obey this call I turned my back upon the endearments of my sweet mountain home, family, and all I possessed, and made my way to England, without purse or scrip, trusting in the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who has delivered me out of the dark cells of prison, and caused the iron fetters to fall from my hands. Many have seen me in dreams, some time before my arrival, and when I came among them they were glad to see me, and felt it a blessing to administer to my wants, knowing that I was a servant of God. In this I speak the experience of thousands of the Mormon Elders. I have now spent about one year in England; have passed through much opposition because of the pure principles I declared unto the people, to which all the devil's hireling priesthood is opposed, and use their influence to keep the people from hearing the Gospel of the Kingdom, and hire those who are willing to be led by their craft to mob and persecute the Elders of Israel and the Saints; but in spite of all opposition the truth finds its way to the honest in heart, and they obey and rejoice in the same; and though I have been persecuted by the pious Christians and priests of the day, with my brethren, it only serves to make me love the truth more and more, and thank God for Mormonism, which has more fully developed the powers of the Holy Priesthood; and while the world is opposed to God and his people, and at war with themselves, I rejoice in knowing that Mormonism will spread and overcome every other ism, and govern the world, for it is the Word of God; and many of those who are so bitterly opposed to God and his work, or Mormonism, are objects of pity, for they are without hope and without God in the world. But woe unto you, parsons and ye priests, who "divine for money, preach for gain, and teach for doctrines the commandments of men," repent by turning unto God with all your hearts, and be baptized by a Mormon Elder, who has been called as was Aaron, and has authority of Jesus Christ to baptize such, as believe and repent, for the remission of sins, and seal upon them the gift of the Holy Ghost, which I know to be true by my own experience; and as Jesus said, so say I, do this, "and ye shall know of the doctrine for yourselves."

May God bless all the Elders of Israel, and all his Saints, and all the honest in heart, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

R. W. Wolcott.

FOR THE MORMON.

New York, Aug. 1*st*, 1855.

President John Taylor—

Dear Brother: I have been tarrying for a few days in this city of bricks and stones—I had almost said Pandemonium, and might not perhaps been so far from the truth either; for the atmosphere seems impregnated with spirits vile, whose outward manifestations are apparent on every hand, especially in emanations from the editorial fraternity; some of whom in malice and slander out-lucifer even Lucifer himself, and with fiendish delight gloat over the anticipated sufferings of the saints in Utah, in consequence of the destruction of crops there. Old Satan may well be fond of their companionship, and has no doubt already decreed them a conspicuous position among his favorites at head quarters. "Judgment must commence at the house of the Lord." Don't crow, Messrs. Editors, till you get out of the woods. Taking New York as a sample, this generation has need to repent, and that speedly, lest the Lord God visit the sufferings they would invoke upon an innocent people on their own heads.

I wonder if that hermaphrodite of Mrs. (?) Ward pays. Would it not be a good idea for the holy hypocrites to increase the numbers of their colporteurs? It strikes me that they would find efficient co-workers in the nymphs of the pave; especially since Mayor Wood has banished them from public life. It would no doubt pay, and any little peccadillos of the fair cyprians, while on their tour, would probably be winked at; and as they would thereby be admitted into respectable society, the operation might be made profitable as well as gratifying to all concerned. The N. Y. Courier of the 29th ult. has the following in reference to the Saints: "That there is learning, intelligence and a degree of liberality pervading their institutions, is incontrovertible; they have a fine college, men of erudition and genius, and it incumbent upon every Saint to compel the attendance of his progeny at their public schools. Belles letters and the fine arts flourish among them; their papers are ably edited, and no disposition is manifested to hoodwink the reflectery faculties of the people; (what more could be said in commendation) and yet the present anomalous spectacle of a nationality voluntarily yielding to the government of a patriarch who, in every thing else but a sort of low wily craftiness and insufferable assurance, is an ass of the very lowest grade." Quere—If an ass has established this government in the mountains, arrayed all this talent, refinement, intellect and liberality, what might not have been accomplished by such intellect as is embodied in the editors of the Courier? By the way, gentlemen, what tangible demonstration can you give of your powers of mind? for "by their fruits ye shall know them." The priesthood of the Son of God was ever an anomaly to a certain class, and whether in the persons of Moses or Jesus, Joseph or Brigham, will accomplish the purposes of the Most High God, against all the efforts of the devil and his coadjutors, with occasional editorials of the New York Courier. I am with you, brother Taylor, heart and hand, and rejoice in the bold, yet dignified stand you have taken against the floods of misrepresentation and abuse vomited forth from these satanic emissaries, and earnestly praying that the God of Joseph and Hyrum will crown all your efforts with success, and enable you to put to flight all the armies of the aliens.

I remain,
Yours in the New and E. Covenant,
Edward L. Page.

P.S. As "the devil hates holiness," he must be in the height of his glory here, where priests, editors and people unite to render him homage and carry out his purposes.

News from Europe.

The Asia arrived at Halifax, Aug. 1st, bringing one week later news, as follows:

Halifax, Wednesday, Aug. 1.

The Royal Mail steamship Asia, Capt. Lott, from Liverpool on the afternoon of the 21st ult., arrived here at 2 1-2 o'clock this morning.

The Washington sailed from Southampton for New-York, on the 18th July, with 210 passengers.

The Asia reports: Passed on the 22d ult., at 10.5 A. M., the ship Conqueror, twenty miles west of Tuskar, bound east; 25th, at 10.50 P. M., lat. 50 27, lon. 27 26, exchanged signals with R. M. S. America, bound east.

The Asia left for Halifax at 4 o'clock this morning, and will be due at Boston about noon on Thursday.

The Cunard steamship Aradia was at Liverpool, embarking troops for the seat of war.

THE WAR.

The general prospects of the war, at home and abroad, were not very encouraging. Partial successes before Sebastopol have, however, revived the drooping spirits of the army, although the small reported losses of the Allies show that the successes were not of importance.

Pelissier, whose character suffered much after the repulse of the 18th of June, was regaining confidence, and from the strength of the French works now close advanced towards the Malakoff, there is a probability of its early capture.

A dispatch from Gen. Simpson is published, giving an account of the embarkation of the body of Lord Raglan, for England. Pelissier placed a garland of immortelles on the coffin, and the French troops formed an avenue of men 6 miles long from the camp to the sea.

The following are the latest dispatches. Under date of July 16, 11 P. M., Gen. Pelissier telegraphs:

"The enemy, who had for some days endeavored in vain to stop our left approaches in front of the Malakoff Tower, attempted last night to drive us back, but they were repulsed by the first division of the second corps. Three times the Russians threw themselves upon our trenches with their usual shouting, but after each attempt they were compelled to retreat by the steady fire and calm attitude of our soldiers, leaving behind them many of their slain."

July 17, General Simpson telegraphs: "Nothing of importance has occurred. The army is in good health."

July 18, he telegraphs: "A sortie made on the left attack was repulsed with only three casualties on the British side."

The Paris Patrie of July 19, says; "According to the news received this morning, the Russians attempted another sortie last night about ten o'clock, against the batteries of Careening Bay, and were vigorously repulsed. Letters say that the Russian ships begin to suffer from the French mortar battery on the side of Quarantine Bay, and deserters say that the rations of the shipping are reduced one-half.

The French have cleared Kamiesch of all suspicious persons, and have established a municipality.

The British General Eyre has had a leg amputated. General Sir John Campbell died within Sebastopol, and under a flag of truce his sword was returned.

THE ARMY IN THE FIELD.

The Sardinian and Turkish forces have again withdrawn from the valley of Baidar to Balaklava. This may indicate either another modification in the plan of campaign, or that field operations against the Russians have been abandoned. The report is confirmed that the Russians have received reinforcements. Gortschakoff has written to St. Petersburg acknowledging their arrival.

THE BLACK SEA.

Another sea expedition is fitting out, but the destination is unknown. It is supposed to be either against Odessa, or to relieve the Turks hard pressed in Anatolia, and perhaps it may be for operations on the Danube. Four thousand Turks are in the Dobrutscha, where reinforcements of French and English are expected.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. Roebuck's motion for a vote of censure on the Government, after being debated at great length, was thrown out in the House of Commons by a majority of 107; the numbers being—for the motion 182, against it 289. The debate occupied twenty-six columns of the London Times. The Palmerston Ministry has thus a new lease of life.

It is stated that Sir William Molesworth will succeed Lord John Russell as Colonial Secretary, and that Sir Benjamin Hall will be Commissioner of Works, without a Cabinet seat, and Sir John Shelley President of the Board of Health.

Parliamentary business, other than the above, has been unimportant.

A committee has been investigating into the police outrages in the recent Hyde Park demonstrations.

Anthony Gibbe & Sons, of London, have been appointed financial agents of Peru.

Dr. Arnoud, Napoleon's St. Helena doctor, is dead.

FRANCE.

The Moniteur contains a decree modifying the import duties on several articles.

The sum set apart for the expenses of the Fete Napoleon on the 18th of August, is to be distributed to the widows and orphans of the war.

Five hundred Russians, now at Toulon, are to be exchanged at Odessa for French prisoners of June 18.

SPAIN.

Don Escalante is appointed Minister to Washington, in place of M. Cueto.

A telegraphic message from Madrid says the rupture with Rome is complete, the Roman Charge having demanded his passport on the 16th, on account of the passage of the Church Property bill.

The Black Warrior dispute with the United States is definitely settled, by the indemnity of a million reals.

The French mail had been again stopped by the insurgents, near Burgos. Ten Carlists were shot on the 10th, at Gironne. Some skirmishes occurred at Burgos, in which the loss on either side was trifling. Among the killed, however, was General Arnaos, brother-in-law of Cabreras.

Barcelona had become quiet once more. The treaty with the Dominican Republic is authorized by the Cortes.

ITALY.

France, England and Sardinia, are said to have expressed their formal disapproval of the purposed league of the Italian States. The Turin papers speak of an attempted insurrection in the Duchy of Modena, and arrests have been made at Spezzia, Carrara, Massi, Levici, and elsewhere.

Owing to the troubled state of Italy, the French garrison at Rome has been reinforced by a thousand more men.

Mazzini publishes a letter in the Genoa papers, warning Italians against Bonapartist intrigues.

GERMANY.

Most of the small German States are preparing to disarm. The resignation of the Hanoverian Cabinet is hourly expected, and it is said Count Platen will be the new Premier.

Capt. Merryman, of the American bark Undine, has been the first to refuse payment of the Hanoverian Statde dues. He refused to show his papers, yet was permitted to proceed to Hamburg and deliver his cargo.

DENMARK.

The Danish Government is understood to have replied to the United States in a long document, regretting that the Cabinet at Washington had not given longer notice of its intention respecting the non-payment of Sound dues, especially in the present crisis, when Denmark's neighbors are endeavoring to draw her into a war; and further, that the abolition of Sound dues would be a loss of many thousands of dollars to Denmark, and a saving of not more than two hundred dollars annually to the shipping of the United States.

Denmark, therefore, considers it impossible on the short notice to comply, and believes that other nations will regard America's demand unfavorably.

RUSSIA.

A Vienna letter in the Cologne Gazette repeats that marked differences have arisen between the Czar, and his brother Constantine, and that the journey of the Prince of Prussia to St. Petersburg is for the purpose of acting as mediator.

Conversation in Wall Street.—Newsboy to candy boy: "I say, Bob, yer haint got much of a stock to-day. Five vanillers and two lozenger papers. Guess you don't mean to make yer fortin this time, no how."

Candy boy—"Why you see, Jem, I've been a curtailin' my oppyrashune. 'Taint no use a speckylatin' in these ere times. But jest you wait till the new crops come in!"

The friends of Prohibition will hold a State Convention at Camden, N. J., on the 16th of the present month.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by John Taylor, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, he has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

Terms of Subscription—$2, in advance.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

Dear Brethren—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

We believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Aux Elders et aux Saints, en Canada, en France, en Suisse, en Italie, et dans les Iles de la Manche.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.

Les sages, les savants, les gens pieux, le philosophe, le législateur, l'ecclésiastique et le chrétien ont été à la recherche de quelque chose, pour améliorer la condition de l'homme; mais, malgré leurs recherches et leurs plans divers, le monde marche sans changement et sans régénération; la contention, le trouble, la perplexité et la misère couvrent la terre. Et tout ce que les hommes ont fait pour régénérer le monde, ne montre que plus clairement leur folie et leur impuissance. Et malgré tous les efforts, le monde religieux, moral et politique, ne fait qu'empirer.

Si nous suivons attentivement l'action de Dieu sur le genre humain, nous trouverons que tous ces maux proviennent de ce que les nations et les peuples se sont éloignés de Dieu; et rien moins qu'un retour à lui ne peut arrêter la terrible tempête, calmer la mer furieuse, tranquilliser les passions capricieuses des hommes, et rendre au monde moral, religieux et politique, cet ordre qui règne dans la création physique de Dieu.

Les œuvres de la création sont, en ce jour, aussi parfaites qu'au moment où elles se déroulèrent de ses mains. Toutes les créations continuent à être aussi régulières, aussi magnifiques et aussi harmonieuses, étant gouvernées et dirigées par la sagesse et la puissance de Dieu. Et si l'homme n'eût pas abusé de l'action morale qui lui avait été donnée; s'il ne s'était pas corrompu, et s'il n'était pas devenu plein d'orgueil et présomptueux; s'il ne se fût pas éloigné de Dieu; s'il eût recherché la sagesse, et l'eût obtenue de cet Etre qui maintient les sphères dans leur course et qui règle l'univers s'il eût imité la beauté, l'ordre, l'harmonie et l'innocence de la nature; s'il eût continué à être noble, magnanime, vertueux, pur et bon; répandant sur tous et recevant de tous des bénédictions; s'il eût persévéré dans l'enseignement du Père céleste, ce monde aurait pu rester à toujours un Eden, un Paradis, et l'homme aurait conservé sa place, comme le représentant de Dieu sur la terre.

C'est la religion que vous croyez et que vous enseignez, qui est destinée à restaurer l'homme et la terre; c'est elle qui ramènera les peuples à Dieu, qui les retirera du chaos moral, religieux et politique du monde, et les rassemblera en un peuple qui sera conduit et reconnu de Dieu; qui sera honoré devant les hommes et les nations; et qui aidera à établir et à développer le royaume de Dieu dans ces derniers jours.

Notre religion n'est pas, comme on l'a supposé, une vague fantaisie, basée sur quelque vision obscure ou une fable vaine. Elle est une révélation de Dieu à nous et au monde. Elle s'accorde avec tout vrai principe de raison, de révélation, d'intelligence et de philosophie. Elle est la restauration de l'Evangile primitif dans toute sa pureté, sa plénitude, sa beauté, son intelligence et sa puissance; et elle est parée de son originaire simplicité naturelle.

Un ange de Dieu est apparu à Joseph Smith, ainsi qu'à d'autres qui étaient réunis à lui. Mais des anges apparurent aussi à Abraham, à Moïse, à Gédéon, à Zacharie, à Joseph, à Pierre, à Paul, à Jacques, à Jean, à Corneille, et à d'autres. Pourquoi n'apparaîtraient-ils pas aux hommes de nos jours? Un ange a révélé à Joseph Smith les anciennes annales des Aborigènes de l'Amérique; notre foi ne repose pas sur son témoignage seul; car un ange a confirmé les mêmes choses à d'autres personnes, qui, aussi, en rendent témoignage. Est-ce donc chose si surprenante que le Seigneur révèle l'histoire des millions de millions qui ont habité ce grand continent-là, dont les ruines sont des monuments vivants de leur intelligence et de leur civilisation? On devra-t-on nous dire que le Seigneur ne voulait et ne pouvait se révéler qu'à un petit nombre de peuples en Asie, et laisser le reste du monde dans les ténèbres? Si ces annales sont vraies, il y aura d'autres découvertes, qui dévoileront l'action de Dieu sur d'autres peuples, que le monde sera forcé de croire. Comment le monde est-il arrivé à la connaissance de Dieu? Par révélation directe, ou par les Ecritures qui sont données par révélation. Et sans révélation, nous serions dans l'ignorance de Dieu. Qui donc voudrait fermer la bouche de Dieu, et nous dire qu'il ne faut pas et qu'il ne doit pas se communiquer encore aux hommes. Pour être conséquent, nous devons dire qu'il y a probabilité que Dieu le fera encore ou qu'il ne l'a jamais fait: car si nous croyons qu'il a déjà parlé, pourquoi ne pas croire qu'il le peut faire encore de nos jours?

Mais on nous dit qu'il y a eu un grand nombre d'imposteurs dans le monde. Cela est vrai. Mais un imposteur est-il jamais venu avec la plénitude et la simplicité de l'Evangile? Nous répondons, non; car on ne peut pas le montrer. Saint Jean dit: "Celui qui transgresse et ne demeure point dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ ne possède point Dieu. Et quiconque demeure dans la doctrine de Jésus-Christ, possède le Père et le Fils."

Or, où est l'imposture dans cet Evangile ou dans ces annales? L'Evangile que nous enseignons et l'Evangile contenu dans ces annales sont précisément le même, en doctrine, en ordonnances, et en bénédictions, que celui contenu dans la Bible; et ces annales qui sont l'histoire d'un peuple du continent de l'Amérique, confirment les annales asiatiques qui sont la Bible. Dans les temps anciens, est-ce que les Apôtres disaient aux hommes de "croire au Seigneur Jésus-Christ et de se repentir de leurs péchés?" Nous faisons de même. Leur disaient-ils "d'être baptisés au nom de Jésus pour la rémission de leurs péchés?" Nous disons de même. Imposaient-ils leurs "mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit?" Nous le faisons aussi. Crurent-ils aux Prophètes, aux révélations, aux visions, aux "guérisons des malades par l'imposition des mains, par la foi en Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "l'espoir en la résurrection?" Nous l'avons aussi. Attendaient-ils le "second avénement de l'apparition glorieuse de notre Seigneur et Sauveur Jésus-Christ?" Nous aussi. Eurent-ils "des Apôtres, des Prophètes, des Evangélistes, des Pasteurs, des Instructeurs, etc.?" Nous les avons aussi. Eurent-ils "le don des langues, le don d'interprétation, des visions, des gouvernements, le don de secourir, etc.?" Nous aussi. Mirent-ils en pratique la doctrine, les préceptes, et l'exemple de Jésus-Christ? Nous tâchons aussi de le faire, et nous savons que Dieu a restauré de nouveau ces anciennes bénédictions à son Eglise actuelle.

Nous demanderons ce qu'il y a d'inconséquent en tout cela? Lequel est le plus inconséquent, de croire et de pratiquer les Ecritures, ou de dire, nous les croyons et puis de les nier à notre organisation, à nos doctrines, à nos œuvres.

Mais des visions, des prophèties, des révélations n'ont-elles pas une tendance à conduire à l'enthousiasme et au fanatisme? Oui, les visions humaines et les délusions de Satan l'ont. Mais si le Seigneur eût pensé que ses visions et ses révélations fussent préjudiciables aux hommes, pourquoi les aurait-il données dans les anciens temps? Si elles doivent être préjudiciables de nos jours, certainement elles l'eussent été autrefois. L'enthousiasme, la folie et le fanatisme des hommes est une chose; autre chose est Dieu révélant sa volonté aux peuples pour leur organisation, leur stabilité, leur consolation, leur union, leur savoir, leur édification, et pour l'établissement de son royaume.

Les principes que nous croyons et que nous enseignons sont strictement conformes à la raison, à la révélation et à la philosophie.

Qui est-ce qui a fait la terre et l'homme? Si Dieu les a faits, n'a-t-il pas le droit de gouverner, d'instruire, d'ordonner et d'enseigner? Lequel est plus raisonnable, de croire que l'homme, l'image de Dieu, destiné à vivre ici-bas et dans l'éternité, doit demeurer dans un aveuglement absolu à l'égard de son bonheur présent et futur, ou de croire que son Père lui donnera l'enseignement de ces choses? Est-il donc arrivé que ce soit une dégradation de reconnaître Dieu?

Et encore, philosophiquement parlant, qu'est-ce qui peut procurer le plus grand bonheur au genre humain? L'intelligence, la vertu, la pureté, l'union et la fraternité. Et pourquoi le monde est-il, en ce jour malheureux, dans un état abaissé, corrompu et désordonné? c'est à cause de l'absence des principes purs de la vraie philosophie, de l'absence d'une philosophie et d'une intelligence, donnant la connaissance du ciel et de la terre. Car les œuvres de Dieu, sur la terre ou au ciel, temporelles ou spirituelles, sont toutes gouvernées et dirigées d'après les principes exacts d'une philosophie, la philosophie de Dieu manifestée dans les cieux et sur la terre. Et si l'homme est arrivé à de fausses conclusions sur les actions de Dieu, c'est parce qu'il lui manquait une connaissance de Dieu et de ses lois, qu'on ne peut obtenir dans sa plénitude que par la révélation. Mais comme toutes ses lois, qui nous sont connues, sont régulières et parfaites, il en est ainsi de celles qui ne sont point connues des hommes en général.

Les philosophes ont scruté l'homme, la terre, les œuvres de la création pour trouver un vrai système, Ils ont tous eu leur jour. Ils ont introduit beaucoup de bons principes, mais quant à l'amélioration du monde, là, ils ont fait défaut. Leurs systèmes, quelque bons que soient plusieurs d'entre eux, sont bien loin d'embrasser l'objet désiré: "Ils ont été pesés dans la balance, et trouvés trop légers."

Nous croyons en tous vrais principes de philosophie, et nous cherchons en outre à y associer la sagesse de Dieu. Ils recherchent, eux, la sagesse, de la terre et des œuvres de Dieu; nous la cherchons, nous, de ses œuvres, et aussi de Dieu lui-même, leur auteur. Ils recherchent les bénédictions de cette terre; nous, nous les recherchons de ce monde actuel et du monde à venir, comme une récompense dans le temps et dans l'éternité. Si nous possédons de l'intelligence, nous ne sommes pas honteux de reconnaître que c'est Dieu qui la donne. Si le Seigneur a donné des lois, nous n'avons pas de honte à les observer. Si Jésus est allé à Jean et lui a demandé d'être immersé dans l'eau, nous ne sommes pas honteux de suivre ses pas. S'il ordonna la foi, le repentir et le baptême, nous ne sommes pas honteux d'adopter le même plan. S'il ordonna l'imposition des mains pour le don du Saint-Esprit, nous la croyons nécessaire aussi. Et si, par l'obéissance à ces ordonnances, ils obtinrent la faveur divine, et reçurent un Esprit qui "devait les conduire à toute vérité, rappeler à leur souvenir les choses passées, et leur montrer les choses à venir," nous nous réjouissons de ce qu'il nous a découvert la voie qui nous fera obtenir la vraie intelligence, ainsi qu'une connaissance des vrais principes, anciens et modernes, et de notre relation avec Dieu, et nous donnera la manière d'augmenter notre bonheur et le bonheur de toute la terre.

Les hommes sont tombés dans deux extrêmes, par rapport à la religion: les uns se sont imaginés que tout est immatériel, aérien et visionnaire; ils sont devenus ascétiques, tristes et superstitieux, et ils ont imposé des prescriptions contraires à la nature humaine. Les autres, pour briser ces gênes, se sont jetés dans les excès: ils ont violé les lois de la moralité et de la vertu; ils ont négligé ou nié Dieu, et ont cherché dans la dissolution, dans la présomption, et dans la satisfaction de leur convoitise et de leur lasciveté, ce bonheur qui ne peut être obtenu que par la vertu, la modération, la pureté et la crainte de Dieu.

Notre religion est temporelle, spirituelle et éternelle; elle est adaptée au corps et à l'âme, car nous sommes un composé des deux. Et le Dieu qui a créé l'un a donné l'autre. Le but de la rédemption est de sauver le corps et l'âme; elle nous concerne dans le temps, et nous concernera dans l'éternité. Comme hommes, nous devons nous servir de notre jugement, de notre raison et de notre intelligence pour acquérir des possessions, organiser la société, cultiver la terre, semer, planter, récolter et pourvoir à nos familles. Comme chrétiens, nous devons chercher en Dieu la sagesse pour nous diriger en toutes choses, temporelles et spirituelles; et comme êtres éternels, nous devons agir, durant cette vie, en toutes choses, en vue du monde éternel, afin d'être honorés ici-bas, et de nous tenir dans notre propre position avec Dieu, dans le monde éternel, lorsque nos corps et nos esprits seront réunis de nouveau.

Le Seigneur nous a donné des révélations, touchant nos affaires temporelles et spirituelles. Il a commencé à raffermir Sion, à établir son royaume. Il déroulera et avancera ses desseins, et accomplira les paroles des prophètes; et son œuvre ira en croissant jusqu'à ce que les desseins de Dieu soient tous accomplis.

Permettez donc, mes frères, que je vous exhorte à être vertueux, à être purs, à garder les commandements de Dieu. Priez votre Père céleste de vous donner de la sagesse, de la grâce, de la patience, et de l'humilité, afin que vous soyez des modèles de tout ce qui est bon, grand, noble et spirituel "et que votre lumière brille devant les hommes." Evitez toutes contestations politiques; priez pour les nations au milieu desquelles vous vous trouvez, et pour leurs gouverneurs; et imitez notre Seigneur et Sauveur, en manifestant de la bonté, de la miséricorde, de la douceur, et de la bienveillance envers tous. En un mot, s'il y a quelque chose de bon, de louable, d'honorable et d'élevé, tâchez de vous l'approprier, et la vérité de Dieu vous rendra libres. Vous serez rassemblés à Sion dans le temps convenable, et vous vous réjouirez dans la plénitude des bénédictions de l'Evangile de paix. Vous saurez comment vous réjouir dans ce monde, comment vous recevrez la connaissance du royaume céleste de Dieu, et comment vous en obtiendrez l'héritage.

To the Emigration and Our Readers Generally.

We shall endeavor to be always prepared to impart the latest information relative to the best course to be pursued by Emigrants on their arrival in Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

Our emigration have heretofore, almost exclusively, gone by the way of New Orleans, but will hereafter land in the Eastern cities, and one of the principal objects of establishing "THE MORMON" is for their information, as well as all other emigration arriving in this country.

We shall take special interest in seeking out the cheapest, best and most convenient mode of conveyance from this and other points, as well as to observe the course pursued by agents in the accommodation for travelers on the routes, and make of "THE MORMON" a directory, to which all Emigrants and Travelers may refer with some degree of safety.

A Card to the Saints.

As Mormonism is a subject in which every Latter-Day Saint is interested, we respectfully solicit the interest of the Saints throughout the world in spreading "THE MORMON." Intelligence is what we want to communicate; the press is a powerful auxiliary for this purpose, and while we publish, you, by helping to circulate the truth, will not only assist us in our heavy pecuniary liabilities, but help to stem the flood of falsehood and roll forth the kingdom of God.

Use your influence; send on your subscriptions, and spread it to the ends of the earth.

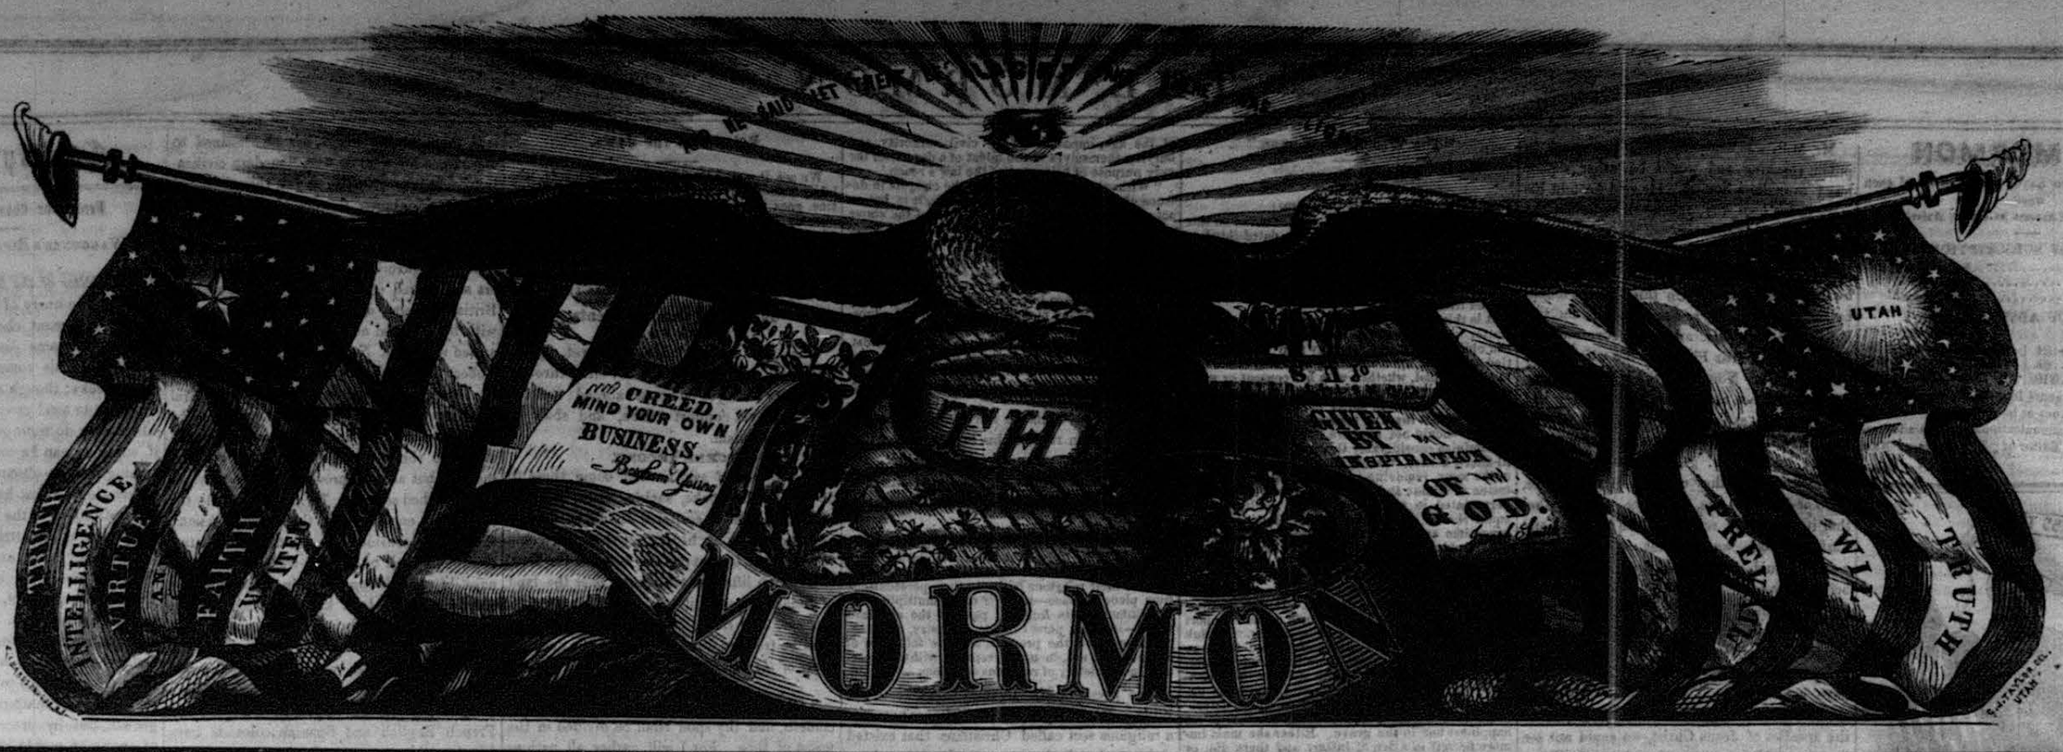
ROUTE FROM LIVERPOOL
TO THE
GREAT SALT LAKE VALLEY:
ILLUSTRATED,
By a Series of splendid STEEL ENGRAVINGS and WOOD CUTS, from Sketches made on the spot from Life, in 1853, expressly for this work, by
FREDERICK PIERCY,
AND CONTAINING A MAP OF THE OVERLAND PORTION OF THE JOURNEY.
EDITED BY JAMES LINFORTH.

This highly and interesting Work will form a narrative of the Journey from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley, and will give Historical, Descriptive, and Statistical Information respecting the places, and the Indian Tribes on the route, and in Utah Territory.

The mode in which the Latter Day Saints' emigration is conducted; a review of it from the commencement; and incidental instructions to emigrants, will constitute an early part of the Work.



The Statistical information will be drawn from the most authentic sources, and consequently may be relied upon. That portion of it which relates to the Latter Day Saints, will be particularly valuable, owing to the difficulty hitherto experienced by all classes in obtaining anything accurate, from the conflicting statements which have appeared from time to time, in a great portion of the public press.

FOR THE MORMON.

Truth Will Triumph.

INSCRIBED TO ITS ENEMIES.

BY EMILY HILL.

Truth will triumph, oh ye great ones;
Ye, who dare to be its foes,
Know, as heaven, it is eternal;
And 'twill spread the more opposed.

Hear it, oh, ye great and mighty!
Who its downfall boldly tell,
'Tis the Lord of hosts hath purposed,
Are ye strong to disannull?

Can ye still the voice of nature;
Cloud the sunbeams' piercing light;
Stay the flowing tide of ocean;
Check time in its eagle flight?

Sooner could these mighty wonders
Be achieved by erring man,
Than the power of truth be shaken;
Or destroyed;—Jehovah's plan.

Onward! onward! still progressing;
Shall truth's power increasing roll;
Onward! onward! till its banners
Proudly wave from pole to pole.

And its spreading folds shall gather,
Honest souls of mighty worth;
Shall claim, yea even now is claiming
The best and noblest of the earth.

And its onward growth shall flourish,
Past the strength of foes to fall;
Till the powers of earth surrender,
And the Lord be all in all.

The Wheeler Slave Case.

As there is considerable interest manifested by the public generally in the above slave case, we give below Judge Kane's decision for contempt of Court and perjury, which also includes a brief account of the circumstances from the beginning:

THE WHEELER SLAVE CASE.

Passmore Williamson Committed for Contempt.

From the Philadelphia Bulletin, July 27.

THE United States District Court was densely crowded this morning by persons anxious to hear the decision of Judge Kane on the motion to commit Mr. Passmore Williamson for contempt of Court, and for perjury, in making an alleged false return to the writ of Habeas Corpus requiring him to produce the bodies of the slaves of Col. Wheeler.

Judge Kane read the following decision:

DECISION OF JUDGE KANE.

U. S. A. ex rel. Wheeler vs. Passmore Williamson—Sur. Habeas Corpus, July 27, 1855.

Colonel John H. Wheeler, of North Carolina, the United States Minister to Nicaragua, was on board a steamboat, at one of the Delaware wharves, on his way from Washington, to embark at New York for his post of duty. Three slaves belonging to him were sitting by his side on the upper deck.

Just as the last signal bell was ringing, Passmore Williamson came up to the party, declaring to the slaves that they were free, and, forcibly pressing Mr. Wheeler aside, urged them to go ashore. He was followed by some dozen or twenty negroes, who, by muscular strength, carried the slaves to the adjoining pier; two of the slaves at least, if not all three, struggling to release themselves and protesting their wish to remain with their master; two of the negro mob, in the meantime, grasping Col. Wheeler by the collar, and threatening to cut his throat if he made any resistance.

The slaves were borne along to a hackney-coach that was in waiting, and were conveyed to some place of concealment; Mr. Williamson following and urging forward the mob; and giving his name and address to Col. Wheeler, with the declaration that he held himself responsible toward him for whatever might be his legal rights; but taking no personal active part in the abduction after he had left the deck.

I allowed a writ of habeas corpus at the instance of Colonel Wheeler, and subsequently an alias; and to this last Mr. Williamson made return, that the persons named in the writ, "nor either of them, are not now, nor was at the time of issuing of the writ, or the original writ, or at any other time, in the custody, power or possession of the respondent, nor by him confined or restrained: wherefore he cannot have the bodies," &c.

At the hearing, I allowed the relator to traverse this return; and several witnesses, testified to the facts, as I have recited them. The District Attorney, upon this state of facts, moved for Williamson's commitment, 1, for contempt in making a false return; 2, to take his trial for perjury.

Mr. Williamson then took the stand to purge himself of contempt. He admitted the facts substantially, as in proof before; made it plain that he had been an adviser of the project, and had given it his confederate sanction throughout. He renewed his denial that he had control at any time over the movements of the slaves, or knew their present whereabouts. Such is the case, as it was before me on the hearing.

I cannot look upon this return otherwise than as illusory—in legal phrase, as evasive, if not false. It sets out that the alleged prisoners are not now, and have not been, since the issue of the habeas corpus, in the custody, power or possession of the respondent; and in so far it uses legally appropriate language for such a return. But it goes further, and, by added words, gives an interpretation to that language essentially variant from its legal import.

It denies that the prisoners were within his power, custody or possession at any time whatever. Now, the evidence of respectable, uncontradicted witnesses, and the admission of the respondent himself, establish the fact, beyond controversy, that the prisoners were at one time within his power and control. He was the person by whose counsel the so-called rescue was devised. He gave the directions and hasted to the pier to stimulate and supervise their execution. He was the spokesman and first actor after arriving there. Of all the parties to the act of violence, he was the only white man, the only citizen, the only individual having recognized political rights, the only person whose social training could certainly interpret either his own duties or the rights of others under the Constitution of the land.

It would be futile, and worse, to argue that he who has organized, and guided, and headed a mob, to affect the abduction and imprisonment of others—he in whose presence and by whose active influence the abduction and imprisonment have been brought about—might excuse himself from responsibility by the assertion that it was not his hand that made the unlawful assault, or that he never acted as the jailor. He who unites with others to commit a crime shares with them all the legal liabilities that attend on its commission. He chooses his company, and adopts their acts.

This is the retributive law of all concerted crimes, and its argument applies with peculiar force to those cases in which redress and prevention of wrong are sought through the writ of habeas corpus. This, the great remedial process by which liberty is vindicated and restored, tolerates no language in the response which it calls for that can mask a subterfuge. The dearest interests of life, personal safety, domestic peace, social repose, all that man can value, or that is worth living for, are involved in this principle. The institutions of society would lose more than half their value, and Courts of Justice become impotent for protection, if the writ of habeas corpus could compel the truth, full, direct and unequivocal, in answer to its mandate.

It will not do to say to the man whose wife or whose daughter has been abducted, "I did not abduct her; she is not in my possession; I do not detain her, inasmuch as the assault was made by the hand of my subordinates, and I have forborne to ask where they propose consummating the wrong."

It is clear, then, as it seems to me, that, in legal acceptance, the parties whom this writ called on Mr. Williamson to produce were at one time within his power and control; and his answer, so far as it relates to his power over them, makes no distinction between that time and the present. I cannot give a different interpretation to his language from that which he has practically given himself, and cannot regard him as denying his power over the prisoners now, when he does not aver that he has lost the power which he formerly had.

He has thus refused, or at least he has failed to answer to the command of the law. He has chosen to decide for himself upon the lawfulness as well as the moral propriety of his act, and to withhold the ascertainment and vindication of the rights of others from that same form of arbitrament on which all his own rights repose. In a word, he has put himself in contempt of the process of this Court, and challenges its action.

That action can have no alternative form. It is one two clearly defined by ancient and honored precedent, too indispensable to the administration of social justice and the protection of human right, and too potentially invoked by the special agency of the case now before the Court, to excuse even a doubt of my duty or an apology for its immediate performance.

The cause was submitted to me by the learned counsel for the respondent without argument, and I have therefore found myself at some loss to understand the ground on which, if there be any such, they would claim the discharge of their client. One only has occurred to me as, perhaps, within his view; and of this I think it right to express my opinion. I will frankly consider it, however, if any future aspect of the case shall invite the review.

It is this: that the persons named in this writ as detained by the respondent were not legally slaves, inasmuch as they were within the territory of Pennsylvania when they were abducted.

Waiving the inquiry, whether for the purposes of this question they were within the territorial jurisdiction of Pennsylvania while passing from one State to another upon the navigable waters of the United States—a point on which my first impressions are adverse to the argument—I have to say:

1. That I know of no statute, either of the United States, or of Pennsylvania, or of New Jersey, the only other State that has a qualified jurisdiction over this part of the Delaware, that authorizes the forcible abduction of any person or anything whatsoever, without claim of property, unless in aid of legal process:

2. That I know of no statute of Pennsylvania which affects to divest the rights of property of a citizen of North Carolina, acquired and asserted under the laws of that State, because he has found it needful or convenient to pass through the territory of Pennsylvania.

3. That I am not aware that any such statute, if such a one were shown, could be recognized as valid in a Court of the United States.

4. That it seems to me altogether unimportant whether they were slaves or not. It would be the mockery of philanthropy to assert that because men had become free, they might, therefore, be forcibly abducted.

I have said nothing of the motives by which the respondent has been governed. I have nothing to do with them; they may give him support and comfort before an infinitely higher tribunal; I do not impugn them here.

Nor do I allude, on the other hand, to those special claims upon our hospitable courtesy which the diplomatic character of Mr. Wheeler might seem to assert for him. I am doubtful whether the acts of Congress give to him and his retinue, and his property, that protection, as a representative of the sovereignty of the United States, which they concede to all sovereignties beside. Whether, under the general law of nations, he could not ask a broader privilege than some judicial precedents might seem to admit, is not necessarily involved in the cause before me.

It is enough that I find, as the case stands now, the plain and simple grounds of adjudication, that Mr. Williamson has not returned truthfully to the writ of habeas corpus. He must, therefore, stand committed for contempt of a legal process of the Court.

As to the second motion of the District Attorney, that which looks to a committal of perjury, I withhold an expression of opinion in regard to it. It is unnecessary, because, Mr. Williamson being under arrest, he may be charged at any time by the Grand Jury; and I apprehend that there may be doubts whether the affidavit should not be regarded as extra judicial and voluntary.

Let Mr. Williamson, the respondent, be committed to the custody of the Marshal without bail or mainprize, as for a contempt of Court in refusing to answer to the writ of habeas corpus, heretofore awarded against him at the relation of Mr. Wheeler.

After Judge Kane had concluded, District Attorney Vandyke moved that a commitment under the seal of the Court be issued, and the defendant, Passmore Williamson, be placed in the custody of the Marshal.

Mr. Gilpin said he desired to make a motion that the defendant be granted permission to amend his return to the writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. Vandyke objected.

Judge Kane said that Mr. Gilpin was too late with his motion. Mr. Vandyke's motion had already been granted, and the prisoner was in the custody of the Marshal.

Mr. Gilpin then commenced an argument on the truthfulness of the original return.

Judge Kane said that his decision would be on file, and he also understood that it would be reported in full in the newspapers of this afternoon. He thought it would be better for the counsel for the prisoner to examine the decision at their leisure, and then prepare any motion that they might think proper to report.

Mr. Gilpin acquiesced, and the Court adjourned.

After the adjournment of the Court, Mr. Williamson's friends surrounded him and greeted him warmly. The defendant himself appeared perfectly cool and collected. Upon the other side of the Court-room, Mr. Wheeler was the centre of a circle of sympathizers. The Wheeler party seemed in high spirits at the result.

An intense feeling was evident in the countenances of the persons who witnessed the proceedings. Little groups talked the matter among themselves, and the scene afforded an excellent indication of the strength of feeling engendered by the vexed question of slavery whenever and wherever it arises.

Marshal Wynkoop subsequently lodged Mr. Williamson in Moyamensing Prison.

FURTHER FROM THE WHEELER CASE.

DECISION OF JUDGE LEWIS—THE ABDUCTING ABOLITIONIST, WILLIAMSON, REMANDED TO CUSTODY.

AN application was made yesterday to the Hon. Ellis Lewis, Chief Justice, for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the body of Passmore Williamson, now in custody of the Marshal of the United States, in Moyamensing Prison, under commitment by the District Court of the United States for contempt of Court, in making an illegal false and evasive return to the writ issued in the Wheeler Slave Case.

The following is an abstract of the opinion of Judge Lewis, given this morning in reply to the motion. The Supreme Court was at Chambers at the time.

The Commonwealth ex rel. Passmore Williamson, agt. F. M. Wynkoop, United States Marshal, and Charles Hortz, Keeper of the County Prison. This is an application for a habeas corpus. Annexed to the petition, and forming a part of it, is a commitment by the United States District Court for a contempt of that Court in refusing to answer a writ of habeas corpus directed to the said Passmore Williamson at the relation of John H. Wheeler.

The counsel for the prisoner frankly states that they did not desire the formality of a writ of habeas corpus, if, upon view of the cause of detainer, I should be of opinion that the adjudication of the District Court was conclusive. The habeas corpus act does not require that the writ should issue in all cases whatever.

While the prisoner is detained by a legal process, warrant or order, for an offense not bailable, the case is excepted out of the act. [See act of 18th February, 1785, sec. 1.] So where the case has already been decided upon the same evidence by another Judge, there is no obligation to issue a new writ for a rehearing. 5 Bin., 304.

We therefore come at once to the cause of detainer. Every court of competent jurisdiction is an exclusive judge of contempts against itself. It would lead to endless confusion if one court was to reconsider contempts adjudicated by another. This doctrine was established in the Lord Mayor of London's case; 3 Wils., 188. The same doctrine was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in Kearney's case. 7 Whea., 38.

Many other cases to the same effect are cited by Chief Justice Crauch, in Nugent's case, 1 American Law Journal, 107. But it is alleged that the District Court has no jurisdiction. No objection of this character was made at the hearing before that Court. The Act of Congress of 1789 gives it a power to issue writs of habeas corpus when necessary for the purposes of its jurisdiction and according to the usage of law.

That act also authorizes the Judge of that Court to issue a writ for the purpose of inquiring into the cause of commitment, provided it shall not extend to persons in jail, unless committed under the authority of the United States, or for trial before some Court of the United States, or where the prisoner is required to give testimony. Other acts of Congress authorize the District Judge to issue writs of habeas corpus in other specified cases.

It is not pretended that it issued in this case for persons in jail, nor does it appear to have been awarded in violation of State process or State authority. It may be that in action of law where the judgment of the United States Court is relied on as a defense, the jurisdiction must be shown, but in the writ of habeas corpus before a judge who has no appellate jurisdiction, wherever the jurisdiction of the United States Courts depends upon the existence of certain facts, and no question of jurisdiction has been raised on the hearing before it, every fact necessary to give jurisdiction ought to be preserved.

It is true that the judgments of the United States Court are erroneous where they do not allege jurisdiction, and may be reversed on appeal of writ of error for this cause; but they are not to be treated as absolute nullities by the parties who might have reversed them on error. McCormick agt. Sullivan, 10 Whea., 192.

If third persons who had no such opportunity may so regard them, it does not follow that the persons themselves may regard them as nullities in collateral proceedings.

It is alleged that the writ of habeas corpus cannot be used for the purpose of deciding the right of property. It is true that the habeas corpus act does not authorize the issuing of a writ for that purpose, but a writ of habeas corpus at common law may be used to deliver an infant to the parents or an apprentice to a master. Commonwealth agt. Robinson, 1 T. & R., 356. I see no reason why the writ at common law may not be used for the purpose of delivering a slave from illegal restraint and returning him to his master.

Conceding, then, for the purpose of argument—which we by no means intimate to be true in point of fact—that the District Court committed an error in deciding that the prisoner refused to answer the writ, and in giving a construction to the answer actually given—that it served in making an improper use of the writ, and that it violated the right of the prisoner in various other points—still it is not in my power to reverse its decision on any of these grounds.

If the State Court had issued a writ of habeas corpus, directed to the United States Marshal, and had adjudicated that he was guilty of a contempt in refusing to answer it, and committed him to prison, the District Court of the United States would have no power to release him.

Such an interference with the judgment of the State Courts would not be tolerated.

The respect we claim for our own jurisdiction we cheerfully concede to the decisions of other Courts of competent jurisdiction.

For these reasons the writ of habeas corpus is refused.—[Phil. Bulletin, Aug. 1.

Prohibitory Law.

THE following spicy summary we extract from the New York Evening Express. We should suppose, according to the reporter's finding that they were fined, not so much for drinking, as for being drunk.

Liquor Cases at the Tombs.

Before Judge Connolly—July 25th.

WANTS TO GO TO SEA.

William Martin lives at No. 15 Roosevelt street; don't know where he got his liquor from; says he is a sailor man, and he wanted the clerk to hurry up, as he wanted to go to sea. Committed for 10 days.

A CASE.

Eugene Sullivan, 107 St. Mark's Place sworn:

Clerk—Did you drink any liquor yesterday?

Pris—If I did not, I would not be here.

Clerk—Where did you get it?

Pris—Between a —— and a ()

Clerk—Did you pay for it?

Pris.—No, sir! I received it; it is bad enough to convict one's self, but to convict another is awful.

Mag.—Well sir, I'll have to charge you $10 for this business.

Pris.—(Hands up $9.) There, I have not got another cent.

Mag.—(to the clerk) Commit for one day.

Pris.—I see the reporters here, so I have no doubt my name will be down among the unfortunates in the papers to-morrow.

(Hands up another dollar, and leaves.)

MODEL WAY TO BRING UP A CHILD.

Mary Green, of 10 Roosevelt street, says she drank some beer yesterday; she always sends one of her children out for it whenever she wants a drink. She was deprived of the society of her children for ten days.

THROUGH A FRIEND.

Peter Newman says he lives 10 Hamilton street; drank a glass of beer at a Dutchman's corner James and Front street; was treated by a friend, who paid for it. 10 days also.

MIXED HER LIQUOR.

Miss Ann Anderson says she lives No. 28 Spruce street; she drank some beer and brandy at the house of Mr. McLaughlin in Catherine street; it is a private house; it was given to her. 10 days too.

At the Essex Market Police Court.

Before Judge Wood.

PRINCE STREET LIQUOR.

James Edwards, lives No. 178 Thirty-first street, says that he drank some liquor in Montgomery Hall, in Prince street; could not tell how much he drank; did not pay anything for it; his acquaintances treated him.

LAGER BEER.

Hannah Miller, lives 28 Suffolk street, says that he drank some lager beer in his own house; also took a glass of brandy in a German house in Nassau street; can't tell the quantity thinks it was less than 15 gallons.

PECK SLIP RUM.

Cornelius Lakin, of 299 Water street, says he drank liquor in a great many places yesterday; among the rest he drank some rum in Peck Slip.

IMPORTED FROM WILLIAMSBURGH.

Charles Riley, lives 99 Gold street, drank his liquor in Williamsburgh; brought some over with him; that's what made him drunk.

All the above were looked up for 10 days.

Business before Justice Wood was rather dull this morning, attributable to the summary manner the Judge disposes of the cases.

At the Jefferson Market Police Court.

Before Judge Pearey.

The calender at this Court this morning was very light, owing no doubt to the fickleness of the weather.

GOT IT IN A SUGAR HOUSE.

Herman Strouler, living at 400 Greenwich street, says he got his liquor in the Sugar House, in Duane street; from there he went down on board of a ship near Barclay street, and took a glass of gin with the boys.

ANSWERING THE REQUIREMENTS OF LAW.

Joseph Minor, lives No. 69 East 26th street; says he drank two glasses of beer at the corner of 28th street and 7th avenue; also two glasses of brandy at the corner of 27th street and Broadway; paid 6 cents a glass for it; drank one glass in 27th street, near Broadway, and another glass at the corner of 4th avenue and 27th street. Total, 4 glasses of brandy and 2 of beer; but he was not so far gone but that he could take care of himself; Judge thought different, and concluded to lock him up for 10 days.

SICK MAN.

Michael Savage, of somewhere in 25th street, says that he was very sick, and could not walk a great ways, and that the policeman took him to take care of him; but it was no use; 10 days to recover.

Mexico.

MEXICO, Thursday, July 19, 1855.

Santa Anna having proposed to permit the introduction of some forty or fifty thousand bushels of flour and other provisions at a merely nominal duty, the General Agency of Agriculture representing the views expressed by the farmers throughout the country, has presented a memorial to the Government praying for the protection of home industry. It sets forth the necessity of agriculturalists being able safely to rely on having the whole of the home consumption to supply, under the shelter of the laws. It claims also the liberty to export the national productions, excepting the precious metals.

The necessity for protection is shown by an enumeration of the evils and burdens from which the agricultural interest of the country is now suffering, among which was the following:

1. The want of capital among the farmers, and the large amount of interest they have to pay for borrowed money.

2. The ecclesiastical burdens, being not only a tythe, or one-tenth of the produce of the land exacted by law for religion, but the necessity of each estate-owner to support a chapel on his estate as well.

3. Civil taxes: the acabalas duty of three per cent., the tolls, and numerous municipal imposts.

4. Two years in five the farmers are unable to pay the expense of cultivation by their crops, owing to unfavorable seasons, in which years they are not exempt from the imposts just enumerated.

5. The great scarcity of animals: the trade in mules and horses formerly brought from the territory ceded by the Guadalupe-Hidalgo Treaty to the United States is now stopped; the Indian depredations have lessened the supplies from the frontiers, and the stock formerly in possession of the farmers having been seized for the purpose of civil war.

6. The bad roads of the country, which added to the scarcity of mules render transit to market exceedingly expensive.

7. The condition of the laborers rendering it necessary that all their extra expenses at marriages, sickness and burials, should be borne by the estate-owners by whom they are employed.

These evils it is contended render it impossible that the Mexican farmers can compete with foreign growers who have the advantage of cheap land and low freights.

It appears that some farmers in Mexico are in such a deplorable condition as to be obliged to lay their crops under embargo in order to continue operations.

The memorial concludes by requesting that the decrees for a forced loan, and for the contributions enumerated be declared null.

How far these representations may affect the policy of Santa Anna remains to be seen. They certainly cannot be long disregarded without serious risk to the Government of the Republic.—[N. Y. Tribune.

CHURNING.—Butter should always be churned in a room or apartment the temperature of which is between thirty and sixty degrees. At sixty degrees butter is obtained in the greatest quantity, and at about fifty-two degrees of the best quality. To those interested in dairy management, these facts are of the highest practical importance. A thermometer should always be suspended in the dairy or milk room, and all the operations regulated by it.—Poultry Chronicle.

A MAN living about forty miles from Cairo, Illinois, named Evans, was bitten by a mad dog recently. He became mad, and during his paroxysms five men were unable to hold him, and, in compliance with his earnest entreaties, a number of persons placed him between two feather beds and smothered him to death.

THE MORMON.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, AUG. 11, 1855.

Missionaries to the Marquesas, Marriage, &c.

On Sunday evening last, for want of other employment, we strolled off to the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's Church, Brooklyn; at which place, in the room of Mr. Beecher, we happened to stumble on a missionary performance, preparatory to two young men and two young women, and one white man and one colored woman (a Marquesian) bidding adieu to this country for the scene of their future labors, the Marquesas Islands. An elderly, plain matter-of-fact sort of gentleman, whom we learned was Mr. Lewis Tappan, presided. Rev. George Whipple, Secretary of the American Missionary Society, seemed to be next in command. An aged gentleman, Rev. Mr. Jocelyn, on the platform; a Mr. Mills, native of Ireland, his wife—a Kanacka; the Rev. Mr. Seymore and lady; Dr. Coxie of Ohio, and his "makings of a wife" Miss. Platt, filled up the programme.

Mr. Jocelyn officiated in prayer, and Mr. Tappan made a few plain remarks, and read a letter commendatory of Mr. Mills, whom he was going to introduce to the meeting, requesting him, at the same time, not to occupy too much time, as there were many other ceremonies to be attended to; from this we expected that Mr. Mills was rather prosy, and consequently this gentle admonition. Mr. Mills being introduced, stated that he was born in the north of Ireland, came to this country while young, lived in Schoharie Co., left thirteen years ago on a whaling expedition. (About this time some lady contrived to go off in a fit, that caused quite a sensation; we lost some of the thread of the discourse.) He informed us that he and several others were left in a boat in the Pacific, how he and his partners made their way to one of the Marquesas Islands, how he was afraid of being eaten, and his companions were also afraid of being eaten, having heard that the islanders were canibals; how that when they met with the islanders, neither he nor his companions were eaten; how that they didn't eat people generally; that it was his opinion that they only eat parts of their enemies, and that they did not in reality eat that; he thought they only chewed it to show their triumphs over them; whether they spit it out again, as Napoleon le premier did Moscow, we could not learn, for a violent storm came on which prevented our hearing. However, he assured us there was no danger of being eaten there now, as the doctrine has become obsolete; that it was more a historical thing than a reality, a sort of raw head and bloody bones story; and the last canibals, some two or three old men, were nearly dropping into the grave. He told us how he and the rest planned an escape, but that he was left alone—a sort of Robinson Crusoe; that he became a great favorite with the chief, and finally a favorite with his daughter, and it would seem that she was with him, for they were married; he had her with him. The old chief died, and Mrs. chief, the daughter, it would seem, took the reins, and he acted as a kind of regent—not "king of the canibal islands"—but a sort of Prince Albert to Queen Victoria; only from his relation, we should judge, possessing more power relatively. He told us that he taught the natives how to trade, and speculators how to trade with them. They made a law, that is he and the people, that sailors should not stop on shore at nights, and that the natives should not go on board at nights; this was very good, but rather difficult to enforce; he thought the natives were Jews, for they circumcised and practised other Jewish ceremonials. How that having taught them to trade, and done them much temporal good, he had come to this country to bring them a missionary; that on this also he had been successful, and was not only taking one, but two, so that we infer that Marquesians will be safe for the next, as well as this world, providing they are only obedient, and provided also that they should find no Mormons there; for be it remembered, the Mormons in the Sandwich Islands have been very troublesome to these said missionaries, having led many of the people and some of the chiefs to believe in Mormonism, and moreover, having established a Mormon colony on one of those islands.

Mr. Mills was evidently not accustomed to public speaking, and would be rather a poor hand to make a lion of. He said he told his story in his own way, and he thought for the last time in this country.

Mr. Whipple, or rather the Rev. George Whipple, then came forward to deliver what he called the charge. On this announcement by the President, the two missionaries and two ladies stood up, Mr. and Mrs. Seymore, and Dr. Coxie and Miss Platte, as the wife or lady of Dr. Coxie. Now what the ladies stood up for we could not ascertain; whether they had a legal right as lady and lady elect of two missionaries to receive part of the charge delivered by the Rev. gentleman, as missionaries; or whether they considered themselves, male and female, one, or to be one; or whether it was out of respect to the husband and husband elect, we did not ascertain. We were as much puzzled when the charge was being delivered. Mr. Whipple commenced by telling them that they would find the authority to preach the gospel in St. Mark's Gospel: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel unto every creature." Now as we have always thought that these words were spoken, and this commission was given, to the apostles of Jesus Christ, we could not see how it could be made to apply to the Revs. Seymor and Coxie. Perhaps we are a little too particular; but we could not help thinking that a man would cut a curious figure with a printed copy of the commission of George Washington in his pocket, were he to go to a regiment of American troops, and because he could there read that Gen. Washington was commander-in-chief of the U. S. forces, that therefore he possessed the General's authority.

Mr. Seymour then addressed the audience; he is a young man of promising appearance, has a good delivery, a natural talent, and we thought quite as competent as any one present; he seemed to be sincere. Pity that youth and talent should be wasted and perverted in such an enterprise.

Mrs. Mills was then invited on the platform for the purpose of giving the audience an opportunity, and thus we saw a live Kanacka—a princess, too; her size a medium, her complexion a dark brown, bordering on black, darker than an Indian; her features broad, and rather intelligent; she had a pleasant expression, and withal a good degree of firmness and self-possession.

Dr. Coxie and Miss Platte were then united in the bands of holy matrimony by Mr. Whipple. They made happy, and the meeting dismissed we sallied home in a rain storm, concluding we had read another chapter in human life. We could not help having thoughts like the following: Here are two young men and women going out for the ostensible purpose of preaching the gospel, nor do we doubt their sincerity; yet that that gospel was not the gospel of Jesus Christ, but something they had been taught by those men that were setting them apart and their coadjutors; that their commission was not even a counterfeit, it was stolen on the bare assumption of others (the apostles) rights or authority; that consequently there was not the same power as that associated with the original true commission in Mark xxi. 17. That they did not, "baptize for the remission of sins," nor "lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost." That "these signs" (which it was said should follow, do not) "follow those that believe." That they have a fictitious authority, new doctrines, new ordinances and administration, and a new gospel; that if their gospel is true, that taught by Jesus and his apostles was not. If that taught by Jesus was true, theirs is false. Under these circumstances, then, we felt sorry for the young men and all concerned, and thought here is another humbug; one that may be called a respectable, a christian, an orthodox humbug, but yet a humbug; and the more respectability and orthodoxy attached to it, the greater the plausibility, deception and humbug. No wonder that Mr. Whipple had to admit in his charge, "that drunkenness and other evils of great magnitude often followed the missionaries."

Trouble in Utah.

"THE Mormons are in a sad way as to their crops, which have been blighted by drought, and devoured by locusts, crickets, and grasshoppers. A scarcity of food is anticipated, and Brigham Young, who has made a tour of observation through the country, advises the Saints to make short visiting excursions in whatever direction they can. The Indians, too, are becoming more and more troublesome every day, and altogether it is not unlikely that the settlement at Great Salt Lake City will be broken up before long. We never supposed that Providence would permit such a nest of abominations to flourish a great while in any land."

How pious men do get sometimes, as if the editor of the Ledger, or many other editors in this great metropolis, believed in Providence. Now, we presume that the editor of the Ledger knows no more about the Mormons than the Mormons do about him; but he hears a barking, and, like all other whiffets, he must prance, bark, show his teeth, and otherwise exhibit his little-doggishness. If Providence was swift to punish transgression and corruption, the beastly licentiousness and corruption practiced in this polluted city would have caused its overthrow long ago.

"The Wrongs of Woman."

A Strange Suggestion.

To the Editor of The New York Daily News:

DEAR SIR: The justice of your remarks on this subject, as published in your issue dated Sunday, July 29, must be apparent to all. Having given some consideration to the subject, I lay before your readers the only possible remedy for so great an evil and correction of so great a wrong, which suggested itself to me.

It is this: Make a law whereby any woman, no matter what her previous character may have been, can oblige to support her, any man whether married or single, upon adducing sufficient testimony to show he had, whether with her consent or without, improper connection with her.

As such a law will afflict none but the wrongdoer, I cannot see why the moral sense of the community should not approve it. Its effect will be to diminish considerably the number of visitors to ill-famed houses, thereby diminishing the number of the same, removing in a great degree the temptation to crime; and in any case that a wrong be perpetrated it will throw on the guilty parties equal shares of the disgrace, performing at the same time an act of manifest justice, by securing to the robbed victim at least bodily support, and a far easier road to repentance.

Some may think such a measure harsh; indeed, it may be urged it would defeat its own object and serve as a temptation of itself. It may furthermore be urged, that in case a man cannot support his victim, the law becomes a nullity. I think differently. As the laws of society and the laws of the land at present are, there is but one victim. The seducer may enter church and mix in fashionable circles, as you have truly said, while the unfortunate whose mind is the weaker, whose nature, more confiding and unsuspecting, must seek for happiness but in the grave. Either she must immure herself in a den of infamy and there die, or else starve disowned and uncared for. For her, there is no hope. I, on the contrary, would victimize neither, but rescue her from ruin, and leaving it altogether at the option of him on whom she has strongest claim, to marry her, or else act in the capacity of a divorced husband; providing support for her according to his means—a very just and easy penalty.

It will not hurt him; it will save her; and in the name of humanity, where else can she more naturally turn for support, and even—though I do not go so far as to insist on it—for protection?—PHILOS.

We are really glad to see a principle of this kind agitated, the way females are now abused, without redress, is a perfect outrage to humanity. Why should not man, in nine cases out of ten, the betrayer and seducer of the too confiding weaker vessel, be made at least to bear his portion, both of the expense, and disgrace associated with such proceedings? Why should woman, because the weaker vessel, be made to bear all the hardships and opprobrium of these illict associations, whilst her craven, heartless deceiver perhaps stultifies himself in the ruined fame and broken heart of his victim and perhaps adds hyprocritical piety to his other remorseless crimes? Will justice, on this subject for ever sleep, and taking confidence be unrewarded by the heartless mockery of unprincipled villains, who after blasting the hopes ruining the fame, and forever destroying the innocence and purity of the fair, but too confiding, and yielding daughters of Eve, leave the wreck they have made, and hide themselves behind the screen of a falsely prudish corrupt etiquette, glazed over with hypocracy and denominated petit faux pas, or simply perhaps, Oh! you wicked man, you bad fellow! You play the devil with the hearts of women, &c., &c. Whilst the poor betrayed one is writhing and agonizing in secret over her ruin and desolation, he from his hiding place like the pirate, only not so honest, as he does not carry his flag, (which should be a death's head and bones) is ready to pounce upon his next victim. We look upon such men as monsters in human shape; as degraded, heartless, wretches; who would barter their honor (!) and the virture and peace of confiding betrayed innocent for a momentary gratification, and gloat over the misery and wreck occasioned by their fiendish acts.

If their is one case above another in women's rights that wants advocating this is it.

Know Nothingism in Kentucky!

"War' to the knife!"

RECENT dispatches from Louisville, Ky., inform us that the election now going on there, is bringing the Know Nothings and Anti's into very belligerent attitudes; in fact these parties have gone so far as to bring into requisition their weapons of offence and defence, killing quite a number on both sides, and burning a number of dwellings. The difficulty seems to have commenced in the first ward on the 6th inst., while the election was going on at the polls, a Mr. Burge, an American, was beaten and stabbed by a party of Irishmen until it was supposed he was dead. The provocation leading to this is not stated; the Irish party were arrested and lodged in jail. Soon after this there were large collections of people in the streets—foreigners and natives—both fighting to kill, and numbers were killed, it appears, on both sides. One Irishman was hung by the native mob. In the eighth ward, the Americans were fired upon from the German and Irish dwellings, which dwellings were set fire to by the natives, and burned with some of their inmates—how many is not known, but a number of bodies have been found about the ruins in a charred state. The Natives then proceeded to the Times office, and would have demolished it, but for the influence of Mr. Prentice and others of the K. Nothing party.

On the seventh, there still being symptoms of a repetition of the scenes of the day previous, large accessions were added to the police force.

It was ascertained this morning that upward of twenty persons had been killed on yesterday; the Mayor has issued his proclamation as usual.

We would say, better keep a little more cool if possible, or move out west, where you can live further apart; Uncle Sam you know is able to "give us all a farm."

THE Mirror wished to insinuate, and to have people so understand it, that a piece published by us a few weeks ago, favorable to Mormonism, "had slipped in rather accidental;" but as the editor's memory seems to be short, we publish the following, bearing date October 24, 1854, nine or ten months since. Was that also an accident?

"THE MORMONS.—The Courier and Enquirer has a leading article on this subject, in the course of which occurs the following paragraph:

"'It is a community of vagabonds, gathered from all quarters of the civilized world, setting at defiance the religion, the morality, and the decencies of the age, impatient of all civil authority, and burying themselves in the midst of a desert, for the very purpose of being out of the law's reach.'

"Without desiring to take up the cudgels in defence of these disciples of Joe Smith, it is but an act of simple justice to them to say that the above extract contains not one word of truth. A more industrious, honest, law-abiding community can hardly be found. The municipal regulations of Salt Lake City are admirable, and a more moral (barring their open polygamy) and orderly citizens we have never seen in any part of the world. They number very many men of intelligence and education, and a residence of several weeks among them failed to note a single 'vagabond' in their midst. They are exceedingly hospitable to California emigrants, and furnish them supplies at reasonable rates. Their settlement is a great benefit to 'overland' travellers."

The last accounts we have from him about Mormonism, in reply to his exposure, is, "that it is too warm weather to talk about it."

It does make some people sweat either to perpetrate the truth or acknowledge it when it is told.

NOT A RELIGIOUS DELUSION.—The history of the Mormons is the living wonder of these latter times. In their origin—in the absurdities and abominations of their religious faith—in their persecutions from place to place—in their rapid multiplication by reinforcements from all parts of the civilized world—in their perseverance, industry, and success, the creed, the prophet, and the followers of Mormondom, are, in many respects, without a parallel in the history of religious delusions.—[Herald.

We presume Mr. Bennett don't read the Bible. We will post him a little. There was a religious sect called Christians that existed eighteen hundred years ago in Asia, whose leader was put to death for being a blasphemer, a traitor, an associate of publicans and sinners; who was reported to be a gluttonous man and a wine bibber, and a stirrer-up of sedition; he professed to rise again after being put to death; when the guards actually said that his disciples stole him away; and these very disciples a low, vulgar herd; unlettered men, fishermen, publicans, tax gatherers, &c., the scum of society, presumed after his death to testify to the truths of his religion—Christianity. It would scarce be credible that such men, with such a founder, advocating such absurd pretensions, would have been followed. Yet so it was, and multitudes believed on him, and now his doctrines are orthodox, and Mr. Bennett—save the mark—one of his professed followers.

Our cotemporary, notwithstanding his christianity, is evidently ignorant of his Bible. Read your Bible, Mr. B.; read your Bible.

WE clip the following from the St. Josephs, Mo., Weekly Gazette of July 25:

"FOR SALT LAKE CITY.—Messrs. A. T. Bauble, Carroll Hughes, and several others, left this city on Monday last, en route for Salt Lake City. Messrs. Bauble and Hughes will take charge of a train of forty-three waggons, freighted with goods for Livingston & Kinkead. The company will embrace about fifty men, well armed and equipped. Messrs. Bauble and Hughes are old voyagers on the plains, well acquainted with the nature of the Indian tribes that inhabit the country through which they will pass, and if the residue of the company are as good grit as these gentlemen, they will be able to fight their way through though they should encounter a host of Pawnees or Sioux."

From the same paper we are glad to learn the following. While the building of a boat to sail between St. Josephs and Council Bluffs shows a creditable enterprise on the part of the projectors, it will be quite a convenience to these up river towns, and we hope will yield good returns to the company.

"ST. JOSEPHS AND COUNCIL BLUFFS PACKET.—A few weeks ago we mentioned the fact that a company was forming for the purpose of purchasing a steamboat to run as a regular packet between this city and Council Bluffs, but as no suitable boat could be purchased, the company concluded to build a new one expressly for this trade. Maj. Barrow informs us the hull is now building at Madison, Ind., the machinery will be put in at St. Louis, and that she will be completed by the first of February, and ready for running by the time navigation opens in the spring. The hull of the boat will be one hundred and eighty feet long; beam, thirty feet; floor, twenty eight feet; two engines, twenty inch cylinders, and six and a half feet stroke.

"This boat is exclusively a St. Josephs up river boat, being owned entirely by citizens of this place, and as such should receive the patronage of this community."

At a convention held at Lexington, Mo., a number of resolutions were passed, from which we extract the following:

"6. That these organized bands of colonists, shipped from Massachusetts and other quarters under State patronage, and resembling in their essential features the military colonies planted by the Roman Emperors upon their conquered provinces, rather than the pioneers who have hitherto levelled the forests and broke up the plains of the West, authorize apprehension of an intent of exclusive occupancy, and will necessarily lead to organized resistance on the part of those who, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, have equal rights to possession, and whilst we earnestly deprecate such results, we are justified, in advance, in placing their entire responsibility upon those who have commenced the system, and are the aggressors.

"7. That we disclaim all right and any intent to interfere with the bona fide, independent settlers in the Territory of Kansas, from whatever quarter they may come, or whatever opinions they may entertain, but we maintain the right to protect ourselves and our property against all unjust and unconstitutional aggression, present or prospective, immediate or threatened, and we do not hold it necessary or expedient to wait till the torch is applied to our dwellings or the knife to our throats, before we take measures for our security and the security of our friends.

"8. That the eighteen counties of Missouri lying on or near the border of Kansas, with only an imaginary boundary intervening, contain a population of about fifty thousand slaves, worth, at present prices, twenty-five millions of dollars, and this large amount of property, one half of the entire slave property of the State, is not merely unsafe but valueless, if Kansas is made the abode of an army of hired fanatics, recruited, transported, armed and paid for the special purpose of abolitionizing Kansas and Missouri.

"9. That this convention and the people they represent, and the State Government of Missouri and the entire people thereof, should take such measures as to them appear suitable and just and constitutional to prevent such disastrous consequences to their security and prosperity and peace, and confidently relying upon the sympathy and support of the entire South and Southwest, whose alternate fate must inevitably be the same with theirs; and consequently relying also upon the conservative portion of the North, they respectfully appeal to the good sense and patriotism of the entire North to put down such fanatical aggressions as have hitherto characterized the movements of Emigrant Aid Societies, and leave the settlement of Kansas and the regulation of its domestic institutions to be controlled as the settlement and institutions of our other Territories have been, by those impulses of self interest and congeniality of feeling on the part of the settlers, which, by the national laws of climate and soil, will, if undisturbed, invariably determine the ultimate condition of the Territory.

Resolved, That in view of acts of the State of Massachusetts and other Northern and North-western States, practically nullifying the Constitution of the United States, and the laws of Congress relating to the rendition of the fugitive slaves, and in vindication of the Constitution and for the purpose of preserving the integrity of the American Union, we recommend to the General Assembly of Missouri to pass such retaliatory measures as may not be inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States or the State of Missouri, discriminating against the sale of the productions, manufactures or goods and merchandize of any description whatever of said States within this State as may be deemed proper for that purpose, and that such retaliatory measures shall be made operative as long as the offensive legislation afore referred to continues on the statute books of those States."

Return of the Jews.

WE see it stated that Sir Moses Montefiore, who lately passed through Vienna on his way to Palestine, goes there to purchase a large district in the country, to settle upon it the Jewish paupers of Jerusalem. Eventually his purpose is to settle there all those Jews who feel inclined to return to the country of their ancestors. This is perhaps, the first practical effort yet made at procuring a return of that widely scattered race.—[Woman's Advocate.

The Isthmus Expeditions.

SAN JUAN del Sur, that little, but valuable and important position on the Isthmus of this continent, claimed both by the State of Nicaragua and the illustrious king of the Mosquitoes, appears to be now unfolding the first scene in a drama, the importance of which is understood by a few, and least by the power that at present assumes to be most vitally interested in the question at issue.

Col. Kinney, the armed expeditionist and swarthy leader of an uneasy gang, has luckily saved himself and his cause by a most opportune shipwreck, which thus allowed him, while a British man-of-war was on watch, to enter safely and in disguise. So far is the British command out on the station inveigled, as to invite him to visit. Col. Kinney to pay a visit to his vessel, and the Nicaragua Transit Company though feigning to oppose him by force, by placing soldiers in command of posts on the river, by which access to the interior is gained, are being nonplussed by the evident welcome he has received from the people of San Juan, by the peaceable manner in which he was setting to build a house, by the laborious industry of his men, and by threatened accessions, which may arrive any day. He will soon be secure from any effective attacks in his position, and the previous waving of his authority is a fact conceded. We may yet see reduplicated Joseph's dream of the lean kine swallowing the fat kine; for Colonel Walker, on the other side of the Isthmus, having sided, in consequence of the disaffection and treachery of his own followers, with the government troops, instead of Nicaragua swallowing San Juan, San Juan may swallow Nicaragua.

This will be far from welcome tidings in Europe. The goverment of the United States having disowned the expedition, cannot be accused of violating what is known as the Clayton and Bulwer treaty. Yet Republicanism is being now fairly rooted in the soil, one with sympathies and affinities to that pertaining to the United States, and after a fashion not to be destroyed by a cannonade in the bay, or a pitched battle and skirmish in the interior.

Those deserted mountains, those silent valleys, those waving woods, are all destined to experience for weal or woe, "modern civilization." It is no paradise as yet, though it has limes and oranges, flowers of dazzling brilliancy of color, the dark, dream-like appearance which belongs to a land where nature is in full and luxuriant bearing. Scheming traders and armed colonists are counter-checking British designs and grants are done away with by a forced and absolute sovereignty of armed squatters. No documents signed "King Robert Charles Frederick," will avail against the energy of Northern enterprize; Central American States may protest, charges may be brought of intrigue and encroachment on the Musquito shore, British forces may be augmented, but all will prove powerless after an accompliahed seizure. To him we look to the increasing commerce of the western Asiatic shores, and consider how the traffic of the two continents shall be beheld, within the knowledge of now living individuals passing the narrow neck of land known as the Isthmus, when we consider how imbecile are the present governments; through what ages of sloth they have subsisted, we cannot well narrate the present movement however insignificant, comparatively, it may appear in its beginnings. French, English and Spanish colonists have failed on the very ground where these hardy men have come to represent maternal progress. We may assume they will be successful because representing more than a selfish impulse, because embodying that self sacrificing energy peculiar to the American people, when the aim has in men the well being of thousands. Thus animated, they will be sustained, and though we cannot give them unqualified commendation, we must yet regard the movement as being virtually one of advance and progress, bringing the North and South, East and West, nearer together by a new living link.

The Foreign News.

THE news brought from England is indicative of the absence of any firmness of purpose on the part of the ministry having charge of the conduct of the present war, and who time their action according to parliamentary clockwork. With such absence of unanimity of feeling, with such revelations of political immorality as are taking place, there must reign a general distrust. In fact, a gloom seems to spread over the face of the nation, in the conviction that the day has passed for a people to be misled by sophistry. And yet in the matter of the Sunday Restriction Labor Bill there has been nothing like moral courage shown, even by those who most stoutly opposed it. They fled like a frightened herd before the staves of a pack of policemen, and vented their impotent spite, like Cæsar Paul the madman, on glass and stones. Even now none seem to see, what the French have long found it their interest to see—the laws governing labor.

It is a thing not to be absolutely controlled, or to be controlled effectively, the right to it must be first established. When in the history of the world was a moral offense restrained through fear, as the sole operating motive? The present exclusion from such places as the Royal Palace and the National Gallery, though the former belongs to a private company, and the latter is the property of the people savors of an intolerancy worthy of the most bigoted days of Puritanism and Romanism. With these men the present dispensation is of virtual slavery; they have no freedom of spirit in their cramped up creeds, no exercise of the least susceptibilities of the heart in the artificial state in which they politically and socially exist. Man was not made for a heavy heart, but so long as he is dictated to by law as to the days on which he shall and shall not work, or as long as he lives under a government imposing such regulations at the expense of the laboring class, he cannot breathe freely the air of heaven, or enjoy the true luxury of life. There is an evident absence of principle on the part of the rulers of England; but no man rises as yet to shake off the ignominious shackles.

AID FOR THE MEXICAN REVOLUTIONISTS—SAM HOUSTON AND THE KNOW NOTHINGS.

NEW ORLEANS, August 7, 1855.

THE San Antonia Ledger gives an account of the organization of a military force in Texas, to aid the Mexican revolutionists. The first part of the expedition arrived at Leona river on the 16th of July, and additional men were hourly arriving. Great numbers were expected to cross over on the 24th. Captain Henry, commander of the Texan Volunteers, issued addresses to the people of Texas and Mexico. To the former he said it was their intention to aid in the establishment of a more republican government, and finally bring it under the protection of the American eagle.

Gen. Houston has written a letter publicly endorsing the Know Nothings.

THE PHILADELPHIA SLAVE CASE.—Philadelphia, August 9, 1855.—True bills having been found against Passmore Williamson and six colored men, for assault and battery on Col. Wheeler in carrying off his slaves, their cases were called to-day in the criminal court for trial, but were finally postponed till the 27th inst.

ARREST OF CYPRIANS.—About twenty of these unfortunates were arrested while parading the streets of the Fifth Ward on Wednesday night, and taken before Justice Connolly, who disposed of them summarily, some of them getting three months in the Penitentiary.

A RUMOR is current throughout the West Indies of a contemplated transfer of Dominica and St. Lucia to France, in exchange for the French colony of Chandernagore, in the East Indies. The Antigua and other colonial papers have given free circulation to the rumor, adding that the matter is under consideration of the English and French Governments, and will be shortly concluded, but they cannot trace it to any regular foundation.

WAGGONER'S RIPPLE, Adams Co., O., July 28, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

SIR: The hurry of business, the loss of my wife by malignant cholera, and my own sickness of the same disease, have delayed the sending of this communication to you for three weeks; though not half well yet, I have sat down to send you at least some part of it, which may do some good at this critical time, if anything can be considered of any weight coming from so obscure a source.

Question—What have Congress to do with the institutions of the Mormons?

It is an axiom attributed to Sir James McIntosh that "States are not made, they grow." But this sentiment is not applicable to the United States, except, in a limited degree, to the original thirteen. The clause in the Constitution which imposes on all the States, specially the new ones, a certain form of government (Republican,) makes the governments of these States matters not of providential growth, but by preconcerting human means of course of purely human fabrication; they do not grow, they are made. From this category, however, the State of Utah, still conventionally termed a territory, must be excepted. Now, it must appear evident to every ingenuous mind, not petrified by tradition and conventionalism, that this clause of the Constitution annihilates in the bud the most essential principle of that liberty for which the American people professed to contend, the pursuit of happiness in their own way; for it is but mocking the individual to propose to him a right which is, at the same time, denied to the community of which he is a member. If the individual or community may pursue their own happiness, they must be allowed free use of the appropriate means, the unrestricted privilege of free experiment in social science. To assert that any method is exclusively right, and forbid all others, is at once closing the door against free investigation; and social science, including government, ought to be as free to experiment and investigation as any other science. But the American people, or rather their leaders, while they discarded monarchy, retained despotism, and professing to divorce Church and State, they nevertheless retained, in the civil and State laws, the alliance between the dogmatical theories and statutes of the religionists and the means of justice and expediency of the secular rules; they still thought themselves strong and wise enough to help God in the institution of the Sabbath, and in the conditions of the family relation; or to atone for their exclusive devotion to mere temporal good, a common expedient with men of the world, they flung these things to God, as a sop to Cerberus, to keep him quiet.

In this respect the State governments have acted at variance with the professed principles and practice of the American General Government, for the Constitution takes none but a prohibitory notice of religion, and the Government has recommended itself to Mahommedan and Pagan States by professing to be not a Christian Government, and has made treaties with them accordingly. Now, the peculiar features of the family relation which we derive from our European ancestors, styled monogamy, are maintained by a religious dogmatism for the ground on which the opposite, polygamy, is exposed, is purely religious and moral. Polygamy is not taxed with any features necessarily militating against State expediency or civil security. The General Government is called upon in very urgent terms to exclude Utah, as a State, from the Confederacy, on account of the irreligion and pollution of the polygamy of the Mormons. As to the pollution, that is a matter of fancy: our half-shaped ideas of pollution and chastity are derived from the institutions of the Jews and ancient Heathen nations, and have nothing to which they are properly applicable in a true Christian community; and if their pollution is so dreadful an evil it is they that have to stand it, not we. We will have enough to do to repent of our own sins, our enormous covetousness, our savage extortion, our distended pride, our gluttony and licentiousness. As to their irreligion, that is a matter with which the General Government has consistently nothing to do. The followers of Budh, Brahma, Mahommed and Zoroaster, and the total atheist have as much constitutional right to the protection of this Government as any of the professed followers of Christ. The theory of the Government guarantees the right to the exercise of religion in any forms and in all details, provided those details do not infringe on the recognized rights of others. Who shall dictate to others as to their most private concerns, the conditions on which parties may agree to live together? If they but live together in peace, and without annoying others in their property, persons, or convenience, the scope of all laws is satisfied. But it is possible to prove that polygamy is, or, at least, might be much more moral than monogamy, and much better calculated to subserve the purposes of civil government, peace, and the absence of individual suffering.

THE Lawrence Herald of Freedom says that buffaloes in innumerable numbers are ranging over the prairies only fifteen miles west of Fort Riley in Kansas. With a spy-glass from a hill they can be seen grazing as far as the eye can reach. Settlers who had located in the vicinity with herds of cattle have been compelled to remove for the want of grass, which has been consumed by those animals.

THE Illinois State Register of the 21st inst., says:—The cholera has been making sad havoc at Shelbyville. There has been eighty deaths during the past ten days. Among others, General Thornton, one of the most prominent citizens of the State, has been taken off. The town is said to be nearly deserted.

—We have received the following communication, and refer the subscriber and others who may be interested on this point for an answer to the first question, to an article headed "Baptism for the Remission of Sins," by our correspondent, Alexander Robbins, Jr.:

PARADISE TOWNSHIP,
LANCASTER COUNTY, PA.,
June 22, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

DEAR SIR—I have several inquiries to make of you, or any of the Mormons, through the medium of the press, or otherwise; not for the sake of controversy, but by way of getting some knowledge concerning the inquires which I may make. You can either answer them or not, just as you feel inclined, either through the columns of THE MORMON or by letter.

1st. How you can make it appear (in accordance with the word of God) that baptism was instituted by the Saviour and practiced by the Apostles for the "remission of sins?"

2d. How you can prove immersion to be the proper mode of baptism?

3d. How you can prove a plurality of wives to be in accordance with the will of God, as taught in the Bible. ABRAHAM SMITH.

FOR THE MORMON.

Baptism for the Remission of Sins.

BY ALEXANDER ROBBINS, JR.

"How can you make it appear (in accordance with the word of God) that baptism was instituted by the Savior, and practiced by the Apostles, for the remission of sins?" is a question asked by one Mr. Abraham Smith, as will be seen by his communication. It being a question frequently asked by others as well, I make the few following remarks for the information of any whom they may concern.

To that portion of the question that seems to admit the Saviour as the institutor of baptism, (which I should not admit,) I have nothing to say; the present question being the object of baptism. St. Mark, with reference to this point, says in his first chapter and fourth verse as follows:—"John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Here, then, we find that John's baptism, which was acknowledged as authentic by Jesus himself, was for the remission of sins. The prepositional phrase, "of repentance" does not make the noun baptism, to which it holds an adjective relation, anything more nor less than baptism; repentance is connected in the sentence, as it always was by John in officiating; one never took place without the other. Repentance was preached to the people, and when they repented of their sins, baptism followed, through which they were promised the remission of those sins. There cannot possibly be an objection to the baptism in this sentence being for the remission of sins, because it states plainly that this is what it is for; but whatever objection is made, must be to the kind of baptism, as it says "baptism of repentance." To such as would make this an objection, they have only to read the verse that follows the one quoted, to be satisfied on that point. It is as follows:—"And there went out unto him of all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins." We understand by this that water baptism is meant, unless the same objection urged before, i. e., that "of Jordan" makes "river" something else; which is just as consistent in this case as the other; for the phrases are exactly alike in construction; or, (more directly,) if River of Jordan means River, then baptism of repentance means baptism, and if baptism, the passage previously quoted shows, in so many words, that it is for the remission of sins.

I next call attention to Luke iii., 3, which reads as follows:—"And he (John) came in to all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." As this testimony of Luke runs parallel to that of Mark already quoted, the preceding comment will answer for this also.

We have now produced the testimony of two directly on the point at issue; but lest some might say that John baptized for the remission of sins, and the Apostles did not, we will turn to the testimony of the Apostles themselves, on the same subject. In Acts, chap. xxvii, verse 16, it reads thus:—"And now, why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Paul was told this by Ananias, a devout man, who acted in accordance with instructions received from an angel of God. So the authority cannot be questioned.

But, says the objector, washing away sins and remitting sins are two things. I would ask such how much difference there would be, in effect, between two persons who had repented of their sins, and been baptized, and one had got his sins remitted through the process, and the other had got his washed away! But, says one, you would not contend that water would wash away sins, would you? I am not contending, but quoting Paul's own words. Whether the virtue was in the water or in the administrator, or neither, to remit sins, Paul does not say; but the water seemed to be the only medium through which they were promised such remission; and the people were so simple in those days, as not to expect remission on any other terms; consequently, we find them striking out for the water so soon as they had believed and repented.

If any man or set of men have found out that baptism is not essential, and that a person can get forgiveness of sins without it, he has found out something that the ancients did not understand. This is very evident, from the fact that they submitted themselves to that ordeal. If faith without works would have saved them then, as some say it will now, they might have forgone the inconvenience of being immersed in the liquid grave, which would no doubt have been full as agreeable to them, especially when the water was cold, as it is to some of our pious friends at the present time, who are too delicate to encounter such a gross operation.

What a pity that Cornelius could not have understood the modern scientific way of getting forgiveness of sins, and not been under the necessity of sending away down to Joppa, for Peter to come and tell him words whereby he and his household might be saved. He might have got rid of this trouble, and, also, that which was a little more trouble still, going immediately with his friends and household, in obedience to those words of Peter, and being baptised for the remission of sins.

But, says the objector, how do you know that Peter held that baptism was for remission?—the Scriptures don't say that he told Cornelius this. True! but his doing it so readily is good circumstantial evidence to that effect. But to settle the matter beyond controversy, we will turn to a possage where Peter does explain himself on this subject, in words that cannot be misconstrued. It will be found in Acts, chap. ii., and 38th verse, as follows:—"Then Peter said unto them, repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." Peter, who presided on this occasion through that authority (the keys of the Kingdom,) conferred upon him by Jesus, stood up in the midst of the assembled multitude, and spoke to the people in the power and demonstration of the spirit with which he was at that time endowed. He had recently walked and talked with Jesus—had been instructed with regard to his mission, and received a strict injunction to teach all things whatsoever he (Jesus) had commanded. Under these circumstances, we cannot reasonably conclude that any man then living on the earth had a better right to set forth the principles and initiatory ordinances into the Kingdom of God, than Peter, who had the honor to hold the keys of that Kingdom.

There was a numerous multitude present on that occasion, who heard with much anxiety the teachings of Peter; they saw their own position, and in their conviction said unto Peter and to the rest of the brethren, "What shall we do?" The question was plainly put to Peter, and as plainly answered by him, as already shown in the quotation. And we are further shown in the context that they who received the word were baptized, and it is very evident that there was but little time used in cavilling on the point to ascertain whether they could not get remission of sins in some easier way, from the fact that the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls.

To say, then, in view of this, that baptism is not for the remission of sins, is to charge Peter with not understanding his own business, or as being one of the greatest deceivers and impostors that has appeared on the earth in any dispensation; for he so operated on the people's credulity as to cause three thousand to be baptized in one day for the remission of sins.

I have in conclusion, then, only to say, that inasmuch as Mark, Luke, Paul, and Peter agree as touching this thing, and inasmuch as Paul has said, that "He that preacheth any other Gospel than that which we have preached, let him be accursed," I am satisfied to leave it as they have left it, and not even enquire whether there be another way by which I can climb up, as do the thieves and robbers of this generation.—[To be continued.

Machinery.

There has always, in all communities, been manifested an opposition against machinery on its first introduction, as opposed to manual labor; that is, opposition against the saving of labor and the superseding of human toil. That such a fact should be never noticed concerning a properly organized community, and not artificially constructed, is impossible; such a community could have no basis of complaint that the major part of their work was done by an inferior agency; its members would rather rejoice, and feel themselves relieved to pursue the higher and nobler task of self-elevation.

It is this unfair distribution of the proceeds of labor in modern society that provides this basis of complaint. We do not say unequal, but unfair, for capital must always have its own proportionate advantages, and the distributor, not counted on in many modern social schemes, is entitled to a fair per centage.

Though labor is not in itself inglorious, yet so far as the heavy material burdens of humanity can be chiefly thrown on metallic and other engines, we are advanced in our own sphere of action and assume higher directive powers. Nature more and more acknowledges that direction; the vallies of the earth are filled up by the bridges that span them, and her mountains are subdued to plains by the powerful locomotives that skirt them without danger, though threading steep ravines and precipices bewildering to the human gaze. Science is more and more rendering the forces that surround us the servitors of human intelligence. To the humblest peasant she extends her beneficence, offering to relieve him from his overwhelming toil, and only demands that the capitalist deal gently—that he exalt not unduly the toil which is mere drudgery over that which partakes through its saving processes more of mind; that he do not gather up selfishly for himself all the gains that come from human invention, but only his just lot and share. The world is cursed with a selfishness that leads man to shut out his brother man from the self-same benefit he would realize. Therefore it is that thousands in Europe are oppressed; an oppression has arising from the necessity of position, than from the necessity of the relation which the laborer holds to the capitalist, placed as both are in an artificial state, very far from the Creator's designs, and at an immense remove from that condition in which the fullness of the earth is to be realized by the joyous laborer's on its bosom. If we look to the hnman body we shall find that a great portion of its limbs, its joints and its muscles are arranged with reference to beauty rather than strength, and that strength is neither the first nor the chief intention. For man has something nobler than his strength, and his god-like thought and spiritual energy is far more powerful than his arm. His arm has slain its tens of thousands; but his god-like will has brought nations of men within his way. Let those laboring with prejudices against machinery, direct there attention to those social evils which prevent them from realizing the full benefit of the introduction of unproduced modes of working, and endeavor to discover the means for a remedy, and, if these be unattainable, the region where the proper principles are most justly and satisfactorily carved out.

Inventive Triumph.

Knowles' Patent Saw—Extraordinary Cutting Power—Report of the Committee—Public Supper at the Tremont House.

THE attention of lumbermen and mechanics has been much directed of late to the claims of a new saw, invented and patented by Hazard Knowles, Esq., and introduced here by J. J. Beattie, Jr. One mill has already been erected in the West Division, on the corner of Jefferson and Fulton streets, and furnished with one of these saws, and other mills are being built in the city for the same purpose. The inventor claimed for the saw, ability to cut ten thousand feet of inch boards in ten hours with six horse power, and last Saturday the mill in operation was subjected to a test of its capacity.

We were present during part of the trial, and can testify to the admirable manner in which the saw performs its work, and the ease with which the regulating machinery is adjusted. While we stood by it, it sawed sixteen feet in twenty-eight seconds, which, if it could be fed constantly, would give two thousand and forty-eight feet as the work of an hour. The mill was run on Saturday under the supervision of a committee, and a complimentary supper was given by Mr. Knowles to the lumbermen of Chicago at the Tremont House in the evening, to enable them to hear the report of the committee and enjoy a social entertainment.—[Chicago Democrat.

Populating Shaker Villages.

WE learn that a deputation from the Shaker village, of Lebanon, in this State, consisting of a brother in the faith, and two sisters, are now in this city on a mission of hunting proselytes and children to keep up the population of their village. As celibacy is part of their religious belief, and no sexual intercourse permitted, their only mode of keeping up their society is by proselytizing children, and rearing them in their settlements. On Tuesday this deputation visited Randall's Island, and by permission of the Ten Governors, secured twenty children from the Institution there—eleven boys and nine girls. The children on the island—some nine hundred—when the Shakers arrived, were all stood up in a row, and they were allowed to take their pick from among them. Aside from the ridiculous dogmas which will be taught them, the children could not be placed in a home where they will be made more comfortable, or where more pains will be taken to contribute to their happiness. From here the deputation will visit Philadelphia and other cities. We understand the society at Lebanon are allowed to have five hundred children in their village continually, while at the present time they have but about three hundred.—[N. Y. Herald, 27th.

Discovery of the Body of Balmat, the Swiss Guide.

JACQUES BALMAT, the celebrated guide of Chamouni, who was lost in the ascent of Mont Blanc about 20 years ago, while acting as guide to some travelers, was found a few days ago, says the Gazette de Lausanne, in the broken up ice which forms the arch (voute) of Aveyron. To the astonishment of persons passing that way, the body of a man was discovered, the upper portion being still buried in its frozen tomb. A number of persons were promptly summoned to the spot, and, after cautious efforts with pickaxes and other instruments, they succeeded in disengaging the remains of the old and popular guide, Jacques Balmat, in a state of the most perfect preservation. The body was immediately conveyed to Chamouni, where it received every mark of honor and respect. Jacques Balmat acquired some celebrity by being one of the guides to M. Saussure, the naturalist, in the year 1786.

Indian Troubles up the Mississippi River.

Aggressions of the Sioux.

THE officers of the steamer Laclede, which left St. Paul on the 25th of July, informs us that the people of Wabashaw Village, a point 108 miles below St. Paul, on the Upper Mississippi River, had been somewhat alarmed by the approaches of a party of Sioux Indians, numbering about five hundred. They had driven several families from their homes in the country back of the village, and were threatening an attack upon the town. The people were up in arms, ready to receive them. HEAT WITHOUT FUEL.—The problem of acquiring heat without fuel appears to have been solved by the invention of the machine of MM. Beaumont and Mayer, with which by friction alone they can make water boil. The machine, which may be seen at work at their establishment on the Quai Valmy, contains 400 litres of water, which is made to boil in five hours. A cone of wood, which turns in a cylinder so as to produce the necessary friction, is covered with tow, and that tow, in order that it may not catch fire, is kept constantly moistened by a stream of oil which runs on it. The heat gradually increases, until at last steam is generated.

News from Europe.

THE Baltic arrived at this port from Sebastopol, on the morning of the 8th inst., bringing one week later news, as follows:

Parliament will be prorogued on or about the 16th inst. Sir William Molesworth is definitely appointed Colonial Secretary. His constituents of Southwark has passed a resolution recognizing him as "the right man in the right place."

An impression is current that an advance of ten per cent. will be imposed on important duties, and some transactions have taken place with the view of anticipating the increased tax.

The war news is not important. It is rumored that General Simpson and Omer Pasha have resigned. The French continue to approach the Malakoff, which the Russians still continue to fortify.

Gen. Simpson retains command until the appointment of a successor.

The position of all parties in the open field remains unchanged.

The British in the Sea of Azoff destroyed the bridge of boats at Genitchi, without loss.

Operations in the Baltic were unimportant.

Preparations for a campaign on the Danube continue.

M. Thouvenel, the new French Embassador, arrived at Constantinople on the 17th.

Omer Pasha had also arrived at Constantinople on the 18th. It was said he came to resign his appointment as Commander-in-Chief of the Turkish Army.

The despatch of re-enforcements to the Turkish Army in Asia continued without intermission.

It was currently reported in Plymouth garrison that Maj. Gen. Simpson had resigned the command of the British army in the Crimea.

MY LORD: I announced to your Lordship, by telegraph on the 11th, the death of Lieut. Col. Vico of the French army, which melancholy event took place on the afternoon of the 10th inst.

I know that the late Field Marshal Lord Raglan held him in the highest estimation, and placed the most implicit confidence in him; and although my acquaintance had, comparatively speaking, been but a short one, it had been long enough for me to appreciate the many excellent qualities with which he was endowed. I have, &c.,

His Highness desires that this expression of satisfaction and of sympathy shall be brought to the knowledge of the army, to which I am happy to be the interpreter of the sentiments expressed by the august and intimate ally of our Emperor.

THE REPORTED NAPOLEON PAMPHLET ON THE WAR.

Literary circles on the continent have made the discovery that the author of the pamphlet on the war in the East, attributed to Prince Napoleon, is no more distinguished a person than the leader of the Polish, Baden and Sicilian insurrectionist, Mirolawski. In Baden Mirolawski gave evidence of considerable talents in the organization of the heterogenous hordes that flocked to the democratic and republican standard; but although the federal fortress of Rastadt fell into the hands of the rebels, and during the continued series of retreats to which the troops were compelled by the immensely superior force under the Prince of Prussia, they managed to carry off all their guns without loss; still the circumstance that on every occasion where Mirolawski had to take up a strategic position he left his flank undefended, will be fatal to his pretensions to strategical talent.

AUSTRIA AND RUSSIA.

The Paris correspondent of the Times, under last night's date, says:

A private letter from Vienna, dated 24th, alludes to a communication received by the Archduchess Sophia, mother of the Emperor of Austria, from the Empress Dowager, widow of the late Czar. The request so often repeated but so often eluded before the death of the Emperor Nicholas, that a letter formerly written to him by the Archduchess demanding, in the most earnest and supplicating manner, Russian aid to put down the Hungarian insurrection, should be restored to her, has been taken advantage of on the present occasion. The document, which was so carefully kept as evidence of the weakness of Austria, of the dissolution which menaced her, of her obligations to Russia, and doubtless, of her ingratitude, is no longer in the hands of the Emperor Alexander. The widow of Nicholas accompanied it with an autograph letter, which, if truly described, is not less suppliant in tone and style than that which the expected ruin of the Austrian Empire produced.

A FEW months ago, an England family, consisting of a man, his wife, four children, and aged mother, arrived at New Orleans, La., from Liverpool. When the cholera came to that city soon after their arrival, the two elder children sickened and died, and on the 28th ult., the man and his wife died within a few hours of each other, of black vomit, leaving the aged mother of the wife, and two infant children unprovided, in a strange land.

The Way Mr. C—— got the Pudding.

Och! Roderick Crohoare was the broth of a boy,
And he stood six feet eight,
And his arm was as round as another man's thigh,
'Twas Roderick was great.—ANON.

"Yes," said a huge Kentuckian, hitching his heels to the mantlepiece of the bar-room of a country hotel in the "Sunny South," "he certainly is a large man, broad shouldered and thick set; but well proportioned, except perhaps a slight inclination to rotundity about the abdomen; however he is a whole souled, good natured jovial fellow, and was rather fond of his jokes, his company was sought after by his neighbors, and if there was any county or political meetings, or anything else important going on he was hunted up, and generally managed to be one in their midst." Saying which he ejected a stream of tobacco juice from between his large stained teeth, that came near making him loose his equilibrium, and threatened the annihilation of the puny blaze that was struggling manfully to overcome the dampness of the wood, caused by the recent prolonged rains; recovering himself by a manœuvre that would have done credit to a tight rope dancer, he continued. Mr. C. and a friend were traveling through a part of the country in which they were somewhat acquainted, and as dinner time was drawing near Mr. C. proposed calling on one of his old associates for their dinner.

Now it so happened that there was a kind of a neighborly party at the house in question; and the dinner was just about ready when the lady of the house espied Mr. C. leisurely wending his way towards the house.

Now I don't mean to say that Mrs. —— was a covetious woman, I hope I am above insinuating anything derogatory to the character of any lady, and would rather think that she was charitable and kind, and that in what followed she did as she thought for the best, no doubt thinking that should Mr. C. see the array of good things prepared for home consumption it would perhaps tempt him to eat, and after fasting since morning, and traveling in the cold, who knows but what it might have had an injurious effect upon him, and that it was not through motives of consideration for her old friend that she had the eatables removed? But to return to Mr. C. I must say that he was not a man to let opportunities slip; and consequently, catching a glimpse of what was going on, he made his calculations accordingly. He was very politely received, I might say extremely so; I rather think a little more so than he had been accustomed to, but whether this resulted from the coolness of the atmosphere, or was on account of his peculiar political tenets I am unable to say; after remarking on the weather and politics, inquiring about his old friends, &c., and finding there was no disposition on the part of his host to enter into conversation, he bid them good day and continued his journey, whereupon the dinner was resurrected, and I have no doubt it was as good as they generally have in that part of the country, but what threw everything else into the shade, and carried off the palm, was a magnificent plum pudding, which, by the juvenile members of the party, was looked upon as the ultimatum of their hopes, and viands with which their plates were heaped that would ordinarily be regarded by them as something extra, were, in view of the pudding, merely looked upon as so many obstacles to be surmounted before arriving at the sine qua non of their anticipations, and they were consequently pitching into them with a gusto seldom equaled, and rarely excelled, thinking perhaps that what they lacked in size they would make up in activity. If this was their intention they were succeeding admirably. In the meantime the older ones were not idle, the successful manœuvre of the hostess was discussed and commented upon with great glee and "all went merry as a marriage bell."

"But there's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip."

A knock was heard at the door and the lady of the house hastened to see what was wanted.

Mr. C. for it was him, had forgotten his pocket knife, and returned for it; very thoughtless in him; but so it was, a most unfortunate thing, so thought Mrs. ——, however now that he was there and she fairly caught, she could do no less than ask him to stay and have something to eat. "Would Mr. C. take dinner with them?" "Well, he was rather in a hurry, had a good ways to go before he would come to another house; but their pudding looked so tempting that he was almost persuaded to take a piece and eat it on the way."

"Certainly," "was there anything else he would like," reaching him a knife and fork.

Mr. C. proceeded to cut off a piece of the pudding. Now whether it was that the knife slipped, or it was the intention of Mr. C. to cut off one half of the pudding, or whether he did cut off precisely one half or not is a thing that I have no means of ascertaining, but from the remark make by the astonished Mrs. ——, viz: that he had better take the other half, I should be led to suppose that the piece was not far short of one half. In answer to Mrs. —— proposition to take the remaining half he said he thought he would, as his friend outside would doubtless feel the need of something of that kind as he had traveled some distance since breakfast, and, said he, appropriating the pudding, "it is astonishing how the cool air sharpens a person's appetite."

The feelings of the party around that table may be imagined but cannot be described, for in the language of the Poet:

Speechless they sat, not one of them stirred,
Till the clattering hoofs on the pavement were heard,
Then up they all jumped, and they shouted galore,
But that pudding or C. they never saw more.

PROSPECTUS.

THE MORMON

IS the name of a Weekly Journal which will be published in the city of New York, by JOHN TAYLOR, one of the Twelve Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; formerly editor of the "Times and Seasons" and the "Nauvoo Neighbor," in the city of Nauvoo; subsequently of the "Etoile du Déseret," in the city of Paris, France; and "Zion's Panier," in the city of Hamburg, Germany.

THE MORMON will be devoted to the cause and interests of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and will be the advocate of its claims; social, moral, political, and religious: and will also treat upon all subjects which the Editor may deem interesting, instructive, or edifying to his readers; among which will be science, literature, and the general news of the day. Further than this, be has no pretensions, nor does he purpose to be bound to any particular party or interest.

To the Latter Day Saints he would say, as he is known to them, and deputed by the Presidency, the above will be sufficient. To others: that while he esteems all honorable men, and would, by all proper means, court their respect and patronage, he has no promises to make; but leaves himself at liberty to examine any principle, whether moral, social, scientific, political, religious, spiritual, temporal, past, present, or to come; and pursue such a course as to him may seem best.

The Editor would state that from his numerous correspondents in Europe, East Indies, Australia, Pacific Islands, California, Utah, and other parts of the world, he hopes to make THE MORMON interesting as a newspaper, not only to the Saints but also to his patrons in the United States, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, the Isles of Man and Jersey, as well as in France and Germany.

The Editor would further state, that as our emigration will come, in future, by the way of the East instead of the South, and as THE MORMON will be extensively circulated among the emigrating Saints in Europe and the citizens of Utah Territory, it will be an excellent medium of advertising for Merchants, Storekeepers, Wagon Makers, Horse and Cattle Dealers, and Carriers in the West and on the route; as well as the Wholesale and Commission Merchants in the East.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION—$2, IN ADVANCE.

To all our Presiding Elders throughout the World:

DEAR BRETHREN—You will perceive by the above Prospectus that Mormonism is assuming another phase, and that we are now going to be the representatives of our own opinions, instead of having others to represent them for us. And as I am particularly desirous to make the paper interesting, I should feel much obliged if you would write communications to "THE MORMON" on any matter of interest; social, moral, scientific, or religious: the local and political position of the country where you reside, its inhabitants, customs, manners; its arts, sciences, productions, curiosities, and religion; or any other thing that you may deem interesting: not forgetting the state of our own Church.

As a Deseretian I am desirous to gather honey from every flower, and make "THE MORMON" a welcome visitor at the fire-side of every Latter Day Saint; to be sought after by men of intelligence, and be the true representative of Mormonism in the World. J. T.

A Short Account of the Faith and Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

WE believe in God, the Eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost, who bears record of them for ever.

We believe that all mankind, through the trangression of our first parents, were brought under the curse and penalty of transgression; but that through the sufferings, death, and atonement of Jesus Christ, all are to be redeemed from any effects of original transgression; that as they were placed under a penalty without any act of their own, so they were delivered from it precisely on the same terms. "For as by the offence of one judgment came upon ALL men to condemnation; even so, by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon ALL men unto the justification of life." Rom. v. 18.

We believe that little children are innocent, and not under transgression; that they are incapable of obeying any law, not believing good or evil; and Jesus says, "Of such are the kingdom of heaven; but then, when they arrive at years of maturity, and know good from evil, and are capable of obeying or disobeying a law; if they then transgress, they will be condemned for breaking a known law.

We believe that no man will be condemned for not obeying a law that he does not know; and that consequently millions of the human family who have never had the gospel, are better off than those who have had that privilege, and disobeyed it. That mankind will be judged according to what they have, and not according to that they have not done "according to the deeds done in the body."

We believe that faith in God, and in the sufferings, death and atonement of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and in his resurrection and ascension on high, and in the Holy Ghost, which is given to all who obey the gospel, and is one of the first conditions.

That the next is to repent of—to confess, and to turn away from their sins, and make restitution to all whom they have injured, as far as it is in their power.

That the third is to be baptized by immersion in water, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, "for remission of sins." And that this ordinance must be performed by one having authority, or otherwise it is of no avail.

The fourth is, to receive the laying on of hands, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And this ordinance must also be administered by the Apostles, or Elders, whom the Lord Jesus has called to lay on hands, nor then is it of any advantage except to those persons who have complied with the afore-named three conditions.

We believe that the Holy Ghost is the same now, as it was in the apostolic days formerly, and that when a church is organized, it is their privilege to have all the gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit.

"'Such, for instance, as the gifts of revelation, prophecy, visions, the ministry of angels, healing the sick by the laying on of hands in the name of Jesus, the working of miracles, and, in short, all the gifts as mentioned in Scripture, or as enjoyed by the ancient saints.' We believe that inspired apostles and prophets, together with all the officers as mentioned in the New Testament, are necessary to be in the Church in these days.

"We believe that there has been a general and awful apostacy from the religion of the New Testament, so that all the known world have been left for centuries without the Church of Christ among them; without a priesthood authorized of God to administer ordinances; that every one of the churches have perverted the gospel; some in one way and some in another. For instance, almost every church has done away 'immersion for remission of sins.' Those few who have practiced it for remission of sins, have done away the ordinance of the 'laying on of hands' upon baptized believers for the gift of the Holy Ghost. Again, the few who have practiced the last ordinance have perverted the first, or have done away the ancient gifts, powers and blessings which flow from the Holy Spirit, or have said to inspired apostles and prophets, we have no need of you in the body in these days. Those few, again, who have believed in and contended for the miraculous gifts and powers of the Holy Spirit, have perverted the ordinances or done them away. Thus, all the churches preach false doctrines and pervert the gospel, and instead of having authority from God to administer its ordinances, they are under the curse of God for perverting it. Paul says, Gal. i. 8, 'Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.'

"We believe that there are a few sincere, honest and humble persons who are striving to do according to the best of their understanding; but, in many respects, they err in doctrine because of false teachers and the precepts of men, and that they will receive the fullness of the gospel with gladness as soon as they hear it."

We believe in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and in living and continued revelation; but we also believe that no new revelation will contradict the old.

"The gospel in the 'Book of Mormon' is the same as that in the New Testament, and is revealed in great plainness, so that no one that reads it can misunderstand its principles. It has been revealed by the angel, to be preached as a witness to all nations, first to the Gentiles, and then to the Jews, then cometh the downfall of Babylon. Thus fulfilling the vision of John, which he beheld on the Isle of Patmos, Rev. xiv. 6, 7, 8, 'And I saw,' says John, 'another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying, with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters. And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.'

"Many revelations and prophecies have been given to this church since its rise, which have been printed and sent forth to the world. These also contain the gospel in great plainness, and instructions of infinite importance to the Saints. They also unfold the great events that await this generation; the terrible judgments to be poured forth upon the wicked, and the blessings and glories to be given to the righteous. We believe that God will continue to give revelations by visions, by the ministry of angels, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, until the saints are guided into all truth."

"We believe that wherever the people enjoy the religion of the New Testament, there they enjoy visions, revelations, the ministry of angels, &c. And that wherever these blessings cease to be enjoyed, there they also cease to enjoy the religion of the New Testament.

"We believe that God has raised up this church, in order to prepare a people for his second coming in the clouds of heaven, in power, and great glory; and that then the saints who are asleep in their graves will be raised, and reign with him on earth a thousand years."

We believe that great judgments await the nations of the earth, on account of their wickedness, and that when the gospel shall have been sufficiently proclaimed, if they reject it, they will be overthrown and destroyed; that plagues, pestilence and famine will be multiplied upon them; that thrones will be cast down, empires overthrown, and nations destroyed; that when the Spirit of God ceases to restrain the people, the world will be full of blood, carnage and desolation; that peace will be taken from the earth, and from among all people, religious and irreligious. "It shall be as with the people, so with the priest," &c. Isa.

We believe that the Lord will gather his people from among all nations, unto a land of peace, "and give them pastors after his own heart, who shall feed them with knowledge and understanding," and they shall be the only people upon the earth that shall not be at war with one another."

"We believe that the ten tribes of Israel, with the dispersed of Judah, shall soon be restored to their own lands, according to the covenants which God made with their ancient fathers, and that when this great work of restitution shall take place, the power of God shall be made manifest in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds far exceeding anything that took place in their exodus from Egypt. Jerusalem will be rebuilt, together with a glorious temple, and the Lord shall visit them also, as well as his saints in Zion. In that day, the name of the Lord shall become great unto the ends of the earth, and all nations shall serve and obey him, for the wicked shall have perished out of the earth."

We believe in all principles of truth that have been revealed; in all that is now being revealed, and are prepared to receive all that God will reveal.

We believe that the gospel now being preached by the Latter Day Saints is to call the honest in heart out of Babylon, "that they partake not of her sins, nor receive of her plagues."

We believe in morality, chastity, purity, virtue, and honesty; and wish to promote the happiness of our fellow men.

Bien-aimés frères, je désire, en commencant cette publication, vous adresser quelques paroles. Le Seigneur, dans sa bonté et sa miséricorde, a jugé convenable de restaurer au monde l'Evangile primitif, dans toute la simplicité, la beauté et la pureté qu'il avait autrefois, parmi les chrétiens des premiers temps, aux jours de Jésus et de ses Apôtres.

La lumière de la vérité a éclaté au milieu des ténèbres et de la corruption des hommes, en ce temps où le monde est déchiré par mille opinions contradictoires.
